The sense of sin—of sin as distinguished from sins, perhaps—conviction of sin, as it used to be called, has almost entirely disappeared. The candidates for admission to the churches have had little or no sense of being lost sinners. The experiences which in the past were deemed necessary to make the ideal saint of the Sunday-school library, if not even a low grade Christian, are no longer necessary. The experiences through which the sinner in former times passed in order to be fit to knock at the door of the church, were written out for him to present to the church as evidence of his fitness for admission, and were often written by one who, from much practice in the business, had become an expert in composing experiences.

It is not necessary to comment on the tone of this, nor upon the direct charge of hypocrisy which is applied both to ministers and to repentant sinners. It is true that many are brought to Christ in infancy, and do not suffer the throes which the demon of sin inflicts when Christ casts him out. But to say that ministers coached pretended penitents and put lies in their mouths, is an awful charge to make, and we do not believe there is a shadow of foundation for making it. How could President Northrop stand on the platform of an evangelical church and tell the unbelieving world that the solemn scenes of the outpouring of God's Spirit were not even honest delusions, as some of the unbelieving world think, but craftily prepared deceptions—without even the poor apology of honesty to shield them from contempt and scorn? We protest for the honor of Christ and of his church that this fearful charge is as baseless as an evil dream. We have been through many such scenes; our ministers and the evangelical ministers of the Congregational, Methodist, Baptist, and other churches have been through those blessed scenes and experiences, and we doubt not they will rise up as one man and protest against such a charge against evangelical religion. And for proof to the unbelieving world, we say that if thus the sinner of former times—a generation ago—came unto the church, the morality of the church would at once have sunk far below the average morality of the world—which they know is the reverse of the facts as they existed and still exist.

This silent revolution to Universalism, President

Northrop says, came by the concurrence of the pulpit and the pews.

Pastors in their inner consciousness know it to be so. The people in the pews know it to be so. It is not necessary for the pulpit to tell the pews anything about it. Both have been swept away by this quiet movement. The relation of pulpit and pew to each other is practically unchanged, but both have gone from their former anchorage and are slowly drifting. They will land together ultimately, but exactly where no one can tell.

We look in vain for any word of regret in this address. He says, "We shall not return to the methods of former times. We shall not by any forced movement return to the thought of former times."

But this is not silent revolution, it is silent decay. It is not drift, it is death. The sun shines, the wind blows, the rains fall. Because the trunks of the fire-smitten forest lift no leaves to the life-giving elements is no evidence that the sun and air and rain are no more. The truth of God is as lovely and as terrible as it was at Pentecost. Sin is as deadly and dreadful as it was when the Son of God gave his life to save men from it. The judgment to come is as fearful as it was when Felix quaked when Paul pointed him to it. Has the insensate condition of the pulpit and the pew, as described to us, revolutionized these eternal verities? As much as, and no more than, the dead forest has extinguished the sun and dried up the fountains of the skies.

This death and decay of evangelical religion begins always and everywhere at the same point—the denial or modification of the doctrine of the atonement. This carries every precious and every awful truth of the gospel with it—and is not arrested. There Unitarianism began—and ended in rationalism and atheism. There the Swiss and German churches began to decay—and thus they ended. The semi-Universalism (a more accurate description would be semi-Unitarianism) began by practical or positive denial that Jesus Christ bore our sins in his own body on the tree. Necessarily following this comes a positive or practical denial that sin is hateful to God. No truth reveals sin and its consequences in a magnitude so awful as the truth that the Son of God left his throne of infinite glory and joy to bear the, to us, unbearable burden on the bloody cross. Deny that, or modify it, or hide it, and sinners will lose all consciousness of the awful and fearfully destructive character of sin. They lose all appreciation of the wondrous mercy of God, and of their own depravity. President Northrop and Professor Tholuck agree in describing the result in New England and Germany—the latter with regret, the former with none. The whole system of evangelical truth falls to the ground in a man's mind when he strikes out the keystone of the vicarious atonement made by Christ, and any statement of the truths of that system in a creed or otherwise, will be deemed "unneccesary"--if not repugnant. Men do not naturally feel that they are sinners—how shall they be led to see it when the light which reveals it—the light of the cross—is taken away? And so there can be no apprehension of God's mercy, nor any of the experiences which come in the transition from spiritiitual death life. A thoroughly skeptical spirit would naturally conclude that such experiences are visionary; but it is carrying this spirit to a far extreme to say they were deliberately fictitious—that "they were written out for him."—The Interior.

IN MEMORIAM.

ACTION OF THE FACULTY AND STUDENTS OF WHEATON COLLEGE ON THE DEATH OF MRS. PRES. BLANCHARD.

Whereas, In our great affliction, the first of its kind to fall on Wheaton College, we turn reverently and submissively to the Author of all good and Giver of all blessings, thankful that he has so long continued us an unbroken band in these scenes of earthly toil and heavenly communion.

Whereas, In his mercy He has taken one from the evil to come, He has chosen one so prepared and ready to go; and,

Whereas, Words are powerless to express our sorrow for and sympathy with our beloved President and his family in this their great sorrow; be it

Resolved, That we pray that the kind Heavenly Father will so far as may be take the place made vacant in their affections, and in their moments of utter loneliness they may be conscious of the angel ministries of the departed, "for they are all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation;" and further

Resolved, That we all will seek to follow her as far as she followed Christ and thus become fitted to assume association with the departed after this life's fitful fever is over.

THE GRAND LODGE (MASONIC) OF OHIO, say the papers, has lately declared liquor selling a Masonic crime, excluding from their fellowship. The same Grand Lodge once declared belief in the Bible a Masonic requirement. Other Grand Lodges protested, and the Ohio Lodge rescinded its belief in the Bible on its altar as a Masonic principle. See Chase's Digest of Masonic Law. So the Grand Orient of France expunged the name of God from its ritual, and Irish, English and American lodges protested; but L'Oriente continues to make Masons all the same. Probably one-half the distillers, brewers and liquor-sellers in the United States are Masons. Many we know are. The Ohio Grand Lodge's anti-liquor vote is nothing but an electioneering trick and deception.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A VIEW OF AUSTRALIAN MASONRY.

236 GORE ST., FITZROY,
MELBOURNE, Sept. 29, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE: Dear Sir:—This morning I received your kind letter and Christian Cynosure (the observed of all observers), and am pleased and instructed in its contents, and have much pleasure in forwarding post office order for ten shillings (about $2.50). With regard to your kind invitation to write for your good weekly, to which I wish every success, on the subject you mention, I must beg to decline for some months to come, further than the following observations, as I am very busily engaged in composing and compositing a work which Mr. Judkins may mention to you, and in which I am heart and soul, a copy of which you may see in the course of three months or so, if Providence permits me to finish the work.

I have but little more to say in regard to Victorian Freemasonry than in the work I published in 1870. There can be no doubt that the original intention of the order was good, but, like most other institutions setting out with the same object, it has, or had, degenerated, in Melbourne, at least, from the sublime principles of its establishment to something far different. Instead of "brotherly love, relief, and truth," (although I did not want any relief,) I found Melbourne Freemasonry anything but brotherly, lovely and truthful towards myself on the part of many of the members of my "mother," and only, lodge. It professes to be "a peculiar system of morality founded in allegory and illustrated by symbols." I found it a system of feeding, rather, and worship of beers, wines and spirits, and published accordingly in a work entitled "The Privileges of Ultra Freemasonry."

There is one peculiar feature of its "morality" which I was never in love with, and the revealing of which is not in any way a violation of the oaths not to reveal any of the secrets or signs; but there are, unfortunately, minds which cannot distinguish the one from the other. The peculiar feature is this, viz., that "a Master Mason may not seduce the wife, sister or daughter of a brother Master Mason," which always gave me the idea that it is considered no sin in Freemasonry for a Master Mason to seduce the wife, sister or daughter of a Fellowcraft or of an Entered Apprentice Freemason, or of any one else. Perhaps my idea was not logical; perhaps it was a "delusion!"

Freemasonry also professes to be a "religion." But surely the "Great Architect of the Universe" can have but a very poor opinion of those professors who shut a brother in a madhouse while they believe he is quite sane and sound in mind and body, merely because he exposes the abuses only of the system on which he had written, and which he had found not at all what was represented to him ere joining—not at all found on the part of the majority of his lodge who had the power without the right to degrade Freemasonry into a reverence for persons who gave most money for refreshments (victuals and drinks), instead of upholding Freemasonry by showing respect for the vital principles which it professes. Of course such a degeneration of a system must lead any one with any mind at all to logically conclude that it leads to much excessive drinking; and although I have seen total abstainers at a Masonic banquet, and never was one myself, yet I have no doubt that many a "good drinking brother" has cursed the time when he became a Freemason.

With kind remembrance to Mr. Judkins, to whom, and yourself, I wish success in all that is good, I remain his and yours truly, C. F. ROBERTS.

ONE VOTE FOR PRINCIPLE.

GALVA, Ill., Nov. 11, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The election here in Galva passed off quietly. St. John received fifty-five votes. How many votes the Prohibition candidate for Governor received I did not learn. The only American ticket that went into the ballot-box here, so far as I know, was mine. On showing my ticket just before voting, one leading Republican remarked, "He is going to vote on principle." I wondered what the rest of them were doing. It did not make me feel badly to be charged with voting on principle. Would to God that all men would do the same thing!

The excitement about the result has run high. Night after night the depot was filled with men and boys wild with enthusiasm and excitement. Indeed, from reports, their conduct and uproar was a disgrace to a civilized people, and rather savored of barbarism. A large amount of betting on the result of the election has been indulged in. This practice I deplore and detest, and set my face and voice against all I can.

There has been a very bitter feeling manifested by the Republicans against the Prohibitionists. It was threatened to burn St. John in effigy, and some wish they could help hang those who voted for him. The feeling is very strong and bitter, so much so that if a riot or mob should get started in our usually peaceable town, it might not be well for some who had mind and principle enough of their own to vote for Prohibition. I have been cautioned to keep still or I might get hurt. It really begins to look as if free speech and free ballot were coming into disrepute with certain classes of men hereabout. No doubt they would do away with both if it would further their selfish ends and keep them feeding at the public crib.

This Prohibition vote has stirred up matters from pretty deep down, and I am glad of it—yes, thankful. I think I can see quite clearly, since election, in the manifestations of excitement and controversy over matters, the plot or compact between the two old parties to seat and fasten whiskey upon this people forever. This, it seems to me, was the intention; and if they can, in some measure succeed, how long will it be before laws are enacted that will bind men and women under the liquor traffic as the "black laws" and fugitive slave laws formerly bound them under the slave traffic? And then to help them on and out in this fiendish work, this oath-bound secretism comes to their aid, and is no doubt an excellent "handmaid" to help unprincipled and designing men to carry onn their dreadful work of destruction through the product of the still. I am persuaded that Masonry is a much better "handmaid" to evil than to Christianity.

I love the bold and uncompromising spirit and tone of Cynosure, with its powerful arguments and appeals against this terrible evil. Oh, that men would heed its warnings and free themselves of this yoke of anti-Christ! I cannot see how any man can wear the yoke of Christ and the lodge yoke, too. I am so thankful to God that I was saved from getting the lodge yoke upon me. Praise the Lord, I am free from these unholy and unchristian bonds! Satan and his missionaries have tried hard to get me under the yoke of at least three of these secret orders, but by the blessing and grace of God I stand free of all the organizations of men, open or secret, and have no other dependence or trust but the Lord Jesus Christ, and "belong" only to "the church of the first-born, which are written in heaven." I am well satisfied with my "church relation," and have no use for the "handmaid to religion," for my Jesus is a satisfying portion. He needs none of these "inventions" of men to help him save a soul. Glory to his name.

I am stronger for Prohibition than I was before election, and as strongly opposed to lodgery as ever in my life. May the Lord bless you and all those associated with you, in your efforts to put down the evil and build up the good. Amen. R. CANNING.

THE ST. JOHN SLANDER.

WAUKESHA, WIS., Nov. 6th.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I enclose a slip taken from the Sunday Chicago Tribune, handed me to read. Now this has been thrown in my face on two different occasions by two Masons, stating that in voting for John P. St. John I voted for a rascally and immoral man. I know the affidavit says "John St. John." They use it for Gov. St. John. Now can you, through your paper, give us any light on this subject? Whether it is false in regard to Gov. St. John, or whether it is a Masonic lie, we are entitled to know the truth. I want to know how to answer the enemies of prohibition intelligently. I have great confidence in getting at the truth through your paper. I read it with more confidence than I do any of my other papers excepting the N. Y. Witness. Yours for truth and righteousness, O. TICHENOR.

ANSWER.—For the above and other similar letters and inquiries it may be replied:

1. The circumstances of the publication of the affidavits relating to Gov. St. John's first marriage and the alleged subsequent neglect of his wife and child, and his divorce, show that these documents were poked out of the rubbish of the past and published only four or five days before election so that its denial could not be widely circulated. It was a campaign trick, which not one of the papers, so far as we know, took notice of editorially, and they dropped it immediately, without further note or comment; thus manifesting a sense of shame at such indecent business, as well as their own doubt of its being fact.

2. Gov. St. John, in an interview with a representative of the New York Times, at Batavia, N. Y., made the following complete denial of the charges, which were made only by a man and his wife who were relatives of the woman in question. He said:

"I was married in 1852, in Richland county, Illinois, and my wife and I separated two months later. She afterward applied for a divorce and alimony. My lawyers filed a cross bill, setting forth grounds that I do not care now to repeat. Afterward the matter was amicably arranged by the attorneys. The cross bill was withdrawn and a decree was entered granting her a divorce. There was nothing directly or indirectly in connection with the matter that was dishonorable on my part, or that subjected me to the condemnation of my friends and neighbors. I was only nineteen years, one month and three days old at the time of my first marriage. My first wife, shortly after getting the divorce, married again and continued, I think, to live with her husband until ten or fifteen years ago, when she died. By this marriage I became the father of a son who was born about ten and a half months after we had married. All allegations that I ever failed to do my duty as a husband, or that I neglected in any manner to care for my boy, are absolutely and maliciously false. On the contrary, I provided for my boy's education, and took him to my home, where he remained reading law with me until he was finally admitted to practice. He was shortly thereafter married, and I have at times since aided him whenever he needed it, and I procured him a position as chief clerk in the law department of the general land office in Washington at a salary of $2,000 a year, which position he now holds. My early domestic troubles have been no secret whatever, but have been the subject of campaign scandal before. One month ago to-day, upon visitation of the citizens of Richland county, Illinois, where all this occurred, I addressed a meeting of fully 3,000 of my old friends and neighbors. I also, upon their invitation, two years ago last May, delivered the address upon the occasion of the decoration of the soldier's graves at the cemetery in the town where I was married, and have, upon two or three other occasions, at the request of the people there, delivered public addresses. If I have an enemy in that county except the ones who made the affidavits published in the Tribune I do not know it. I was married to my second wife twenty-five years ago, and she has borne me three children, two of whom are alive and grown. My domestic relations have been always pleasant, and my dear wife a source of strength to me at all times. This whole matter is simply a revival of old, worn-out campaign mud, which has been thrown time and again before, but it was reserved until the close of the campaign now, knowing, as its instigators did, that it would be too late to meet it with counter affidavits before the election. It is characteristic of the plan upon which the present republican campaign is conducted."

3. Seven prominent citizens of the same town testify to St. John's honorable character in the midst of the whole transaction.

THE FAITH SERIES.

I beg permision to call the attention of all earnest Christians to this set of books edited and published by Rev. H. L. Hastings, of the Scriptural Tract Repository, 47 Cornhill, Boston, Mass. There lately fell into my hands two of this series, "Ebenezers, or Answered Prayers," and "Pebbles, or Tales by Mrs. Hastings." I am convinced that a wide circulation of these works would greatly increase the zeal and faith of God's people. They are such books as cannot be read without awaking thought and leading men to a more simple and childlike walk with God. The price is quite reasonable being only $1,25 per volume. They can be secured at the office in Boston, or at F. H. Revell's 148 Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

I have written these few lines without mentioning the matter to anyone; even Mr. Hastings has no knowledge of my doing so, and I earnestly hope that those who have the means to spare will send for and read these works. It would also be a blessing if those who are able would secure some of them for libraries to which young people have access.

Truly and ever yours in Jesus, CHAS. A. BLANCHARD.

ELECTION MORNING BEFORE VOTING.

VOTING THREE TIMES.

Our logic is, that if by voting prohibition we give one vote to Cleveland, then for the same reason, exactly, we also give one vote to Blaine. I have now voted twice, once for each of the dominant parties, and am forever square with them. Now I have yet one vote for the young stalwart, John-Daniel Prohibition, and having voted twice, impartially, I could, if I had to, spare one vote to "throw away" on J. D. P., who is now a muscular boy of some twelve summers and is making lots of anxiety for the Dominants. They accuse him of endangering the B. and C. platforms, more especially the former. "So mote it be," provided, however, that he will grow to sufficient capacity to sustain our glorious reform principles. This prohibition lad has come into notice and demands room. Some of our citizens may think it not best to throw away food (votes) on him, but we think that so long as he "grows thereby" and begins to swing his stalwart limbs around, as though he might mean something, in the near future, we can afford to feed him on that third vote of ours. Specially so since by concession we have by two equal votes made ourselves square with Dominants. N. C.

EYES OPENING.

MARSHFIELD, MASS., Nov. 1, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have found much to encourage me lately, and, hoping that it may not come amiss, I will quote a few things which I have heard Masons say within a short time.

"I'm sick of Masonry because it excludes Jesus Christ from the lodge."

"Well, Masonry doesn't amount to much, does it?"

"No, I don't take much stock in it; its just a mere show, and nothing more."

And this from a high Mason, who was asked to subscribe toward the building of a Masonic Temple: "No sir, I intend to invest my money only where my wife can enjoy it with me."

"What, do you go back on Masonry?"

"You may call it just what ever you please."

And so I thank God and take courage; the deaf are being made to hear, and the eyes of the blind are being opened. The Cynosure is doing a good work, and after reading it and lending it to my neighbors, I send it away that it may still continue its mission.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON IX.—Nov. 30, 1884.—True Wisdom. Prov. 8; 1-17.
GOLDEN TEXT.—I love them that love me; and those that seek me early shall find me.—Prov. 8: 17.
[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The call of wisdom. Vs. 1–6. Wisdom may here mean the divine Spirit of God speaking to man in warning, instruction and entreaty. "She standeth at the tops of high places," etc. We notice first that the openness and publicity is in very strong contrast to the secrecy and intrigues practiced by the wicked. See Deut. 13: 6; 1 Sam. 23: 9; Ps. 10: 9 f. c; Ha. 3: 14 l. c. Wisdom has nothing to do with secret combinations. Like Christ, the incarnate Wisdom, she ever teaches openly. "She crieth at the gates, at the entry of the city"—in the places where the worlds work and business are carried on—a proof that the busiest and most toilsome life may be an advantage rather than a hindrance to our spiritual growth. We note secondly, that her call is to mankind in general but to the simple in paticular; i. e. to the class who feel their ignorance and need of instruction, just as Christ "came not to call the righteous"—people who thought themselves good enough already—"but sinners to repentance."

2. The nature and value of her instructions. Vs. 7-11. "My mouth shall speak truth." As the Shorter Catechism has it, "the Scriptures are the only rule of faith and practice." They have none of that admixture of error which makes so many human teachers unsafe guides to follow. "They are all plain to him that understandeth." Obedience is Wisdom's best interpreter. There is no commentary on Scripture-truth like a life lived in accordance with its precepts. "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine." "Receive my instruction and not silver." One great danger to our Republic is in the increasing homage paid to wealth. Nothing could be more disastrous to our youth than the influence of such adulation of mere material prosperity, for its tendency is always to dwarf mind and heart, and check all noble ambitions and aspirations. The old Venetian Republic fell by making mammon her god, and in John's description of the downfall of Babylon no thoughtful mind can fail to see a lesson in her complete absorption in material gain at the very moment when the fiat went forth for her destruction. It is not the amount of money in the coffers of her merchant princes that constitutes the true wealth of a nation, but her Christian homes, her godly men and women, her virtuous and intelligent youth. To license for the sake of a little revenue a traffic which is destroying these is neither prohibition nor statesmanship.

3. The power of Wisdom. Vs. 12–17. There is an old saying that "knowledge is power." This is true in a far higher sense of Wisdom. Counsel, understanding, strength—all are her's. She is the foundation of law, the basis of all true and righteous government. Wisdom promises to be found of those who seek her on one condition—that they seek her early. In the Massachusetts State Prison the age of the seven or eight hundred inmates averages less than 25 years. Of the 1,660 inmates of Sing Sing three-fourths are between the ages of 16 and 30. Youth is the time for sowing the good seed, but it is also the time when the enemy of souls is busiest. The young who refuse to seek wisdom should ponder this thought—that the devil will be sure to seek them.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

Why are the teachings of Wisdom so precious? Ps. 8:35; Ec. 7:12. How free are her instructions? Is. 55: 1. What is said of those who despise them? Ps. 8:36.

Wisdom has no secrets. She has nothing that she wishes to hide, and therefore seeks the light. Her path is entirely separate from that which is "in the twilight in the evening, in the black and dark night" (7: 9). She speaks no cabalistic mutterings to a carefully selected and secreted few. Whatever apology we may make for the secresy of any proceedings, to say the least, it has an ill look and does not commend itself to us as a sign of wisdom whose walk is ever in the open day. Says Jesus (John 18:20), I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue and in the temple whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing."

Wisdom proclaims her messages with the utmost publicity. She keeps back nothing, but declares the whole counsel of God, whether men hear or forbear. The gospel is given to you and me that we may herald it forth to others. Jesus was a diligent preacher of the truth. He went from village to village and from city to city proclaiming the advent of the kingdom. This was the main purpose of his earthly life. He said to his disciples, "Let us go into the next towns that I may preach there also, for therefore came I forth." In the synagogues, and in the temple, on the hill-side and by the sea-shore, in the house of feasting and in the house of mourning, he continued daily to fulfill his office as the prophet of the Lord. He sent forth the twelve with the command, "As ye go, preach" and afterwards the seventy with a similar command, "Say unto them, The kingdom of heaven is come nigh unto you." When he left the world his parting word was, "Go ye unto all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." So the Apostles from Pentecost onward "ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ." In the face of contrary decrees of men in authority, they were obedient to their Master at the peril of their lives. They said, "We cannot but speak the things that we have seen and heard." The ordinance of preaching is a permanent one in the Church. "It pleases God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." It is the duty of the Church in any locality to publish the glad tidings to all within her reach, to extend her operations, to widen the circle of her influence so as to include as many as possible. It is the duty of the Church at large to reach out after the unsaved masses in Christian lands, and the unsaved millions of heathenism by sending to them a living ministery and all the gospel appliances that accompany it. If we count up the missionaries in all lands, the heralds of the gospel throughout Christendom, the evangelists, the teachers in our congregational and mission Sabbath schools, we may truly say (Ps. 68 : 11), "Great is the campany of those who publish it."

Wisdom goes to men where they are. She does not sit in her own chosen seat and wait for men to come and sit at her feet. She goes to the haunts of men, carrying to them the saving message. Jesus did not found a school in Capernaum or Jerusalem and invite pupils to come to him, but "went about doing good," visiting the people in their homes, speaking to them where they congregated in crowds; now going a long distance to save a single Syrophenician woman, and again hurrying early every morning from Bethany to meet the eager multitudes in the temple courts. It is cause for lamentation if the Church has in any measure lost this spirit. I have heard of one who thought it beneath the dignity of the ministry to preach in a school house. We are assured, however, that by this time God has given him more grace and better sense. Sometimes congregations are jealous of the outreaching endeavors of pastors, unwilling to spare any part of their time. But what is he and what are they but God's appointed agency to gather in the world to Christ? But how can the indifferent, non-church-going population be gained but by going to them, carrying the gospel to their very doors? We must go out into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in. Let devoted Christian men go down into the degraded portions of our own large cities, and let devoted Christian women enter the Zenanas of India, let the leaves of the tree that is for the healing of the nations be scattered everywhere, and so let us hasten the day when the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea."—The Bible Teacher.

Wisdom sought early. The human soul in youth is not a machine of which you can polish the cogs with any kelp or brick-dust near at hand, and, having got it into working order, and good, empty, and oiled serviceableness, start your immortal locomotive at twenty-five years old or thirty, express from the Strait Gate on the Narrow Road. The whole period of youth is one essentially of formation, edification, instruction (I use the words with their weight in them), in taking of stores, establishment in vital habits, hopes and faith, There is not an hour of it but is trembling with destinies; not a moment of which, once past, the appointed work can never be done again, or the neglected work struck on the cold iron.—Ruskin.

PRACTICAL.

True wisdom begins with the fear of God; it is moral and religious.

True wisdom is the choice of the best means to the best ends.

Jesus Christ is the source of true wisdom. They that love and serve him with a perfect heart are wise for this world and for the next.

God seeks us, and invites us, and presses us to come to him.

Wisdom calls us by the Word of God, by conscience, by providence, by the Holy Spirit, by Sabbath services, by friends, by our conscious needs.

Wisdom is on the watch for the country lad, just entering the great city; let him be on the lookout for her.—B.

The wise of heart do all the good they can in all the ways they can, to all the people they can, as long as they can.

When you have the choice, prefer education to the most splendid wealth.

True spiritual wisdom is the source of the truest worldly wisdom. Not mere sharpness or selfish shredness, but divine wisdom, is the surest means of success.

Whatever wisdom there is in the world is but a shadow of the wisdom of God.

To fear retribution is not to hate sin; in most cases it is to love it with the whole heart.—Arnot.

"He always wins who sides with God."

(Ver. 17) "Lend yourselves to all out of love Him, but give yourselves to him alone."

EDUCATIONAL.

—The Interior Department at Washington reports that the average attendance of pupils at Indian schools during the last fiscal year was 3,919 at boarding, and 1,759 at day schools; a total attendance of 5,678. There are 40,000 Indian children old enough to attend school.

—In Massachusetts less than 90 per cent. of the registered pupils are found in school; more than fifty per cent. are in the lowest grades, and less than four per cent. reach the higher school. Deducting from the school attendance the loss of time due to sickness, truancy, and accident, we find that the average pupil of the public schools receives at the public charge 166 weeks of instruction, or a little more than four school years.

—Superintendent Hinsdale states that in Cleveland 68.8 per cent. of the total enrollment are in primary grades, 26.2 per cent. in grammar grades, and 4.5 per cent. in the high school; or in another way, of 108 children who enter the primary grades one graduates from the high school; of 60 who finish the primary studies, 20 complete the grammar studies; and of these 20, four take the second year in the high school, and one graduates.

—Out of a population of 25,000,000 England sends only 5,000 students to her two Universities; Scotland, with a population of 4,000,000, has 6,500 university students; and Germany, with a population of 43,000,000, has 22,500 in her various universities. The New England States, with a population of 4,110,000, send 4,000 to their various colleges and universities.—Argonaut.

—Prof. Douglass, of the Michigan State University, it is said, produces amateur cyclones at will by suspending a large copper plate by silken chords. This plate is charged heavily with electricity, which hangs down like a bag underneath, and is rendered visible by the use of arsenious acid gas, which gives it a green color. The formation is a miniature cyclone, as perfect as any started in the clouds. It is funnel-shaped and whirls around rapidly. Passing this plate over a table the cyclone snatches up copper cents, pens, pith-balls and other objects, and scatters them on all sides.

—"A school without text-books" would be a decidedly popular one among the boys and girls of this country. A writer in the current Lippincott tells of such a system of juvenile education that has been under successful experiment in Switzerland for thirty years. The children are taught entirely by object-lessons. Slates, black-boards, work-tables, blocks, bits of everything from which a new increment of knowledge can be gained, take the place of books. Much of the study is done out of doors, moving from one instructive object of nature to another, with a liberal employment of questions and explanations. It would seem altogether rash to propose such a promiscuous method of instruction as a substitute for our ordinary day-school system; but this we are prepared to believe, that "a school without text books" should be connected with every department of education, and that the teacher who makes a free use of such teaching is the one from whom the scholars get their most helpful items of knowledge, and to whom they give in the end their warmest affection. To the idea of complete abandonment of text-books we should give slow assent. Mere acquisition is not the sole object of education. The learning how to study is quite as important; and for that the text-book is indispensable.

The following items from the report of the Board of Education of New York City, stating the estimated expenses for 1884, show that in adddition to the ordinary common school work that city is supporting a nautical school, a normal college, and a workshop. Moreover, $14,500 is paid for truant officers, to enforce the compulsory education laws—a thing done in only a few cities in the State, outside of which the law has proved to be a dead letter there, as in other States having compulsory education laws. Mark another item—$155,000 for books, maps, etc., which are provided by the city and belong to the schools for the use of pupils. The Board of Education report that they need for 1884 as follows: For support Nautical School, $27,500; books, maps, etc., $155,000; rent, $30,000; fuel, $105,000; gas, $18,000; expenses of board $13,000; expenses of evening schools, $500; expenses of Normal College, $6,500; expenses of colored schools, $300; expenses of ward schools, $39,000; building fund, $32,000; trustees' clerk, $3,000; salaries of teachers, $2,510,900; janitors, $106,500; Normal College, $98,000; evening schools, $83,000; clerks, $37,000; superintendents, $34,050; compulsory education, $14,500; corporate schools, $102,000; pianos, $3,500; workshop, $2,600; sites $250,000; new buildings, $600,000; repairs, $40,000; furniture, $45,000; warming and ventilating, $60,000.

The Black Death of the Fourteenth Century, believed by some to have been Asiatic cholera, although the symptoms, as described by the historians of the day, differ widely, actually desolated the world. It is computed that 13,000,000 perished in China, and elsewhere in the East about 25,000,000 more. Germany lost nearly 1,300,000; Italy half its entire population; London alone an excess of 100,000. In Europe fully 30,000,000 must have died, and in all quarters of the globe not far from 70,000,000 of people.

A NEW PAMPHLET.

A WOMAN'S VICTORY;

OR

THE QUERY OF THE LODGEVILLE CHURCH

BY JENNIE L. HARDIE.

This simple and touching story which was lately published in the Cynosure is now ready for orders in a beautiful pamphlet. It is worth reading by every Anti-mason —and especially BY HIS WIFE. Get it and take it home to cheer the heart of your companion who may desire to do something for Christ against great evils, but is discouraged from making any public effort. PRICE, FIFTEEN CENTS. Ten for a dollar.

A Wonderful Woman,

A Wonderful Life,

AND

A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Elizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

Her book is neither fiction nor founded on fiction, but is an interesting narration of facts of a most thrilling character, as every one will find and testify who will get and read her book, now on sale at the Cynosure office, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill. Price, cloth, $1,75; half Russia, $2.25.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, HENRY L. KELLOGG, } EDITORS.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1884.

THE N. C. A. BOARD OF DIRECTORS held a harmonious, full, and vastly important meeting at the Cynosure office, Nov. 11th. The chairman, Rev. Joseph Travis, handles the Board admirably; keeps it to business, in excellent humor, and helps it by clear suggestions. Read and ponder the action of the Board given in this number. It means no such folly as that the American is to do all the politics, and the Cynosure all the religion of our cause; but that the American party is the specialty of the Washington paper; while the Cynosure, as from the first number it has done, will teach the politics which Christ taught, and support the candidates of the American party, as the Union Signal supported St. John, though itself nonpartisan.

CLEVELAND'S election is at length conceded. His administration, like that of Glick, St. John's successor in Kansas, will lean strong for temperance, if not for prohibition, to keep prohibition Democrats from deserting, as the Barn-burners deserted to the Free Soil party in 1848 and forward. The Republican party, as such, will never rally again. The South will never vote for them by that name. The party which ousts the Democrats will be a new party based on moral principle as before.

Let the National Christian Association now roll up the curtain and show the country at least fifty lecturers in the field. As there are now no national candidates in the field, nor are likely to be for some three years, let the fifty lecturers argue the general issue against the lodge, on the Bible and the Declaration of Independence; and let a great convention be held as a training school for these lecturers.

THE MEANS.—Let the National Christian Association expend its means now boldly; push out into the deep, and appeal boldly for funds to pay lecturers, and such lecturers as it will pay to employ. The editors of the Cynosure will pay one hundred dollars, cash down, when fifty lecturers are appointed, and enter on their work. Who will write to General Agent Stoddard at once on this subject before the public mind cools off.

PERSONAL.—"Pres. Blanchard was as usual the fly-wheel of the meeting. He gave two good speeches. None can bring the house down like the doctor. He can say more in a minute than others can do in ten. One almost wishes he would not waste so much of his strength with political parties and candidates."—The Blanchard, Iowa, Record.

The above is from Rev. M. A. Gault's description of the Washington, Ia., convention. We thank Mr. Gault for his kind compliments, and hope he will be pleased with the Cynosure now that the spring-flood of politics is over. Note this present number for theology without politics. Yet we must remember that almost all the first five books of the Bible, the greatest share of the prophets, nearly all of the four books of Kings, much of the Psalms and a large sprinkling of the rest of the Bible are political writing: and Mr. Gault's progenitors, the Covenanters, took Scotland out of popery without shedding one drop of popish blood (except, perhaps, Archbishop Sharpe's), by meddling "with political parties and candidates."

THE BONFIRE EXPLAINED.

W. C. Gray, of the Interior, is of Scotch Presbyterian descent, and is proud of it. Robert West of the Advance, was born of Scotch blood; received a Scottish name; was new born a Methodist; and "confirmed" a Congregationalist.

The Covenanters came up on "a sea of glass," amid "the four winds" of controversy; and though their sea, deep down, was "mingled with fire," its surface was not only "clear as glass" but cold as glaciers. They would coolly discuss church matters, on the eve of battle, in sight of an approaching enemy. They unrolled their national Covenant, containing Christ's crown rights, on a flat tomb in Gray Friar's Churchyard; knelt, opened their veins, and signed it with their blood. They were "blood earnest," and yet so cool and clear-headed that they would "throw a metaphysical broad-ax ten rods and split a hair."

On the contrary, God called the Methodists, as he answered Job, "out of the whirlwind." They have been born in campmeeting cyclones, bound to blow, and not always very certain which way. Both of these brethren retain a tinge from the complexion of their origin. The temperance war is an illustration. Gray demonstrates; West works. Gray teaches theology; West applies it.

But to this bonfire.

The Congregationalists, like the old Hebrews, after founding a nation, undertook to stem its corruptions and have been carried down stream. They wrote and signed the first majority constitution; formed the majority-governed church, township, county, State and nation. The United States is a "Yankee Nation." Congregationalism was "The Standing Order." Morally and numerically it was the first denomination. It is now the fifth or sixth, in the catalogue; but it has impregnated the land with its New Testament "independence of the local church."

There was no Presbyterian General Assembly here till one hundred years after Presbyterianism landed. It has taught sound doctrine. The article in this number, by Mr. Gray of the Interior, is transparent and translucent. It is the Westminster Confession boiled down and the sediment skimmed off; and of all human confessions that of Westminster is the best. There never was, nor is there ever likely to be, another so good an opportunity to find out and set down from the Bible, the simple plan of redemption by God through Christ, untinged by sect, and untarnished by self, as was given to the Westminster Assembly. It was called by laymen, one or two from each county in England; with six Congregationalists, four Presbyterians, and a few Episcopalians to balance each other, and enlighten the whole; while the mass of the Assembly was made up of minds freed by Luther from the pope; by Henry from the bishops; and by Cromwell from ecclesiasticism. It was a company of the freest minds on earth ever met before, then, or since. And Mr. Gray is right in calling all "departure," "new" or old, from their simple Bible statement of salvation, theological "decay and death;" solely because it is the Bible.

But Dr. N. L. Rice said, repeated, and re-repeated in his slavery debate with the Cynosure editor, that all the Presbyterian slave-holders in the South were orthodox on that creed! They were so. There was scarcely a Mormon, Universalist, or Spiritualist then South of Mason and Dixon's line. Yet many of those Presbyterians were then selling the children of their own bodies, as they sold their pigs and cattle! And in the Assembly of 1837, I heard ministers ridicule their brethren because they denounced the murderers of William Morgan and the deism or Unitarianism of the lodge. The more orthodox such men are, the better is Satan pleased. It made orthodoxy odious to see it possessed by slave-holders and Freemasons.

In 1818 the Assembly declared slave-holding to be "an atrocious violation of the most precious rights of human nature, utterly inconsistent with the law of God and the Gospel of Christ." But twenty years later, the Assembly cut off 500 anti-slavery ministers and 60,000 Presbyterian people, to get rid of Abolitionism; and, even after slavery fell, refused to vote thanks to God for the preservation of the Union and popular government! So true is it that "Faults in the life breed errors in the brain." They turned away from "the law," and their very prayers became "abomination."

Congregationalists better obeyed the law. After awhile they dropped Webster and sent Sumner to the Senate. But President Northrop (See "The Silent Revolution" on another page) says truly, "The Eastern churches have taken a step toward semi-Universalism;" and in his lecture at St. Paul, he neither condemned nor lamented this "silent revolution." But the Interior is by no means faultless in this matter; though its doctrine is sound. It seeks to make capital for Presbyterians against Congregationalists, and mistakes President Northrop, as though he had said the dry-rot of doctrine was found alone in them; whereas he said, "the Eastern churches," or "the churches" generally. Besides, for Presbyterians to rate Congregationalists for bad doctrine, is "pot calling kettle black;" only it is difficult to say which is pot and which is kettle. The leading Chicago heretic withdrew from the Presbyterians after being sustained by their votes, and the worst Congregationalist in Illinois is now a Presbyterian pastor in another State.

But what concerns the Cynosure readers is to know how this church decay is come about. What is its explanation and cure?

We know that the day of the Lord will not come "except there come a falling away first; and this is that "falling away," but it will not prevent Christ's coming, or hinder our removing the stumbling blocks and preparing his way. If President Northrop had condemned this theological "falling away" as clearly as he stated it to the Minnesota Congregational Club, he would have been entitled to thanks.

Among the immediate causes of this decay and departure from doctrinal truth are these:

1. Railroad and general Sabbath violation. See Lev. 26:34. God desolated the Jews' country because they violated the Sabbath, and said: "Then shall the land enjoy her Sabbaths as long as it lieth desolate." The fourth command, furnishing the teaching day for the other nine, is the atmosphere in which the whole Decalogue draws its breath. If the Sabbath is not kept holy, nothing is; and children cannot hallow the Sabbath while most that we eat and wear comes to us by railway through the broken law of God.

2. Doctrine decays by divorcing it from the Bible. One is amazed to see President Northrop's long speech on doctrines; and column after column of the Interior and Advance concerning it, without, so far as we recollect, one verse of Scripture quoted or explained. The whole Andover discussion is obnoxious to the same criticism. Newman Smith and his Andover upholders are condemned or justified as they conform to or conflict with the Andover "statutes," not the oracles of God; and the plea of Dr. Gulliver and Egbert Smyth, is that medieval theology needs restating. Swing is tried, not by the Bible, which the Confession of Faith declares the sole and "Supreme Judge," but by the "Book," which declares that itself is not but the Bible is the only infallible test of belief and life. (Con. c. 1., sec. 10.) Dr. Thomas is in like manner tried and condemned by the Methodist Discipline. The human conscience will not obey human authority. As the Confession itself says, It is "free from the doctrines and commandments of men."

Take the doctrine of future retribution, which these gentlemen wish to "restate," to make it less repulsive and harsh, and set down from his mouth the words of Christ which teach it: 'everlasting punishment," a worm that "dieth not," "tormented in this flame," sin that "hath never forgiveness," here or hereafter; and so through to the last we see or hear of the wicked they are in the "lake of fire and brimstone." The Word of God is quick and powerful and the only way to sustain "the Andover Statutes," is to show that they conform to it. And as to a "may-be" post-mortem probation or purgatory, and consequent prayers for the dead, if human experience has proved anything, it is, Give a sinner to-day, and he and the devil will risk to-morrow. The fact that such a thing is mentioned at Andover is surely sufficient cause of alarm; and as to how God will save infants, idiots and other inoffensive creatures, these are not the classes with which Andover or the Bible has to deal.

3. Again; licensed liquor damages doctrine in churches. Selling indulgences to sin kills all proper sense of sin; and ardent spirits in men deprives the Spirit of God of the use of his faculties. The liquor business therefore runs down religious doctrine continually.

4. But the one grand, all-pervading force which drives out truth and destroys churches and nations, is false or Christless worship. This throughout the Bible has been, and now is the criterion of human destiny. To this agree Moses and the Prophets, and indeed the whole Word of God (Deut. chapters 28–9); and history confirms what Scripture teaches. The secret, false, man-made worships of all ages have been the one great generic cause of ruin to man, personal and national. A people with none, or with false worships, ever was, is now, and ever will be a thing of brute passions, without permanent marriage, or property or truth.

Now there are, say, ten million voters in this country, one-tenth of whom, not counting Mormons and Chinese, bow to strange, Christless altars, along with Jews, Turks, pagans and deists. These, having no Mediator, have no access to God. Add to these the thousands and tens of thousands who live by saloons and other Sabbath-breaking occupations, and much more than half of the men on whom the business and hopes of society rest, are habitual, constant, open violaters of the law of God. Is it wonderful that churches deteriorate and doctrines have the dry-rot?

When Christ undertook to cleanse his church he went into his temple and drove out practices which were inconsistent with piety. If the beloved brethren, Gray and West of the Interior and Advance, will serve Christ, let them follow him (Jno. 12:20), and there will soon be no trouble about doctrines. "All truth is in order to goodness;" and "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine." Let us break up God's fallow-ground, and sow not the doctrines of God among thorns. Those two great and beautiful papers can, with God's strength, revolutionize this country; and remember, brethren, "the day of the Lord is near and hasteth greatly. Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing."

—The National Grange which keeps alive on the immense revenues accumulated from the farmers a few years ago, was holding a secret meeting in Nashville, Tenn., last week. It is well for the members that the finances of this body can be secretly managed.

THE N. C. A. BOARD MEETING.

The Directors of the National Christian Association met last week Tuesday, and held a protracted session. The business transacted was important and the conclusions were reached harmoniously.

The exchange of Publishing Fund notes for real estate by Daniel Varney was reported by the General Agent, who announced that there had been a failure to receive anything yet from the bequest of Judge Wright. A report of the Finance Committee approved the borrowing of $1,000 by the Treasurer. The committee being in doubt as to their right to audit certain bills, the Board voted that all bills seeming to them reasonable should be audited, others referred to the Board. It was voted that the story now appearing in installments in the Cynosure should be published. The following resolutions were adopted after careful consideration:

WHEREAS, It is designed to present in the brief platform of the National Christian Association a declaration of principles, on which all persons of whatever political faith or ecclesiastical connection, who believe in Christ and his atonement, can unite to expose, withstand and remove the lodge anti-Christ; and,

WHEREAS, A publishing company has been incorporated, and the American party inaugurated to oppose what we oppose, and to advocate the political principles adopted by a majority of those who wish to vote against the lodge system; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That we bid the American Publishing Company of Washington, D. C., and the American party, God speed in perfecting the organization of a political movement and pressing its claims for the suppression and extinction of lodge influence and lodge rule.

2. That distinctive party politics is not the business of the National Christian Association, but so far as an issue is made at the ballot-box, members of the Association may justly and properly follow their individual convictions of duty; but we are opposed to the recognized agents of the National Christian Association, representing the Association in party politics, and to the appropriation of funds of the Association to sustain any political party unless donated for that especial purpose.

3. That we urge upon our friends a more vigorous prosecution of this great Christian work by organizatiou, tract distribution, the employment of colporteurs, lecturers and State agents, and exhort them to diligence in circulating the Christian Cynosure, and to the almoners of God's bounty we appeal for means to enlarge and carry on this great work; and, because of the urgency of the cause and the wonderful excellency of the opportunities for enlargement at the present time, we will endeavor to put at least fifty lecturers into the field to carry out the principle of this resolution.

4. That we hereby instruct our General Agent to attend as many State meetings as possible, and co-operate with friends in securing competent lecturers and providing for their support.

5. That the next annual convention of the National Christian Association be held in Chicago in June, 1885, and that the General Agent be instructed to make all necessary arrangements for such meeting, as provided in number 4 of the By-laws of the Association.

6. That this Board urgently exhort Christians everywhere to unite with us in thanksgiving to God for what he has already wrought in this great work, and in devout prayer for his guidance and blessing upon our efforts to push on the reform in such a way as to secure the co-operation of his people in this and foreign countries.

Resolved, That we suggest to the National Committee of the American party a general convention to consist of all members of the American party and of all Prohibitionists who are opposed to nominating secretists for any office, to meet in Chicago at the time of our annual meeting in June next.

The General Agent, Treasurer and Finance Committee were authorized to act together in making the best arrangements for raising $2,000 to prosecute the work of the Association. A communication from Rev. H. H. Hinman with a bill for services was presented. The amount was allowed and it was voted to pay Bro. Hinman at the rate of $600 per year and necessary expenses if he enter the work of the Association.

—Elder J. F. Browne wishes to acknowledge the receipt of $5.00 contributed by S. I. White of Wenona, Ill —Can any reader of the Cynosure give us any authentic information respecting the so-called Ancient Order of Druids. If so, write immediately to the editors.

—Pres. J. B. Blanchard started for Kansas Monday, expecting to remain but a few days. He may go so far as Beloit in the central part of the State.

—Paster D. Simon, of the Evangelical Lutheran church, Prospect, Ohio, wishes the Cynosure God speed in its opposition to the great national evil of lodgery. He is lecturing to his congregation on secret societies and frequently consulted by brethren in the ministry upon the subject. The branch of the Lutheran church to which he belongs is more and more strengthening its outposts against the wily foe of secretism.

—Andrew Hamilton, of Knox county, Illinois, calls attention to an extravagant and false letter of Rev. Henderson Ritchie, published four days before the election in the Toledo Blade. The letter makes St. John the agent and friend of the whiskeyites while governor of Kansas, and is false on the face of it in general and special.

—James Hart writes us from Monroe, Jasper county, Iowa, describing the burning of St. John in effigy there, "gotten up by Masons and Odd-fellows in the spirit of cannibalism." He says he has certain personal knowledge that the American votes in his precinct were just double the number reported. Mr. Hart is anxious for a condensed history of mob violence to our lecturers. He wants a hundred such tracts.

—W. B. Stoddard, New York State agent, spoke in Dunkirk on the 11th inst. On Friday evening last he spoke in the Congregational church of Ellington, the home of J. B. Nessel, so well remembered in our conventions, but now gone to his God. Old Mrs. Mather yet lives in the place at a remarkable age to testify of the siezure of Morgan at the Canandaigua jail. Moses Ferrin, though in his 87th year, and Geo. Anderson, are yet working for the reform and the Cynosure in the village, and twelve subscriptions were handed Bro. Stoddard here. The next appointment was at Vermont Station. These points are in the extreme western part of the State.

TO OLD FRIENDS.

The National Christian Association Board of Directors met on the eleventh instant and spent five hours in considering and adjusting the work of our anti-secrecy reform. The results of their deliberation appear in this issue, which I doubt not will be read with interest by every friend of the cause. It is quite possible that some who are interested in our work have been confused by the intermingling of party politics with the more comprehensive work of the National Christian Association. It is not strange that such impressions should have been made, for in many instances the two have been brought into such close proximity as to have that appearance. The American party in politics and the Christian Association have such a close affinity on the lodge issue, and springing from almost the same identical origin, with but scanty means for carrying on their work, have been necessitated to join their forces and employ the same agencies in reaching the public ear and conscience, which was liable to mislead persons not familiar with details; but so far as I have knowlodge a distinction has been maintained in the official action of the Association.

It appeared to the Board that a more definite understanding was necessary to retain the confidence and secure the intelligent and hearty co-operation of our patrons, and that it was their province aud duty to at least outline the work of recognized agents and say for what purposes funds of the Association may be appropriated. The Board seemed to have the impression that friends would feel greater assurance if they saw a well-settled line of work steadily pursued, and knew whether they were asked to labor and give to sustain a political party or a Christian association, than they would if left to inference or unofficial statements. Under this conviction and after careful deliberation, aided by the mature judgment of others who participated in the discussions, they have officially and by unanimous vote defined the policy which is to govern the recognized agents of the Association and direct in the appropriation of funds contributed for its use.

It is not in the nature of things that every man's views should be fully met, but if you will candidly consider the comprehensive nature of our work, and the diversity of character, and of political and religious beliefs entertained by those who are opposed to the lodge system, I believe you will concur in this action of your Board and resolve heartily to sustain the Christian work of the National Association.

HOW WE VOTED IN '84.

COLLEGE SPRINGS, IOWA—THE MAILS AND THE BALLOTS.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I received orders for tickets from fifty-five different counties in the State. Those I filled and sent out on Thursday before election. Later orders were filled by first mail. I am receiving letters from parties asking if I received and filled their orders, complaining of having no tickets on election day. The fault was in the mails.

The Republicans here burned St. John in effigy Thurs day night. Violence has been offered in some cases to supporters of St. John. Bitterness and malice toward the Prohibitionists is rampant. We may yet be obliged to seek the protection of Louisiana. We polled 78 votes for St. John.

MANCELONA, NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Speaking of politics, this is the first year of Presidential election in the past twelve years that I have not been entirely alone in the town where I have voted, my ballot always causing comment and followed by special acts of malice and evil. There were ten this year to vote with me.

From present appearances I think the chances are good for men to prepare the old muskets once more. However the tide may turn, we can feel assured that the little party now holding the balance of power will not only be entitled to, but will receive some respect at the hands of the party in power when the next election shall come. God speed the right!

LESSONS OF THE ELECTION.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

A very close and hotly contested election has apparently resulted in the choice of Mr. Cleveland for President. It is worthy of remark:

1. That for the first time during the twenty-eight years since the Republican party was organized, the questions growing out of slavery have dropped out of the canvss. Both parties are willing to abide by the Constitutional amendments, but neither has the courage, if it had the disposition, to enforce them. For ten years the colored voters in the cotton States have, in various ways, been defrauded of their electoral rights, and the Republican party has neither done nor proposed anything for their protection. Within a year the Supreme Court has declared the Civil Rights law unconstitutional, but neither Democrats nor Republicans propose any National legislation for the protection of those rights, which, while guaranteed by the Constitution, are habitually and openly violated.

2. The only national question on which both the parties were fully agreed is in reversing the time-honored principle that this country should be the asylum of the oppressed of all nations, and that poor laborers from other lands shall be excluded. This most un-Christian decision it is not believed will be sustained by the sober second thought of the people.

3. The only question that has been discussed has been the tariff, and this has been almost exclusively by the Republicans. The two platforms affirm essentially the same principles, only Mr. Blaine is a pronounced protectionist, and Mr. Cleveland is not. The large popular majority for Mr. Cleveland, and the fact that he carried two such manufacturing States as New Jersey and Connecticut, indicates either that the people do not endorse the views of Mr. Blaine, or that they do not regard this as a vital question.

4. The combined Greenback, Anti-monopoly and labor-vote make an insignificant show and by no means fulfill the popular expectation. The vote for Butler is not half as large as that for St. John, and only a fraction of that given in 1876 and 1880. Some of the things contended for by this party will survive and re-appear, but as a party it has been remanded to obscurity.

5. The Prohibitionists hold the balance of power in the pivotal States at least, if not in the nation. This is especially true of New York, where the 25,000 votes for St. John are more than ten times the plurality for Cleveland. Had one-half these votes been given to Mr. Blaine (and they would have been, had he not dodged the Constitutional amendment in the Maine election) he would have been triumphantly elected. It reminds me of 1844, when the 15,000 votes for Birney in New York caused the defeat of Henry Clay. Then, as now, there were wrathful denunciations from the New York Tribune. But the Liberty party kept on its way, and by and by the Tribune became the powerful champion of its principles, and helped it into power. It is easy to denounce St. John now, as it was Birney then; but it is well to remember that if one generation kills the prophets, or burns them in effigy, the next will adorn their sepulchers and exalt them to honor.

6. The real cause of the defeat of the Republican party is that it has fulfilled its mission. It was slain by its disaffected supporters. Numerically as strong as ever, had it been possible to unite conflicting interests within itself, it would have easily triumphed. This had become impossible. The whisky interest and the temperance vote could not both be secured. Had the party listened to the Prohibitionists at Chicago it would have at least died nobly, and written Resurgo, on its tomb. Alas! it was doomed to perish by its blindness and folly.

7. A re-cast of parties is inevitable. The best Christian element is abandoning the Republicans. It never was with the Democrats. The questions of the hour that press to the front, and demand consideration, are like new wine, and demand new bottles. They would rend in pieces the existing parties. They cannot entertain them if they would. None of these questions have been decided in this canvass. The people have simply declared for a change of administration. And the time has now come for a reconstruction of parties to meet the questions of the hour.

A HARDENED SINNER.—There is a rumseller in Worcester county, who in the last nine years has been fined $1,950 and sentenced to pay costs of eleven prosecutions, as well as to spend fifteen months in the House of Correction. Last week he got into the Superior Court, and his sentences there aggregated $650 fines, seven more sets of costs, and six months more of imprisonment. There must be a great deal of fun or of profit in a business which involves penalties like these.—Boston Herald.

THE HOME.

THE FIRST HYMN TO CHRIST.

[From the Greek of Clement of Alexandria, by Edward P. Weston.]

Christ! of tender lambs the Leader,
Shelter of each nestling bird,
Of our young the Guide and Pleader,
Let our song to thee be heard;
While sweet praises each voice raises
To the everlasting Word.

King of saints, the all-prevailing
Message of the Father's grace,
Lord of wisdom, grief-assailing
Saviour of our mortal race;
Shepherd Jesus, guide and lead us
To thy heavenly pasture-place.

Fisher in the sea of mortals,
Whom thy grace alone can save,
Luring us from sin's dark portals,
Luring from the hostile wave;
With thy life so sweet and tender,
Save thy saints, O Christ, we crave.

Lead, O King, to life eternal,
In the footsteps thou hast trod,
In the heavenly way supernal,
Strength of those who worship God;
Fount of mercy, virtue's Author,
Lead us with thy staff and rod.

For thy lowly life of teaching,
Find thou here thy blest reward,
While the children, heavenward reaching,
Sing the praises of their Lord;
Children tender, their Defender
Praising in divine accord!

NOTE.—The hymn here translated is chaimed to be earlier than the time of Clement, in whose writings it is recorded. Many modern hymns,to Christ are richer in the graces of sacred melody; but there is much in this to interest the readers, as the earliest hymn of praise to the Divine Redeemer known to the Christian world. The translation is as nearly literal as the exigencies of English verse allow.—The Alliance.

THE DISCIPLINE OF PRAYER.

When a child at the table rudely says: "Give me" this or that, he is commanded to say "Please." Why is this? Not that his desire may be known; for it has already been expressed. Not that the one addressed may be made willing to give him what he desires; for the willingness may be supposed already to exist. But in being compelled to ask in a proper manner, he will be taught that he has no right to demand that others wait on him, and that, therefore, for what they do for him he should be thankful. And other moral lessons will thus be impressed on his mind.

Notice again, that the command to ask properly does not involve a promise that what he asks shall be given. The father may already have made up his mind that the thing desired would be injurious, and so cannot be granted. Nor does it imply that if he does not ask properly, the thing desired will not be granted. It may be something necessary for the child's health, which the father would compel him to sake if he did not want it. We cannot declare that the child's asking or not asking properly will have any effect whatever on the father's giving or not giving him what he wishes. The effect of the right asking may be merely reflex; but it is, nevertheless, an eminently reasonable thing and proper to be required as a moral discipline.

Now we do not pray in order that God be told what we desire; for he knows that already. Nor is it that he may be made willing to give us what is necessary to our happiness; for he is already willing. If it is for the furtherance of his plans that rain be sent, he will send it whether we ask for it or not; and if it be for the furtherance of his plans that rain be withheld, he will withhold it whether we ask for it or not. What will advance God's plan he will do whether we pray him to do it or not, and what will not advance his plans he will not do whether we pray him to do it or not. We cannot say of any given prayer that it will affect the course of external nature a whit. But we know that God answers prayer, and that its reflex influence is one of its benefits.

The act of prayer is a recognition of the fact that there is a God who guides the course of events; and he who prays constantly will live in constant recognition of the presence of God in Nature. Prayer being a recognition of the fact that the events of Nature are arranged by a wise and loving God, the praying man who has not received what he hoped for, who has been deprived of property or health or loved ones, will feel that, nevertheless, it is all as it should be, and in the depth of his grief he can bear a cheerful mind. The act of prayer is the assumption by a man of his proper attitude before God, and in taking that attitude he enters upon eternal life.

The text, "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth," shows that the course of outward nature will not be changed just according to our desires.

But the reflex influence of prayer is of greater benefit than any effect on outward nature could be. If a man's prayer brought him an abundant harvest, he would be but a few hundred dollars the better off. But when in the act of prayer he puts himself in the right attitude before God, recognizing the fact that it is God who sends or withholds the harvest, that he must be thankful to God if the harvest is sent, and must be submissively cheerful if the harvest is withheld, he attains a spiritual state to live in which is better than to possess all the harvests which the fields have ever borne.—The Independent.

THE ALTAR ON THE PRAIRIE.

One day a gentleman was riding on a western prairie, and lost his way. Clouds arose in the sky, and not seeing the sun, he quite lost his reckoning. Night came on, and as he knew not which way to guide his horse, he let it take its own way. It was a western horse, and was therefore likely to understand prairie life better than his rider, who was not a western man. By and by a light glimmered in the distance, and it was not long before the faithful animal stopped before a log cabin.

"Who's there?" somebody shouted from within.

"A benighted traveler," answered the gentleman. "Can you give me a night's lodging?"

"You're welcome," said the man, appearing at the door.

The gentleman was thankful enough to give up his saddle and bridle to the master of the log cabin. He found the family at supper—man, wife and children; and a place was soon made for the stranger.

Some time in the evening the man asked, "Are you a minister of the Gospel, sir?"

"No," answered the gentleman; and seeing the man disappointed, he asked why he wished to know.

"Oh, sir," answered the man, "I hoped a minister had come to help me to build a family altar. I had one once, but I lost it coming over the Alleghanies; it was a great loss."

"Perhaps I can help you to build one, though I'm not a minister," said the gentleman, who always had one himself; and after a little more talk, the man handed him an old family Bible. He read, and they sung a psalm, and all knelt. The gentleman prayed first, then the man prayed, and the wife and children said, "Amen;" for it seemed as if each wanted to have a little part in building up the family altar.

"Sir," said the man when they arose, "there's many an emigrant that loses his family altar before he gets here—and after, too; sir, it's a great loss."

Yes, many family altars are lost. Some are lost in politics, some in traveling, some in moving, some in the hurry of harvest, some at stores and shops; it is an unspeakable loss. Abraham never lost his, yet never family traveled farther and moved oftener than his. But wherever he pitched his tent he set up his family altar, and called upon the Lord, and the Lord blessed him. Children as well as parents have an interest in keeping the family altar. Don't let it be lost. If father forgets, let the children gently and respectfully remind him: "Father we have not yet thanked God for his goodness, or prayed to him for forgiveness." No father, I am sure, but will thank a child for thus helping him in his duties. It is good to sing, and praise, and pray around the family altar. "Blest be the tie that binds" a family altar. They are dearer to each other for being near to God.—Prairie Herald.

THE BIBLE PURE AND TRUE.

Some men suppose they have made a great argument against the Bible, when they say there are portions of it unfit to be read in the family or in the congregation. Men who are themselves vile, in life and in speech, pronounce the Bible a vile, obscene book. Let us classify the replies to this:

a. There is not an obscene expression in it repeated with approbation. Deeds of vileness are only recorded to be condemned.

b. It could not give a true picture of human nature if it narrated nothing vile. The men who now traduce it for obscenity, if all vileness were expunged, would censure it for giving a false view of human life.

c. It is the purest book of the age. It throws a veil over the indecencies of the times through which it has passed. It is a shame to even speak of the things done in secret by the rejecters of revelation. Horace died eight years before Christ. The school-boy who reads his poems and epistles, unexpurgated, will be the bell-sheep for obscenity in his class.

d. At the time of the translation into English, no book of poems, or plays, or anything else for the masses, was as pure in language as was the King James translation (1611). The poems of Chaucer, who died about A. D. 1400, called "a well of English undefiled," are so obscene that no one dare read a page selected at random, before a respectable audience to-day. There are books of Laurence Sterne, a clergyman, who died about 1780, that will not bear reading in public. Shakespeare, who wrote his plays while the English translators were at work, has to be carefully expurgated.

e. The Bible proposes to give the exact truth just as it was, and, of course, it will be expected that it will describe and denounce secret sins and vices, as well as public crimes.

f. No one has ever said that the study of law is a vile pursuit, or that the study of medicine involves obscenity, and yet there are laws, and treatises on medical science that no one would read before a promiscuous audience, or in the family.

g. The Word of the Lord is pure. No sacred writer makes or shows a liking for the impure. Filthiness is denounced as a crime. No writers abhor it as do they.

h. No one who reads and loves the Bible is ever impure. Obscenity is found only among its enemies. —Selected.

THINKING ABOUT THE SHEEP.—A missionary, while reading a tract to a company of people in Southern India, observed that from time to time some went into the next house for a moment, and when one returned another went. When the tract was half read, a woman, who had expressed great readiness to hear, came forward and said, "Sir, we should like to hear more but we have something to do. We have this evening killed a sheep and are just making it ready. Now our hearts are thinking about the sheep, and we cannot hearken well to what is read. Come, therefore, at another time, when we shall be able to attend with our hearts." All the others confirmed this and joined in the request. The missionary told them they might die before he came again, and then they could do no more for their souls; to which they replied, "That is true, but now we are thinking of our sheep." How like the heathen are many in Christian lands—ever "thinking of the sheep," when the word is preached!—Church Miss. Record, 1834, p. 66.

BIBLE READINGS FOR THE YOUNG.

MOSES AND CHRIST. Read Acts 7: 17–41.

The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken. Deut. 18:15.

How do we know that this prophecy refers to the Lord Jesus? Acts 3:20-23; 7:37.

What resemblance was there between Moses and Jesus during their infancy? Exod. 2:1-10; Matt. 2.

What resemblance was there between the reception given to Moses and to Jesus by those whom they came to deliver? Acts 7:22-41; John 1:11.

Name other points of resemblance? Deut. 34:10-12; Luke 24:19; Exod. 29:19; Heb. 9:15.

"CONQUERORS THROUGH HIM THAT LOVED US."

If I could tell you all that the disciples of the Lord Jesus had to suffer in the days of Paul, you would say it was a dreadful story. All manner of cruel things were done to them: they were driven from their homes; they had to hide away from the soldiers in dens and caves: they were everywhere abused and persecuted and put to death with cruel tortures. They were cold and hungry, and Paul says they were killed all the day long, and counted as only sheep for the slaughter. Was it not strange that, in spite of all this they went on just the same, telling the story of Jesus, serving him themselves, and trying to bring others to serve him. Their enemies could not even make them sorrowful, or stop their singing praises as long as they had breath. They were conquerors, because they overcame all their troubles; and even more than conquerors, because they really got good out of all these evil things. But they did not conquer because they were so strong; some of those who were so patient and joyful in trouble were only little children, and they could not walk on such a hard, rough road alone. They had One with them to help and lead them; it was the One who so loved us that he gave his life for us, and who said to his children: "Lo, I am with you always." They were conquerors because he was with them, and nothing could separate them from him, or make him stop loving and caring for them. With God on their side, it did not matter who was against them; when troubles were the hardest they heard him saying: "Fear not, I am with thee;" and even though they could not understand why such cruel things came upon them, they could trust in their Father's love. Why, they said: "He that spared not his own Son, but freely gave him up for us all, shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" We are sure of his love—nothing can separate us from that—and while we love him we know that all things shall work together for good to us. Paul did not say that he supposed all things were for the best; he says: "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God."

So we may think of all our sorrows and troubles and disappointments and pains as God's workmen, all of them working together to make us in some way better; and if Christ is always with us, we too can say of our troubles: "In all these things we are more than conquerors, through him that loved us."

A little child was once obliged to have a painful operation performed. Her father took her in his arms and explained to her that it was best, and would save her a great deal of suffering by-and-by, and prevent her from becoming a cripple. The child believed that the father knew best, and she said: "Stay right by me, papa, and hold my hand and I can bear it."

Just as the father staid close by his child, and held her hand and whispered, "Be brave, my darling; it will soon be over," so our Father watches by us every moment, and whispers, when we are in trouble- "Be patient and hold on to my hand; nothing can separate you from my love; in life I am always with you, and in death you will be only coming a little closer, where you can see me as I see you."

We may not have to meet such bitter things as the early disciples did—famine and persecution and cruel suffering—but we may be conquerors over our little troubles, through him that loved us. If we learn in his strength to be patient and loving and forgiving when others are unjust and unkind, we are conquerors; if we overcome our sins by faith and trust in his name, we are conquerors, and day by day we shall learn to know how true it is that all things which our Father sends us do really bring about our good. So that we may not only be disciples, but glad, happy disciples, praising and singing as we go: "If God be for us, who can be against us?"—Emily Huntington Miller, in the Christian Union.

"JESUS CALLED A LITTLE CHILD UNTO HIM."

"He shall gather the lambs with his arms, and shall carry them in his bosom."—Isaiah 40:11.

The baby wept;
The mother took it from the nurse's arms,
And soothed its griefs, and stilled its vain alarms,
And baby slept.

Again it weeps,
And God doth take it from the mother's arms,
From present pain, and future unknown harms,
And baby sleeps.

FAITH LIKE A CHILD'S.

A dreary day, a drizzling rain, and a chilling wind. No wonder the children hurried to their homes this day, though they sometimes loitered to chat over their beautiful lessons and lovely work.

We follow two little figures, one umbrella serving for both, as they thread the streets. Nearing a baker's shop, the elder quickly opened the door, and snatching a kiss from her playmate said, "take my umbrella and run, Katy; you can bring it back in the morning. Good bye!"

For one moment Katy lingered. Through the open door escaped odors that made her realize keenly how hungry she was, and it looked so bright in there.

A poor street—an attic room—a dull fire—and sadder than all a tired, heart-sick mother nursing a puny, fretful baby, was the too familiar picture which the little Katy saw on reaching her home.

Katy was only five years old, and hadn't done much thinking, but the contrast between her home and Allie's struck to her heart, and with a burst of tears she exclaimed, "O! mamma, why don't we have good times like Allie does; her shoes is all tight; see how wet my feet is —'sides, she has everything bu'ful. and such good dinners. Her mamma never looks hungry like you do—Oh! we're so dreffful here!"

"Don't, child! I can't bear it!" The anguished look in the young eyes almost frenzied the mother. "I'll tell you why. Allie's papa is a good, sober, hard-working man, who spends his earnings for his family, and not as your papa does in Donald's saloon." A moment later she added, speaking more to herself than the child, "Why don't the temperance folks stop the infernal business? When Christian men and women talk of high license as a help to us it makes me wild. Don't they know that drinking men will buy whisky if it's to be had anywhere? And that high license and finer saloons mean just so much cold and hunger for wretched homes like ours? Great God! what cruel blindness!" sobbing hysterically—"Donald's children are never cold or hungry!"

Katy, at first terrorized at her mother's frantic words and manner, grew suddenly calm. She knelt, and clasping her small hands said, slowly and solemnly, "Dear God! we're in ever so much trouble 'bout my papa, 'cause he goes to the saloon. I want you to make him all over nice and new, so he'll be just 'zactly like Allie's papa; but I fink you'll have to make them temp'ence womans shut up Donald's saloon 'fore you can do it. Me an' mamma'll help you all we can, and please don't forget to hurry, for we're so tiard waitin'! Bless my mamma and help her take care of my poor sick brother—that's the baby—Amen!"

All aglow the sweet face now! The mother looked bewildered. Who had taught her child to pray? Alas! that she had allowed a stranger this blessed, motherly privilege! "Katy, do you suppose God will hear such a little bit of a girl as you?" "'Course he will"—not a shade of distrust in the clear eyes, "don't cry so, mamma dear. Didn't teacher tell us to-day how the teeny sparrows couldn't ever fall down 'th'out his knowin' all 'bout it? An' you know I'm bigger'n lots o' sparrows.—Union Signal.

TIRED BIRDS.

Many of our birds fly several thousand miles every autumn, passing not only over in Florida, where they might find perpetual summer, but over the gulf and far beyond into the great summer land of the Amazon, after a short stay returning again to the North; some penetrating to the extreme shores of the arctic seas. How the small birds fly so great distances is almost incomprehensible, but I have seen many of our small feathered friends on the little Keyof Tortugas, two hundred miles or more from Cape Florida, the jumping-off place of the United States. Great flocks of them would alight on the walls of the fort, especially during storms, evidently thoroughly tired; but the next day they were up and away off over the great stretch of the gulf and the Carribean Sea.

Numbers of the English birds and many from northern Europe make yearly voyages down into the African continent; and careful observers state that they have seen the great storks so common in Germany moving along high in the air, bearing on their backs numbers of small birds that had taken free passage or were, perhaps, stealing a ride. In these wonderful migrations many birds are blown out to sea and lost, while others become so fatigued and worn out that they will alight upon boats.

A New England fisherman, who in the autumn follows his calling fourteen or fifteen miles out from shore, informed me that nearly every day he had four or five small birds as companions. They had wandered off from the shore, or were flying across the great bay on the lower coast of Maine, and had dropped down to rest. One day the same fisherman fell asleep while holding his line, and upon suddenly opening his eyes there sat a little bird on his hand, demurely cocking its head this way and that, as if wondering whether he was an old wreck or a piece of driftwood.—Ex.

TEMPERANCE.

PROHIBITION IN IOWA.

Whatever may be the condition of affairs in other parts of Iowa in connection with the enforcement of the prohibition law, there is no doubt that the law is strictly enforced in the towns and cities along the line of the Council Bluffs Division of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway. Your correspondent had occasion to visit a number of towns along this line within the past two weeks, and went there prepared to see at least a loose enforcement of the law, if not an open violation of it, in some places. But the bitterest opponents of the law in the State admit the fact that the law is well enforced, and the objection raised by anti-prohibitionists is not that prohibition does not prohibit, but that it ruins business. This complaint comes, of course, from the cities. Business men say that farmers do not come into the cities and towns to trade as they used to, because they cannot get their beer. Hotel men say they never get a traveling man to stay over Sunday now if he can reach Des Moines, or the State line. In justice to the farmers it should be said that they are as a class the stanchest supporters of the law; hence the charge that they do not come in to trade since the sale of beer was prohibited does not stick. Iowa, like every other State of the Union, has experienced "hard times" the past year, and as the business men have felt it more keenly than any other class, they are a little disposed to put the blame on the prohibition law. Traveling men, habitual drinkers—that is, men who never visit a town without either inviting some one to drink or being invited, when it can be had—told your correspondent that it was simply impossible to buy a drink of liquor of any kind in any of the interior towns or cities except in Des Moines. Frequently a man will be found at a hotel or on the cars with a bottle in his pocket, but it is liquor bought outside the State.—Inter-Ocean.

THE VALUE OF ABSTINENCE.

People accustomed to strong drink, and who call themselves moderate, when they are disturbed by any mental cause are often given to go a little over the moderate mark. They may be very temperate indeed, as they think; but when something agitates and worries them, then they take a glass of wine more, or a glass of whisky, or a little brandy. They fall back upon an agent for which the abstainer never has the desire. If the abstainer is worried or fatigued, or subjected to physical shocks, he never thinks of resorting to alcohol. If he be subjected to anything that upsets his mental balance in the sense of fear, he does not desire to take alchohol, but is saved from much of that worry and anxiety which no doubt tends largely to reduce the value of life. I happened one day to be at the Marble Arch, and my carriage was following me. The large carriage dog ran away. I caught him with difficulty, and he pulled me down with great violence against a handsome cab, and I received a scalp wound four inches long, and down to the bone. A gentleman told me that the blood was spurting from the wound, and I put my finger to the spot, and stopped it as best I could. Dr. Symes Thompson was passing, and he came up and took me home, calling on the way on Dr. Warton Hood, and they most carefully and nicely stiched up the wound. I had stopped the bleeding by my own compression. Under ordinary circumstances a man would have taken brandy, from the loss of blood. If he had done so, he would have had a little fever, foilowed by a great deal of depression, and then, perhaps, a little more brandy, after which he would have gone to bed, and been in bed a week or more, and possibly, if at all unhealthy, erysipelas would have set in, from which he might have died, and he would have gone to swell the mortality of his insurance office. In my case, I wanted nothing alcoholic; and as soon as the wound was dressed, and everything put right, and I had been made respectable looking, I recommenced my work, answered my letters, next day went to the houses of parliament to give evidence before a committee, and never changed my course of life in the least. It was simply a matter of being free from any desire to take alcoholic stimulants to meet such a shock. Total abstainers generally, subjected to a similar accident, would obtain the same advantages. Here, then, we come upon the mental influence of alcohol, and see that by taking away the risks incurred through its action, there is again a reason why there should be for abstainers a longer life.—Dr. W. B. Richardson.

THE LIQUOR LAW OF NEW HAMPSHIRE.

The Concord Monitor of a recent date gives the following condensed summary of the liquor law of New Hampshire.

"If any man will carefully read Chapter 109 of the General Laws of New Hampshire, he will see that it is impossible to frame theEnglish language into a more stringent prohibition ofthe sale of spirituous liquors than that chapter contains. A common seller is subjected to a fine of $100 and imprisonment for six months; a person who keep for sale, to a fine of $50 for first offence, and $100 for any subsequent offence, or imprisonment for ninety days; a solicitor of orders of spirituous liquors, $50 for first offence, and $100 for any subsequent offence, and imprisonment for ninety days. The delivery of liquor from any store, shop, house, vehicle, etc., a receipt of tax paid to the United States Government exhibited on premises are prima facia evidence of sale. Selectmen who neglect to prosecute are subject to $200 fine. Persons can forbid the sale to relatives, and recover from $50 to $100 for each offence. Every one who lets a building for the sale of liquor renders himself liable to a fine of $200. And, finally, any person can make complaint against any violator of the provisions of the law, and receive one half of the fines imposed for his own benefit."

If figures tell the truth, what stronger argument do we need for total abstinence than the following table prepared and publised by Mr. Nelson, a distinguished English insurance man?

A total abstainer 20 years old has the chance of living until he is 64.

A total abstainer 30 years old has the chance of living until he is 66½.

A total abstainer 40 years old has the chance of living until he is 68¾.

A moderate drinker 20 years old has a chance of living until he is 35½.

A moderate drinker 30 years old has a chance of living until he is 44¾.

A moderate drinker 40 years old has a chance of living until he is 51¾.

The New York Sun publishes an exposition of chemical wine manufactured in New York city which will not be likely to greatly enhance the sense of security on the part of the wine-drinkers against the perils of adulteration. It appears that there exists there a school for giving the needed instruction for the compounding of chemical imitation liquors of various drinks. On the wall the reporter found posted this placard: "In order to meet a long-needed necessity we have established a school, the object of which will be to instruct pupils in the art of manufacturing wines, liquors, brandies, etc., of all kinds, by chemical process, at little cost." It was admitted at this school that "wines and liquors are made up in hundreds of places in this city," and that "Rhine wines that we get from France and Germany are in the main chemical wines." The reporter asked: "What does it cost you to make a good chemical Rhine wine?" The answer was: ',We can make it for from twelve to fourteen cents a gallon, inclusive of labor. Claret can be manufactured at the same figures, and other wines and liquors proportionately low." These significant figures show, in the light of high prices at which wines and other liquors are retailed to consumers, the enormous profits realized in the liquor business.

Mr. Joseph Livesey, the Father of Teetotalism, is dead in Preston, Eng., in his ninety-first year. Sept. 1st, 1832. A little more than fifty-two years ago he drew up the first total-abstinence pledge, which was signed by six men of Preston besides himself.

DANCES AND THEATRES.

Luxurious entertainments, midnight dances and licentious spectacles, present at once temptation and opportunity to female frailty. Note.—Ovid employs two hundred lines in the research of places most favorable to love. Above all, he considers the theatre as the best adapted to collect the beauties of Rome, and to melt them into tenderness and sensuality. (Gibbon, History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. Vol. I. Chapt. 9.)

THE CHURCHES.

— In Denver one household out of every five is without a Bible.

— Moody, the evangelist, will conduct a Christian convention in Buffalo the week beginning Wednesday.

— The Sabbath school at the Moody church, Chicago, is so increasing that the officers are again obliged to furnish other quarters by the removal of walls, enlarging rooms, etc. A feature of the school is its large adult department, which comprises from 400 to 600 men and women.

—A party will go from Chicago to Detroit to attend the Moody and Sankey Christian Convention to be held Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Nov. 21, 22 and 23. Special rates of fare can be obtained through the Y. M. C. A.

—The American Missionary Association closed its year with a debt of $13,785 86, its total receipts being $287,-594, the legacies being only about half of the previous year.

—The Gustavus Adolphus Society, for forwarding home mission work, has 394 ladies' societies connected with it in Germany, which last year paid into its treasury about $26,000.

—The translation of the New Testament into the language of the Vally of Cashmere has been completed by Rev. T. R. Wade, of the missionary English Church Missionary Society.

—The Free Church of Scotland has established a new medical mission in the Holy Land; the headquarters are to be at Tiberius and it will be called the Sea of Galilee Medical Mission.

—Seven hundred out of 2,141 missionaries sent out by the Moravian Church have died at their post. One of them, D. Zeisberger, labored for 63 years with great success among the North American Indians.

— Dr. Laws, for eight years a medical missionary on Lake Nyassa, Central Africa, has completed the first draft of the translation of the New Testament into the Chinyanga and Chitonga dialects. The Gospel of Mark has been printed, and John is passing through the press in Edinburg.

— Julius Jensen and E. L. Myrland, graduates from the Scandinavian department in the Baptist Theological Seminary at Morgan Park, were lately ordained to the gospel ministry.

— The complete statistics of the Missouri Congregational churches give a total membership of 5,002; absent, 728; total additions for the year 965; benevolent contributions, $34,000.

— Dr. J. M. Sturtevant, of Grinnell, Iowa, pastor of the Congregational church of that place, has accepted his call to a Congregational church in Cleveland, Ohio. His church at Grinnell is the largest of the denomination in Iowa.

—The expenses of the Methodist General Conference, at Philadelphia, were over $50,000, of which the Methodists of this city pay $20,000, and the Philadelphia Conference $25,000. It cost $2,200 to bring the California delegation and $1,024 for the men from northern India.

—Mr. Moody, the evangelist, with Mr. Sankey, has arranged to hold a series of Christian conventions for Christian workers during the month of November. It is his plan to hold these meetings, not for evangelistic purposes, but by them to stimulate greater zeal and consecration on the part of all laborers in the Master's vineyard, and by this means lead to larger results in the salvation of souls. There are to be three sessions each day, and are not public meetings open to all, but for holders of tickets These tickets will be distributed by the pastors to such Christian workers as may apply for them.

—Rev. Geo. P. Hays, of Denver, Colorado, moderator of the late Presbytcrian General Assembly at Saratoga, N. Y., whose speech for prohibition was published in the Cynosure, has been sued hy the sheriff on a charge of slander made from his pulpit. The doctor charged the sheriff of the county with being an ally of the lawbreakers. The doctor further stated that he weighed his words well, and that if the sheriff desired to bring an action, the courts were open. The sheriff wants $10,000 damages.

— Bishop Esher, of the Evangelical Association, will leave home in two weeks for a tour around the world, to be absent about eight months. He will visit the missions of the church in Japan, remaining there about a month. From there he will go to Egypt and the Holy Land, returning by the way of Germany and Switzerland in time for the annual session of the German and Swiss conferences, over which he presides.

—The tenth annual meeting of the Woman's Christian Board of Missions, of the Disciples or Campbellite Church, and the ninth annual meeting of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society was held lately. About 170 ladies from all parts of the United States were in attendance upon the former meeting. The secretary's report shows that when the hoard was organized but five States were connected with it and there was only $1,500 in the treasury. At present twenty-three States are identified with the board, and the income for the year was $14,000. During the past twelve months the work in Jamiaca and India has progressed favorably, and much help has been given to several localities in Montana. The annual report of the Foreign Missionary Society records six new missions founded and seven missionaries added. The financial statements, shows receipts $35,249; disbursements, $25,515. The General Missionary Board of the same church also held its annual meeting in St. Louis last week.

— The Kansas Yearly Meeting of Friends, the larger body, reports a membership of 6,294, established meetings 62, ministers 92, received into membership by request during the year 458. Within their limits are 36 Friends' Bible schools, 19 union and 6 mission, with an enrollment of 2,736. Among other items, 311 public temperance meetings had been held, 6 members used intoxicating liquors, and the cost of tobacco used by the members of three quarterly meetings was $1,275 during the past year.

—It is said of Messrs. Moody and Sankey that they both show signs of wear and tear in their personal appearance. Mr. Moody has become gray, though he is as active and vigorous as ever, without any improvement in his use of the English language. His sermons are more tender, less aggressive, but full of spiritual thought and earnestness. Mr. Sankey has perceptibly lost ground. He was fleshy, but has parted with muscle and looks less able for hard work than formerly. But such men have already lived many lifetimes. The amount of work they have done has been enormous.

— Rev. William Dean arrived in New York on the 14th from China, where he has spent the past fifty years as a missionary. Dr. Dean left New York in 1834, in the employ of the American Baptist Missionary Association, and was the first agent sent out by that association to the interior of China. He has remained there and in the East Indies ever since, and intends to return to his field of labor after paying a visit to his son in this country.

— The 100th anniversary of the consecration by the prelates of the Scottish Episcopal church of Samuel Seabury, first American Episcopal Bishop, was commemorated by services at Trinity church, New York, Nov. 14. Bishop Seabury, at the time of his death, was Professor of Divinity in the General Theological Seminary. Since he was made Bishop the Episcopal church has extended its work across the continent, under the direction of sixty-four diocesan bishops, with about 3,000 clergymen, and has an estimated membership of more than 500,000.

—The First Congregational church of Washington has issued a pastoral call to Rev. Dr. C. L. Goodell, of the Pilgrim church at St. Louis. Dr. Goodell has just returned from a tour in Europe and Asia, which was prolonged almost to a fatal termination by a fever contracted in Palestine. If he accepts there will be no pagan Masonic performances like the late "Lodge of Sorrow" while he is pastor.

—Concerning the first Sabbath-school in Chicago, begun by Philo Carpenter in 1832, Rev. Jeremiah Porter addressed a letter some time ago to Hon. William Bross, which was published in the Tribune, in which he says: "It is a matter of little consequence, yet as it is pleasant to know the exact truth with regard to the beginnings of your city, now so magnificent, of which I and yourself may each say, 'Magna pars quorum fui,' with some truth, it seems right I should correct his statement concerning the first Sabbath-school. Mr. Wentworth says: 'The oldest continuous Sabbath-school is undoubtedly that of the First Baptist church.' You will find in an address of mine published in No. 14 of 'Furgus' Historical Publications', that a Sabbath-school was started in Chicago in 1832 by Mr. Philo Carpenter, that I found it in existence May 19, 1833. In that year it was held in Father Walker's log school-house, afterward in Fort Dearborn, and over Mr. Peck's store, as soon as my church was finished and dedicated, Jan. 4, 1834. This school has continued in that church from its first beginning. The Rev. A. B. Freeman, the first Baptist pastor, reached Chicago on the 18th of August, 1833. He started a Sunday-school which continues to this day, but was preceded by the earlier one nearly a year."

WRETCHED SPIRITUAL CONDITION OF GERMANY.

Professor Christlieb, of Bonn, has made some startling statements concerning religion in Germany. In Berlin he says instances occurred where there was only one church to 50,000 of the population. In New York there were 200 places of worship for the whole population; in Berlin only fifty. Out of the million inhabitants of Berlin only 20,000, or two per cent., attended Divine service; while in England the average was twenty-nine per cent. In Hamburg, out of 300.000 or 400,000, Divine service was attended only by 5,000. The rule in Germany with those who did not attend service was to work on the Sunday morning and amuse themselves in the afternoon. In certain districts of North Germany there were suicides at the rate of thirty to forty a week.

The state of things in the rural districts was also bad. The worthy classes were so hard pressed during the week and had to work at such small wages, that they thought they were bound to labor on the Lord's day in order to increase their wages. In one case, occurring in Saxony, the congregation of the church consisted of five women and one man. It was the custom on the Sunday afternoon, instead of going to church, to meet in the public house, and extracts were read to those present from Renan's "Life of Jesus," and the whole conversation ended with an abuse of the clergy.

In the middle and upper classes a conspicuous feature was the influence of false science. The causes were the overthrow of faith in the Bible as a revelation, through negative criticism, which disheartened students of theology. Students had come to him and said they had no heart any longer to study theology; and in other ways the universities had been the cradle of indifference. The majority of teachers in the "gymnasium" had probably for their highest ideal something that was pagan more than Christian. Extreme Darwinism and Pantheism contributed to the same result. In certain cases religion had been excluded from the public schools. Among further causes there was the want of family worship, and the egoism or selfishness of life, ending in despair; so that the whole result of the satiety of the German mind — the filling of the mind with mere culture—begat indifference to religion.

Among other causes were mentioned the bad example of influential people, as in disregarding the sanctity of the Lord's day, of magistrates and persons of high station; also, the hostile tone of the press, that never connected any public event with religion, and wrote in an opposite spirit.

In addition to those external causes, there were inward causes, in the church itself, e. g., the want of places of worship. In the old provinces of Germany the provision was only one for 800 of the population; in Berlin, one in 8,000—a striking contrast with other countries, like England and America.

Then there was the comparatively dead style of religious teaching and service; it was taken for granted that all were already Christians; the preaching of repentance was, to a large extent, neglected, and Christianity was resolved into education merely.— Witness.

THE

CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the Tapley, Mississippi; E. D. Bailey, District of Columbia; J. M. Scott, Ohio; Israel Hess, Indiana; S. C. Kimball, New Hampshire; S. A. Pratt, Massachusetts; P. Bacon, Connecticut; A. M. Paull, Rhode Island; G. W. Needles, Missouri; S. P. Poole, Michigan; J. N. Norris, Iowa; Robert Armstrong, New Jersey.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1884.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religious and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.

4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.

5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.

7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.

8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.

9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.

10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.

11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.

14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.

15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

POLITICAL NOTES.

—How many people threw away their votes Nov. 4th?

—Maryland gave St. John 2,840 votes; New York, 25,227; New Jersey, 4,113; Massachusetts, 10,200, (Pres. J. H. Seelye for Governor, 8,241); New Hampshire, 1,573; Iowa, 2,000, (unofficial); Kansas, 4,273; Texas, 1,348; Ohio, 11,269. Previous reports published in the Cynosure which vary from the above are unofficial.

—In 1872 James Black (National Prohibition candidate) received 5,608 votes; in 1876 Green Clay Smith received 9,522 votes, and in 1880 Neal Dow received 10,305.

—The official revision of the New York vote completed Saturday gives Cleveland a total vote of 563,103; Blaine, 561,998; St. John, 25,227; Butler, 16,875. Cleveland's plurality, 1,105. As there were over 10,000,000 votes cast the one-ten thousandth part of the whole vote decided the election.

—Rumors multiply at Albany, N. Y., touching Mr. Conkling's relations with the Democracy. It is now stated that he will be Secretary of State if Mr. Cleveland is elected, and that this will be all the recognition the Independents will secure for their aid rendered the Democratic ticket.

—A political riot occurred at Selma, Ind., Thursday night. Democrats were ratifying and insisted upon hurrahing for Jeff Davis, which angered old soldiers, and a fight began. Stones and other missiles were thrown, pistols were fired, and several persons were badly hurt. One man, a Republican, was shot in the knee. The excitement is intense, and other trouble is feared before the bad blood cools.

—Inquiry among the Chicago hatters reveals to the curious the fact that between June 15 and Aug. 30 there were sold from their establishments 63,482 white hats of various shades and descriptions. They were worn by politicians of all classes.

—At the official count at Fort Madison, Iowa, Tuesday, the Republicans entered a protest against counting the vote, claiming that the township had been illegally divided. An armed mob of Democrats entered the room where the count was progressing, and by threats compelled the Republicans to withdraw their protest. The result will be that probably Ben Hall, Democrat, will be declared elected to Congress.

—Joseph Wright, of Babylon, L. I., a Democrat, refused to permit his aged father, who is a Republican, to leave the house on election day to vote, and Joe will be arrested for intimidating a voter.

—Mr. Blaine, it is said, will proceed to Washington this week, where he and his family will spend the winter. He received the news of Governor Cleveland's plurality in New York calmly and expressed the belief that the Republican party will grow in strength, and be called back to handle the reins of government in 1888. The second volume of his "Twenty years in Congress" will probably be published next June.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE.

A Good Thing.

DR. ADAM MILLER, Chicago, Ill., says: "I have recommended Horsford's Acid Phosphate to my patients, and have received very favorable reports. It is one of the very few really valuable preparations now offered to the afflicted. In a practice of thirty-five years I have found a few good things, and this is one of them."

FREEMASONRY AND FREE GOVERNMENT.

This twelve-page pamphlet is now issued in a new and attractive style, with a neat cover. The orders for it which more than exhausted the first edition testify to its popularity.

"AMERICANS HAVE NO CONFLICTING INTERESTS RESPECTING SECRET SOCIETIES. WE SHALL HAVE BUT ONE OPINION WHEN WE UNDERSTAND THEM."

Thus opens an exposition of the relation of the Secret Empire to Civil Government, which will remain of great and permanent value to every citizen until the triumph of the American party shall have put the secret lodge system under the ban of law. SINGLE COPIES, 5 CENTS.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS,

OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by E. E. FLAGG, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. In cloth, $1; per doz., $9. Paper, 50c; per doz., $4.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness. The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

IN THE COILS;
— OR —
The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

FARM NOTES.

FOOD FOR FATTENING SWINE.

Experiments have proved that corn is not the best food for the production of pork when fed alone; but it is employed more extensively than all other grains, roots, and vegetables together. If used as a chief article in combination with other foods it is unequalled by any other cereal or vegetable that can be successfully grown over as great a range of country. Peas, barley, oats, mangels, potatoes and artichokes are undoubtedly valuable, to a certain extent, but they can never supersede corn, for reasons obvious to every intelligent farmer. We shell corn and soak it in water for twenty-four hours to soften it, because some hogs with defective teeth cannot thoroughly masticate it when hard, and consequently waste a great deal. Soaked corn contains all the fattening qualities of cooked corn, and is as digestible. Soaking costs nothing; cooking is expensive. For soaking corn it is best to use two tanks or tubs. When a cheap power can be obtained it would probably pay to coarsely grind or crack the corn; twelve hours would then be sufficient for soaking. For variety and to keep the hogs in healthy, thrifty condition, feed potatoes, mangels, peas, artichokes, oat-meal, and bran or middlings mixed to a mush with skim milk or slops; even if only in small quantities they will prove very beneficial. Aim to feed hogs for the market profitably. Intelligent observation and experiment will show how it can be done. Remember that warm, dry, well-bedded sheds are absolutely essential to profitable feeding.—American Agriculturist.

HOW TO DRIVE HOGS.

Keep your eye on the market and get all the information you can concerning the supply of hogs and pork. Take advantage of a rise and sell. Fine, smooth, even lots of hogs are always in demand, and are certain to bring the top price. Farmers living over a mile from market will find it much the best plan to erect a chute, loading their hogs into wagons and hauling them. In case they are driven, some of their bedding should be taken along in a wagon for use on bridges. Hogs will readily walk over a bridge on their old bedding. After passing over one bridge the bedding can be raked up, loaded into a wagon, and used on the next, and so on.

Sows should be bred for two years, and then fattened and sold. Begin feeding grain about September 1st, while on grass, in full flesh and thrifty condition. About four weeks before they are to be marketed, the pigs should be confined in a small, warm, dry, and well-bedded pen, and fed heavily with soaked corn, or meals mixed with skimmed milk, slops, etc., and an occasional ration of artichokes or other vegetables. Under such treatment the sows will fatten very rapidly and prove profitable.

Provided with wholesome food, pure water, and clean, dry, well-littered shed, a hog will never become diseased unless previously infected; and that the farmer must carefully guard against when procuring his change of stock. A healthy hog requires no stimulants, preventives or tonics of any kind. A diseased hog should be completely isolated from all others, or killed and burned. Lice are indications of ill-condition or unclean quarters. Kerosene applied with a swab will destroy the vermin.—American Agriculturist.

A corrospondent of the Rural New Yorker says: "I remember when I was a little girl that our cow got choked with a potato, and father hired me to run my hand and arm down Bossy's throat and pull out the potato. It was not a bit pleasant. We have a better way now. If a creature gets choked, take some cold water and a rubber syringe and squirt a stream of cold water into one of the ears. It gives the animal a surprise, and it shakes its head with a vengence, and starts the obstacle from its throat with a jerk. I have seen it tried lots of times, even after hoe-handles and broomsticks and divers other plans had been tried ineffectually, and I never knew the cold water stream to fail on cattle or horses, or even hogs.

Prof. Thomas Taylor, of the Department of Agriculture, Washington, has made a report of the series of microscopic observations recently made by him of butter, fats, and domestic fowls. The report says: It seems probable that a considerable amount of disease prevailing among American domestic fowls may be due to the presence of parasites. The suggestion is made that carbolic acid or other disinfectant be sprinkled in and about nests and on the floors o henneries to keep down these destructive iusects. Prof. Taylor furnishes the following simple test for detecting imitation butter: "Combine a few drops of sulphuric acid with a small quantity of pure butter, and the butter will assume first an opaque whitish-yellow color, and after a lapse of about ten minutes it will change to a brick-red. Oleomargarine made of beef fat, when treated in the same manner, changes at first to clear amber, and after the lapse of about twenty minutes to a deep crimson."

A Swedish comic paper states that you may know a genuine farmer in the town by the fact that in very cold weather he will take his wife's shawl off her shoulders and throw it over the horse's back, while he goes into a shop to make some purchases.—Romanbibliothek.

"SCRIP and STAFF."

BY H. M. HUGUNIN.

This new and attractive volume is now ready. It is composed of thirty-nine chapters on nearly as many topics. Neatly bound in cloth with gilt stamp. Price 60 cents.

The Chicago Evening Journal of May 3, says:

The author of this little volume, for many years a working editor of the EVENING JOURNAL, has here presented us with a variety of topics of a religious character. Among the number we note "The Evils of the Sunday Newspaper," "The Divine Sanction of Church Organizations," "The Good Work and Government of Sunday-Schools," "The Bible in our Public Schools," "Fallacies of the 'Evolution Theory,'" "Chronology—The Age of the World," and "Labor and Laborers." Mr. Hugunin writes as an independent thinker, untrammeled by denominational alignments. His style, however, is marked by the vigor of earnestness and sincerity, and with these characteristics, and with a close adherence to Bible Christianity, his book becomes a suggestive aid to evangelical workers. In discussing the topics above named, as in others, he deals consistently with questions of public interest and great importance in the reform of individual and social evils.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

IN BRIEF.

An English architect asserts that houses can be made of timber which will last longer than brick or stone. In many English towns houses of oak and plaster are in daily use that were built 500 years ago.

Of the 600,000,000 pounds of tobacco grown in this country this season 300,000,000 will be manufacturcd into chewing and smoking tobacco and snuff. The tobacco manufactories proper are about 1,000, but of cigar manufactories the number reaches more than 16,000. New York and Pennsylvania have each about 4,000, Illinois and Ohio about 1,500 each, none of the other states reaching in number as high as 1,000. These cigar manufactories made over 3,000,000,000 cigars in the fiscal year just ended, about 750,000,000 cigarettes.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, who has been selected by the managers of the New Orleans Exposition to organize the woman's department (says the Boston Transcript), held an informal meeting of women connected with the press, at her headquarters 5 park street. It was decided to have a press-room for women at the fair. Although Mrs. Howe was not invited to accept the management of the department until a late day, she is making strong efforts to secure a display of the industries open to women that will be highly creditable. The book publishers have generally responded to a request for a copy of every book written by women. Efforts will be made to secure exhibits of as many inventions as possible, and there will, of course, be specimens of fine needlework.

The following new anecdote of Horace Greeley was recently related by a present member of the editorial staff of The New York Tribune. There was but one person on the paper who could and would read his copy and she often found it easier to rewrite than to do otherwise. When she came to a word whose meaning she could not guess, when taken in connection with the remainder of the article, she would leave the word blank. Then Mr. Greeley, when he revised the proof, would fill in the place left vacant. Once the woman came to a word which she treated in the manner mentioned. Mr. Greeley filled it in, if possible, more obscurely than at first. Again the revised proof was submitted to him, and again the writing grew blinder. The next time he wrote on the margin of his proof: "This word is ——. The error is most grevious to me." By long and close scrutiny the first syllable was found to be "ae." Then by taking Worcester and looking up the "ae's" it was surmised to be aerification. This was written in his proof. Mr. Greeley wrote in response, "O. K., Gratefully. H. G."

Gen. Davis, of the British army, who was a famous insect collector, once picked up a wheel-bug in the West India Islands, and received a blow that paralyzed his arm for some time. As he shook the insect off, he noticed where it had stood on his hand six red marks, the impression of its feet. Kirby and Spence also refer to this peculiarity of the insect, and other naturalists have received shocks from certain of the luminous beetles. Capt. Blakeney took up an unknown caterpillar and immediately received such a shock that his entire right side became paralyzed, and for a long time he was dangerously ill.

Vanity Fair thus explains the meaning of the old saying, "It takes nine tailors to make a man": "In the first place, it should not be tail*ors*, but nine tail*ers;* and the saying arose in this wise: In country villages in England, it used to be the custom, and is now in rare instances, when a person died at night to tell the sexton, who then tolled the bell of the village church. He first rang a short peal and then finished up with 'tailers'—three 'tailers' for a child, six 'tailers' for a woman, and nine 'tailors made a man.' Nearly all old sayings and superstitions may be traced to like simple sources. One of the most common inn or 'public house' signs in England is the goat and compasses,' with the picture of a goat astride a pair of compasses. The origin of this is, that in old days, generally the only place of refreshment for the traveler was to be found in the monasteries. Over the gate of the monastery there was the motto, 'God Encompasseth Us,' which in course of time was corrupted into 'goat and compasses.'"

COUNTRY.

—The American Woman's Suffrage Association meets in Chicago this week. Mrs. Mary B. Clay, of Kentucky, is president.

—In the Probate Court, Chicago, Judge Knickerbocker, after hearing of the subscribing witnesses, refused to probate the will of Wilbur F. Storey, late proprietor of the Times daily. The reason assigned is that the testator was not of sound mind and memory at the time of making the will.

—A joint resolution praying the government at Washington to divide the surplus in the Treasury among the States for school purposes was introduced Thursday in the Vermont Legislature.

—The charters of 721 national banks, with an aggregate capital of over $189,000,000, will expire during the year 1885. From information received by the Comptroller of the Currency it is expected a large majority of these banks will continue their existence.

—A monument to commemorate the revolutionary battles of 1778 was unveiled Thursday in the presence of 35,000 persons at Monmouth, N. J.

—The explosion of a kerosene barrel which was thrown on a bonfire on West Quincy street yesterday afternoon fatally burned six children and injured and burned several others The explosion was caused by the formation of gas in the empty kerosene barrel used to feed the flames of the bonfire. Four of the children were removed to the County Hospital and the others to their homes.

—A severe shock of earthquake was felt Wednesday night at Concord and other towns in New Hampshire. Thursday forenoon Colchester and Kingsville, Ont., were disturbed by a heavy quake, windows being broken and the people alarmed. Shocks were also felt in Northern Ohio, but they are attributed to the powder explosion near Toledo.

— Friday morning a northbound train on the Houston & Texas Central railway was wrecked at Clear Creek station, Texas, and as far as known [illegible] people were killed outright and fifteen wounded more or less seriously. Investigation by the railroad authorities reveals that the work was done by discharged employes and thieves in the vicinity who sought to wreck the freight train for the spoils.

—Ten tons of giant powder in Rummel's magazine near Toledo, O., was exploded Thursday morning by the detonation of a tub of nitro-glycerine, which had been placed near a fire to thaw. The explosion was heard at Detroit, sixty miles away, and in the immediate district it smashed windows, leveled fences and barns and tore limbs from trees. In two schools near the scene a panic occurred, many children being bruised. A spring wagon containing four persons was hurled into a ditch. An employe of the magazine was seriously burned, but will probably recover. The financial loss is placed at $10,000.

—Three robbers attempted to break into a store at Fiosa, Ind., Wednesday night, when a watchman who had been posted inside fired two loads of buckshot, killing one of the burglars almost instantly, and wounding the second severely. The third man was found dead in the woods a short distance away.

—The ship Andrew Johnson, of Thomaston, Me., was sunk in West Indian waters by a collision, seventeen of the crew being drowned.

—There is great suffering in the village of Carthage, N. Y., which was recently almost destroyed by fire. The village has a population of about 3,000, and nearly half the people are homeless. In many instances three, and even four, families occupy the houses of one. Two hundred buildings were destroyed. There has been received for relief $25,000. The people feel very grateful, but the fact remains that three times this amount is absolutely required to enable the destitute people to get through winter.

—During a Democratic celebration at Wellington, Kan., Mrs. John Schnarr was struck in the eye by a sky-rocket and instantly killed. Another rocket erroneously placed went driving into the office of the Phillips House, striking the night clerk in the mouth and coming out behind the ear. His condition is precarious. —Steps are being taken by the Canadian authorities to form an international park, which will include Niagara Falls.

—Three warehouses at Petersburg, Va, containing 1,200,000 pounds sumac, were destroyed by fire early Saturday morning.

FOREIGN.

—The Franchise bill passed its crucial and final stage in the House of Commons Monday night last week. The House was in Committee of the Whole and the question was upon the third reading and passage of the bill. On this question a division was ordered. It was known that the Government would in any event have a sufficient majority to carry the bill, but great interest attached to the vote of the Parnellites. When the division occurred every man of them walked into the Liberal lobby, and the Government repeated its triumph of last week.

—A severe shock of an earthquake, accompanied with a terrific explosive report, occurred to-night at Clitheroe, Lancashire, and about twenty-five miles from Manchester. The shock threw down horses in the streets, and caused great consternation and excitement among the inhabitants.

—The Galveston, Texas, News' Nueva Laredo special says: "Yesterday (Nov. 9) the election in the Mexican States of Coahuila and Nueva Leon came off for State and municipal officers. A riot reigned in the city of Saltillo and in the towns of Sabinos Hidalgo and Bustamente. At Saltillo five men are reported killed and fifteen or twenty wounded. A number were also killed in Santa Catarina. At Sabinos Hidalgo a battle occurred between government soldiers and citizens. District Judge Garcia was killed, while the colonel commanding the troops, together with about twenty soldiers, are reported killed. The towns are full of dead and wounded on both sides. The rioting is attributed to the attempts of the government to coerce citizens by the use of troops at the polls into support of the government candidates.

—The total number of deaths from cholera in Paris Saturday was 56. Total number of deaths in eight days, 460.

A keystone weighing five tons was set in its place 534 feet above the earth last week in the Washington monument. So great was the risk in elevating this immense mass to its place that the public was forbidden to approach the monument within any point of danger. But two prominent followers of Albert Pike got permission of the engineer, and as the stone was laid, dabbled around in the mortar with their little Masonic trowels. So that Masonry can boast that she has attended to the matter and this structure, raised to the memory of a man who died an actual seceder from the order, has had the benediction of the worshipers of Hiram.

The revival of the war on American pork in France is very possibly related to the cholera plague. The ignorant French peasantry, who rebelled against their physicians because of the rumor that the profession were employed to kill off the surplus population, can more reasonably rebel against swine meat and its scrofulous tendencies. The American press is ready with its suggestions of retaliation, and prominent among the French products that will be exchanged for swine are silks and wines. Our imports of these articles amount to about $25,000,000 each. America can spare them both and save the money which would be spent on a luxury and a vicious, demoralizing drink.

The long struggle between the British houses of Parliament has finally resulted in a practical victory for the Commons. The Franchise bill which will increase the number of voters in Great Britain by two million passed the Lower House for the second time some days ago and was received by the Lords with trembling. The bill extends the franchise to every householder irrespective of the value of his property, and is recognized by the Tories as a stromg movement toward universal suffrage. As a check to the advantage thus gained by the Liberal party, the Lords, not daring again to refuse the bill, have proposed as a compromise that there be a re-distribution or readjustment of Parliamentary districts; and under the pressure of the Gladstone majority, have agreed to pass the franchise act if such a measure shall be presented. This ensures the increase of the voting power of the people, which will be a permanent gain, while the redistribution measure cannot be so certain of its tenure. There will be long chaffering over the details of the latter, but such vexations frequently attend the adoption of a great popular measure. This victory over the Lords will possibly allay the agitation of the upper house; but when the next struggle comes it will be a weaker body than last summer.

A remark of Philip Schaff in his report to the Evangelical Alliance of the United States, meeting in New York last week, is worthy of note. Dr. Schaff was the delegate of the American branch at the International Conference lately held in Copenhagen. Coming from such a conference where Christians of all creeds were made welcome, and the general interests of the kingdom of Christ were discussed to the exclusion of restricted questions of sectional and sectarian importance only, he probably felt its spirit and was led to speak more boldly. He spoke of the good effect of the conference was marked, but he believed that one of the greatest drawbacks to the success of the Christian church to-day, was its denominational distinctions. This testimony is from a man of earnest piety, profound learning and wide acquaintance with the work and hindrances of the church throughout the world.

A question of some interest and importance to every Christian church was opened lately in the Presbyterian by this statement: "It is a fact that the seasons following Presidential elections have been the most marked as revival periods." This suggests to a correspondent of the Interior an investigation of the records of the Presbyterian General Assemblies since Jackson's day, which disproves the statement in a most discouraging way. Following the fourteen elections there have been losses following eight of them instead of gains to the churches; and while the gains are small the losses are large. It cannot, however, be positively deduced that religious declension is an effect of political campaigns, though the figures seem to imply as much. It may be only a coincidence. If it were an effect it would be an argument outweighing every other for prolonging the Presidential term to six or even eight years.

The New Orleans Exposition promises to be a good mission field for the National Christian Association. No other fair attempting an international character has ever succeeded financially; and the managers of the Cotton Exposition, located so far to one side of the great lines of travel, seem inclined to use every possible means to draw a crowd, whether legitimate or not. They are therefore proposing to ride the secret society hobby-horse for all it is worth, and draw into their show all the lodges and their friends and supporters as far as possible. This they argue in their official bulletin would cost them nothing and would increase the fame of the Exposition. Let the fair be known as a patron of the lodges; give each secret order which has wealth and influence a day of its own, named for itself with its grand parades, drills and airing of fine clothes, and we have made a fine stroke for popularity and success. The bulletin goes on to say: "In this sort of business New Orleans would be ahead of nearly any other city on the continent. It may almost claim to be the home of secret societies. There are more here than anywhere else in the world; and there is probably not an organization of this kind in existence anywhere in the world but has a branch here. 'Society' days would be a very popular institution—nearly as satisfactory as 'State' days, and that the Exposition will have these, there is, of course, no reason to entertain the slightest doubt." Such being the plan of the New Orleans fair, it seems to invite the labors of the N. C. A. as "Afric's sunny plains" have invited young men from the Guinness Training-school in London, or "Greenland's icy mountains" the hardy and self-denying Moravian.

THE LORD'S WAY TO RENOUNCE FREEMASONRY.

BY REV. ISAAC HYATT.

As there are Masons giving evidence of integrity and Christian character, I do not wish to speak uncharitably of them or their connection with the order; but simply to show that Masonic oaths are sinful, and whenever taken ought to be renounced with penitent confession to God and man.

With uplifted eyes gazing upon the glory of heaven, we often ask, "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in his holy place?" And when Jehovah sends back the answer, "He that sweareth to his own hurt and changeth not," we may justly pause and consider well our act before breaking any promise, covenant, or oath we have taken.

Let us pause before this Scripture and learn its true meaning. Does it teach that if we have sworn to do a wicked act, we must do it to enjoy the favor of God? Mark well its utterance. It does not say he that sweareth to the hurt of truth, justice, civil and religious liberty and changeth not, shall have a seat in heaven and hear the sweet music of angelic song. But it does say, he that sweareth to his own hurt and still adheres to his engagement, does a noble act for which he shall be permitted to enter the joy of the Lord and stand among the redeemed in glory.

Albert Barnes in his interpretation of this passage says:

"If the thing itself is wrong; if he has made a promise, or pledged himself to do a wicked thing, he cannot be under obligation to execute it; he should at once abandon it; but he is not at liberty to violate an agreement simply because it will be a loss to him, or because he ascertains that it will not be, as he supposed, to his advantage."

According to the sentiment of these words no one ought to keep a promise or oath that necessitates wrong doing.

Rev. J. A. Howe, D. D., professor in Bates Theological Seminary, Lewiston, Me., says:

"When men have become bound by solemn oaths to commit crime, they have no right to do it. They are under the highest obligation to break that oath and stop the progress of sin. The oath is sin, to execute it is sin, to abrogate the oath is virtue."

The late Joseph Haven, D. D., L.L. D., professor in the Theological Seminary, Chicago, Ill., and in Amherst College, says on this topic:

"Suppose, for example, I have promised to do what is in itself unlawful—to commit crime, to lie, to steal, to commit murder, or in any way to violate the laws of society or the laws of God—am I under obligation to keep such a promise? Unquestionably not. There can be no obligation on any man to do wrong. It is a contradiction of terms to say that a man ought to do what he ought not to do. In case the unlawfulness of the act contemplated was known at the time that the promise was made, then the promise itself was a guilty one, and the sooner it is broken the better. The guilt of such promises, it has been well said, lies not in the breaking, but in the making.

"In the case the unlawfulness was not known, but the thing promised was, at the time, supposed to be lawful, this supposed lawfulness was manifestly an implied condition of the promise; and a failure of the condition implies a failure of the obligation. The promise is to be taken in its plain and obvious intent; and if there was no intention to do a wrong act, no promise to do a known wrong, of course there is no obligation in the promise.

"This was the case with Herod, whose promise was to give his daughter whatever she might ask; but who in making that promise, had no thought of her asking what she did. In taking the life of John the Baptist under such circumstances, that ruler committed the crime of murder in order to avoid breaking a promise which in reality he never made; and which, if made, he had not only no obligation, but no right to keep. In like manner, a promise obtained by any misrepresentation or fraud on the part of the person receiving the promise, is not binding, when such fraud or misrepresentation is discovered, inasmuch as the condition on which the promise was made proves false."

Dr. Wayland, late President of Brown University; Dr. J. J. Butler, professor in Theological Seminary, Hillsdale, Michigan; Dr. J. Fullonton, professor in the Theological Seminary, Lewiston, Maine, with others of equal repute for learning and piety, advocate the same doctrine. Mr. Wayland says: "The duty of every one who has placed himself under any such obligation is at once to confess his fault, to declare himself free from his engagement, and endeavor to persuade others to do the same."

And certainly the teaching of these holy men is established by the Scriptures. For most assuredly they teach to render acceptable service to the Lord, we must separate ourselves from all alliances with sinful associations and break all contracts with iniquity. 2 Cor. 6: 14–18.

Moreover, they teach that to receive pardon we must repent, making such confessions as the nature of our sin demands with faith in our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

In the light of these truths let us proceed to the examination of Masonic oaths. May the Holy Spirit enlighten our minds and the love of God pervade our hearts, that we may perceive their true character, learn our duty, and receive strength to do it.

A Masonic oath is a peculiar thing. How it can rest easy on the conscience of any intelligent man, who has a conscientious regard for doing right, is a marvel. It bears the impress and cunning of Satanic strategy. Like the spider's web it holds its victim in a tight place. For he who has taken it cannot write, speak or even look against Masonry without its violation. Yea, more, it binds him to cherish the institution with a heart-felt relish.

It not only requires that the secrets of Masonry shall never be revealed, but that they shall ever be concealed, no matter how much the truth must be prevaricated and misrepresented to do it. It provides no honorable way to be relieved of its obligations, but stands over its victim with whetted sword to execute judgment for its violation by cutting his throat across, with bloody hand to tear his tongue out by the roots, and with merciless revenge to bury his body where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours.

Hence comes the real question at issue,

OUGHT A MASONIC OATH TO BE KEPT?

According to the teachings to which we have arrived, if it is just and was obtained in a lawful way, it should be. If it was obtained by representations fundamentally false, no one is bound to keep it. If one man marries another in woman's clothes, the marriage is null and void, no matter how many excellent qualities the man may have who passed himself off for a woman. The man-wife might never require the husband to do anything wrong; but the character of the deception relieves him of all obligation. So the deception practiced in obtaining a Masonic oath, however glossed over to deceive when held up in the burning light of truth relieves him who takes it, of all obligation.

Take a Masonic oath and hold it up in the clear light of truth, with what sentiment of Christianity can it be reconciled, or with what utterance of Christ does it bear any resemblance? The Bible is a book full of covenants; but where is one enjoined by our heavenly Father that bears any likeness to a Masonic oath?

Is there one that does not announce or imply mercy and forgiveness to him who breaks it, whenever he returns to God with contrition asking for pardon? Certainly there is no mercy or forgiveness in a Masonic oath. Its utterance is, "This oath must be kept or suffer death in a most cruel and revolting manner, and be buried in disgrace; and the candidate for Masonry before taking it, is assured unequivocally there is nothing in it contrary to love and mercy, or that will conflict with his duty to God, his neighbor or his country. If this is not deception, what is? Therefore, if a man does not know that this deception is to be practiced upon him, he is under no obligation to keep the oath. Hence he is free from the obligation.

And if a Masonic oath had no more objectionable feature than its unmercifulness, the law of Christ might not necessitate its renunciation, but certainly it would license the liberty to do so. But its horrid unmercifulness is not only repugnant to every noble sentiment of love, mercy and forgiveness, which are the fundamental principles of the Gospel, but its requirements are positively sinful. Hence he who has taken such an oath is not free; but is under obligation to break it with confession to God and man.

As already noticed, it requires that Masonry shall be hailed as a good thing—loved and cherished as a gift from God—which is as impossible for the Christian who understands its character and claims as it is to keep air from entering into a vacuum while an opening remains thereinto; for it is the prime educator of deception and favoritism, whose existence is so apparent in church and state; requires the concealment of wicked deeds and teaches a religion that is deistical and pagan. No marvel that the church, though surrounded by golden opportunities, is, as Rev. D. W. C. Durgin, D. D., President of Hillsdale College, expressed it at the General Conference of Free Baptists, "like a well-dressed corpse in a splendid coffin."

And when a man finds himself ensnared, tied and bound without any way of escape without breaking his oath, what shall he do? "Renounce it," says one, "and have nothing more to do with the Order." But such action breaks the first oath in Masonry, which is re-affirmed in the higher degrees, and he that offendeth in one point is guilty of all. So those who are agreed that Masonry ought to be renounced, if consistent, hold that its oaths ought not to be kept. But however good and commendable such action is, does it meet the full requirement of the Lord as revealed to us in the Bible? Where is it written that our sins shall be forgiven if we renounce them? Is not confession made a condition of our pardon? Most assuredly it is. "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." 1 John 1: 9. "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper; but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy." Prov. 28: 13.

To take a Masonic oath is a sinful act, for "all unrighteousness is sin." It may be the sin of ignorance and unbelief; but no qualifying circumstances can justify it or remove the stain of iniquity. The commandments are not conditioned upon our knowledge. Thinking that wrong is right, or that right is wrong makes no difference with the precepts of the Lord. God declares what must, and what must not be done. If we violate his law we must take the consequences. Saying that we did not know better, does not cover our transgression. For it is written, "And if a soul sin, and commit any of these things which are forbidden to be done by the commandments of the Lord, though he wist it not, yet is he guilty, and he shall bear his iniquity." Our knowledge may heighten or lessen the degree of our guilt, but can never change its character; for sin is sin; and the only way to escape its penalty is to make such confession as the nature of our transgression demands, with faith in the atoning blood of our Lord Jesus Christ. And though a Masonic oath provides no honorable way to be relieved of its obligations, the Lord does. It is the way open to all sinners. It is by the way of the cross. Oh! what gratitude should fill our hearts that there is such a way. And to walk up this highway of holiness we must confess our sins to God and to all other parties against whom they have been committed; and if anything enters into the warp and woof of society, preventing the execution of good laws, it is a Masonic oath. Hence to take it is a sin against God, society and all righteous government. Therefore it ought to be confessed publicly. For it is utterly impossible to confess, as the Scriptures teach, our sin of entering a Masonic lodge, without telling, to the best of our knowledge, what we have done. It is the Lord's appointed way to give us pardon and warn the world of the wickedness of the institution. It is probably a correct idea that the demoralizing tenets of the minor secret societies can be given without an exposure of their obligations and secrets. For evidently without an exposure of these it is as easy to show that the seeds of drunkenness are in every glass of wine. If so, those withdrawing from them are not under obligation to expose their so-called secrets. But few would ever form a correct conception of the blasphemous and horrid character of Masonic oaths, or the revolting nature of the pagan ceremonies of initiation, unless told just what they are by those in whom they have confidence. To illustrate: Mr. Jones, a retail dealer in groceries, arriving in Boston meets Mr. Perkins, a wholesale dealer in sugar, who offers to sell him a first-class grade of sugar at a great bargain, upon three conditions. First, he is always to speak favorably of his sugar. Second, he is never to reveal the price paid without written permission. Third, without such permission he is never to make known the extent of his business. Most unequivocal is the assurance of Mr. Perkins that the quality of his sugar is excellent, his manner of dealing honorable, and he presents the testimony of reliable business men to establish all he says. Such is the confidence Mr. Jones has in the integrity of Mr. Perkins, and seeing nothing objectionable in his requirements, he signs the contract, binding himself under penalty of death to keep it.

Then Mr. Perkins tells him he has an extensive trade, is selling sugar in every State in the Union and all through the Dominion of Canada, and will sell him any grade he wishes three dollars less per barrel than he can buy of any other dealer. Whereupon Mr. Jones makes a large purchase. After doing it, he begins to think, and as he thinks he grows concerned for fear something is wrong about the sugar. Such are his apprehensions of fraud that he takes a sample to a chemist for analysis. Upon examination it is found to be so largely adulterated with musty flour that it will cause disease and death whenever it is used.

Now how can Mr. Jones give any one a correct idea of Mr. Perkins' wickedness and its terrible consequences and his own sinful folly in allowing himself to be ensnared into co-partnership with him without telling just what he and Mr. Perkins have done?

So the only way for the man who has been enticed into a Masonic lodge, and wants to render acceptable service to the Lord and do to his fellow-men as he would be done by, is to tell just what he has done and what Masonry is, to the best of his ability.

(To be concluded next week.)

THE CHURCH ANTAGONIZED BY LODGERY.

BY REV. LEVI KELLY.

As this country could not exist part free and part slave, neither can it exist partly controlled by Christianity and part by lodgery. The one must destroy the other. It will not do to hope in the fulfilment of the promises concerning the triumph of the church, unless we meet the conditions. Rum is a mighty agent in the hands of the devil but secretism much more so. The one professes simply to supply the demands of a depraved taste, the other promises to prepare the subject for the very highest enjoyment of morality here, and a home in heaven, or in the upper lodge, without the help of Christ or the Holy Spirit.

As every order in the secret empire rejects the example and command, if not the very name of Christ, and builds its altars by the side of the Christian altar, it must be that the hearts engaged in this double dealing, must be on one side or the other. It is not rash to suppose that they cannot be on the side of Christ, for he demands the whole heart and service, and says, "Ye cannot serve two masters;" therefore such men are against Jesus. They must "deny him before men," in the lodge, and how can they be true to him out of the lodge, unless they can prove him to be like one of them, ready to accommodate himself to circumstances to win earthly renown?

But we have said one or the other must go. Now, there are about three millions of men paying their devotions at the altars of this anti-Christ, and many among them are men who have taken holy orders and ministers of a "better covenant;" now let me ask, what prospect but defeat lies before the Christian church? It will not do to call in the promises, or God's omnipotence, or church agency, we must look facts in the face; "like causes produce like effects." The land of the prophets and apostles is desolated by a similar type of anti-Christ, and who is wise enough to say the same thing may not be again re-enacted. Shadows cast on the dial indicate that the sun of Christian civilization is going down under a thick mist of skepticism, perhaps to arise with resplendent glory on the "Dark Continent."

While we know that many have come out of those orders, yet many more are rushing in daily, and the depleted ranks are filled with new recruits who imbibe a spirit of hate to Christ. Many of these who came out, because they were disgusted, are keeping a silent tongue, and so fulfill their obligations,—"never reveal." The heavy tramp of battalions of the dark orders are heard marching on to perdition with a light and giddy step. They stand, determined to keep the way to the lodge clear, and to blockade the way to the church; and why should they not if salvation may be had without the Cross? Who is willing to step to the front and claim that crime is not increasing, and that life is more secure than formerly? Is not iniquity abounding, and the atmosphere impregnated with the stench of an incarnate hell? At the rate of increase for the past ten years, it will be less than a generation, churches will be empty, Sabbaths destroyed, and bull-fights, theatres and beer gardens will have supplanted them.

Remember, the lodges are busy night and day. Preachers take vacations, churches are closed in hot seasons, but the lodge is open, and men on bended knees swearing to have their bodies cut to pieces in a most shocking manner, if they "knowingly or willingly violate this my solemn obligation." Every man so sworn is corrupted, and unless by a miracle of grace, will remain so as long as he lives. This nightmare remains on him, crushing out his manhood, and poisoning his very soul against the "Man of Sorrows" whose blood he rejected in that awful hour. He is to all intent and purposes indoctrinated with infidel sentiments sufficiently powerful to keep him a stranger to Christ and an heir to hell.

Please let me tell you revivals are impossible in churches with any degree of freedom, where the Holy Spirit comes in contact with these oath-bound orders. Christ goes among us in the person of the Holy Ghost, and how can he abide on grounds pre-occupied by his sworn enemy.

Chittenango, N. Y.

A COUNTRY THANKSGIVING.

Ay, good man, close the great barn door;
The mellow harvest time is o'er!
The earth has given her treasures meet
Of golden corn and hardened wheat.
You and your neighbors well have wrought,
And of the Summer's bounty caught;
Won from her smiles and from her tears
Much good, perhaps, for many years.
You come a tribute now to pay—
The bells proclaim Thanksgiving Day.
Well have you sown, well have you reaped;
And of the riches you have heaped,
You think, perhaps, that you will give
A part, that others, too, may live.
But if such argument you use,
Your niggard bounty I refuse.
No gifts you on the altar lay,
In any sense are given away.
Lo! rings from Heaven a voice abroad:
"Who helps God's poor doth lend the Lord."
What is your wealth? He'd have you know,
To have it, you must let it go.
Think you the hand by Heaven struck cold,
Will yet have power to clutch its gold?
Shrouds have no pockets, do they say?
Behold, I show you then the way:
Wait not till death shall shut the door
But send your cargoes on before.
Lo! he that giveth of his hoard
To help God's poor, doth lend the Lord.
To-day, my brethren—do not wait;
Yonder stands Dame Kelley's gate;
And would you build a mansion fair
In Heaven, send your lumber there.
Each stick that on her wood-pile lies,
May raise a dome beyond the skies;
You stop the rents within her walls,
And yonder rise your marble halls;
For every pane that stops the wind,
There shineth one with jasper lined.
Your wealth is gone, your form lies cold,
But in the city paved with gold,
Your hoard is held in hands Divine;
It bears a name that marks it thine.
Behold the bargain ye have made;
With usury the debt is paid.
No moth doth eat, no thieves do steal,
No suffering heart doth envy feel.
Ring out the words: Who of his hoard
Doth help God's poor, doth lend the Lord!
Go get your cargoes under way;
The bells ring out Thanksgiving Day!

THE SERMON.

THE GENESIS OF OUR THANKSGIVING DAY.

[Sermon by Rev. E. G. Beckwith, D. D., of the Third Congregational church, San Francisco.]

"One generation shall praise thy works to another, and shall declare thy mighty acts. They shall abundantly utter the memory of thy great goodness, and shall sing of thy righteousness." —Ps. 145: 4, 7.

The remotest type of our Thanksgiving day is the Hebrew "Feast of Ingathering." Not that it is, in any sense, a continuance of that festival. It had quite another historic origin. And yet the connection between that joyous old Jewish feast and our November festival may be closer than has been written in the books. Our fathers knew very well the story of the church in the wilderness. And when they found themselves in the wilderness, and were made glad under the good hand of God, they would remember how Israel was commanded to "offer unto God thanksgiving." And more than likely it was just that memory that suggested to them to hallow such a day of rejoicing. And this view is somewhat confirmed by the striking similarity between the old feast and the new. Both of them were in the autumn. Both were feasts of ingathering. Both were under the sanction of the civil authority. Both were sacred seasons, hallowed with public religious service. Both were signaled by a lavish display of God's bounties. Both were to be kept in token of gratitude. Both were to be seasons of great rejoicing. And the Jews made it the gladdest time of all the year. They kept it, indeed, with solemn rites of worship, and hallowed it with costliest sacrifices. But they flung around it all the cheer of feasting, and the gladness of song, and the gleam of illuminations, with the jubilance of the waving of palm branches and the blowing of silver trumpets. In this, that is, in the joy of their public services, they excelled us. And so their temple was thronged by exulting thousands, as I verily believe ours would always be, if we would bring up here our thank-offerings from flock and herd, and garden, and harvest field, and then would make our sanctuary peal and throb, and surge with the music of organ, and orchestra, and song, as the temple pealed, on its festal days, with the voices of its great choirs and the sound of the silver trumpets.

But it is the historic origin of our Thanksgiving day for which we are seeking; and we must look for that in some nearer events than the old Jewish Feast of Ingathering.

There have been occasional Thanksgiving days, no doubt, in all Christian lands, and through all the Christian centuries. There is, however, but one such occasion of which I have ever read, that can be even remotely linked with our New England festival; and that is "the great day of rejoicing on account of the relief of Leyden, solemnly appointed and observed with mingled songs and tears, October 3, 1575." "The memory of that day, says a recent writer, "was yet tender in the minds of all Protestants when the exiled Plymouth church went to Leyden in 1609." They must have heard the story of that day of gladness, over and over, during the eleven years of their sojourn in that old, heroic city.

It was a story to be told at every brave Hollander's hearthstone, from generation to generation. You remember the occasion, as the history records it. Four months, and more, the Spanish army had besieged the city. The fate of the Dutch Republic hung upon the issue. If Leyden stood, it was freedom and Protestantism. If Leyden fell, it was tyranny and Rome. So the conflict raged around the walls of the beleagured city. "So long as there is a man left," they had said, "we will contend for our liberty and our religion." But in a little while there would have been no man left; for famine and pestilence were both in the city. "Starving wretches," says Motley, "swarmed daily around the shambles where the few remaining cattle were slaughtered, contending for any morsel which might fall, and lapping eagerly the blood as it ran along the pavement. Women and children, all day long, were seen searching gutters and dunghill for morsels of food, which they disputed fiercely with the famishing dogs. The green leaves were stripped from the trees for food. The hides of the cattle were eagerly devoured. Infants starved to death on the maternal breasts. Mothers dropped dead in the streets, with their dead children in their arms." And still they would not open the gates. To some murmuring citizens the heroic old burgomaster said: "I tell you I have made an oath to hold the city, and may God give me strength to keep my oath. My life is at your disposal. Take my body to appease your hunger, but expect no surrender so long as I remain alive." Then even the murmurers took new oaths of fidelity with him, and clambering to the top of the ramparts, they hurled down defiance at the enemy. "So long as ye hear dog bark or cat mew within the walls," they said, "ye may know that the city holds out. And when all has perished but ourselves, be sure that we will each devour our left arms, retaining our right to defend our women, our liberty and our religion. And when the last hour has come, with our own hands we will set fire to the city, and perish, men, women and children together in the flames, rather than suffer our homes to be polluted and our liberties to be crushed." And it was only at the last hour that deliverance came. But it came at the last. It came on the crest of the ocean wave, driven by the winds of heaven. The Prince of Orange had cut the dykes and let the ocean in upon Holland. "Better a drowned land than a lost land," they cried, as they devoted their fertile fields to desolation. And God took the west winds, and through those opened dykes blew the great sea waves up to the very city gates; great ocean waves before which the Spanish army fled in terror, and on which the Dutch fleet swept up into the famishing city, and Leyden was delivered.

Then they kept the Thanksgiving. "A solemn procession was immediately formed," says the historian. "Magistrates and citizens, wild Zealanders, emaciated burgher guards, sailors, soldiers, women, children—nearly every living person within the walls, all repaired without delay to the great church. The starving and heroic city, which had been so strong in its resistance to an earthly king, now bent itself in humble gratitude before the King of kings. After prayers, the whole congregation joined in the thanksgiving anthem. Thousands of voices raised the song, but few were able to carry it to its conclusion; for the universal emotion, deepened by the music, became too full for utterance. The hymn was abruptly suspended while the multitude wept like children."

That was the glad thanksgiving of which our Pilgrim fathers heard from the lips of the liberty-loving burghers of Leyden. No doubt they carried the memory of it, as as we know they did its spirit, into their western exile. Before they had ever seen the western wilderness, they had learned the meaning and the fitness of public thanksgiving for divine deliverance. So I cannot help thinking we should count that story of the public prayer and song of the rescued burghers of Leyden, as one of the germinal forces in the genesis of our Thanksgiving day.

Coming now to Plymouth Rock, we find it hallowed very early, not only with the Pilgrim's prayer of faith, but also with the psalm of gratitude. "They found the Lord to be with them in all their ways," says their own historian; and to bless their outgoings and incomings, "for which," he adds, "let his holy name have the praise forever." And they gave him the praise. They had a feast of ingathering after their very first harvest. It was not so formal as it has since come to be. It was only semi-official. But it was a most natural beginning of our beautiful festival. This is how the memory of it runs —I quote from Dr. Leonard Bacon's "Genesis of the New England Churches"—

"All summer there was no want. In due time the harvest was gathered. They had 'a good increase of Indian corn'; their barley was 'indifferent good'; but their peas, that came up well and blossomed hopefully, were 'not worth the gathering.' Meanwhile, their harbor was beginning to show how successful the wild ducks had been with their broods, and 'now began to come in store of fowl' as the autumn advanced; and, besides water-fowl, there was 'great store of wild turkeys' in the woods."

So they rejoiced together, after they had gathered the fruit of their labors. Three days they kept up their rejoicing, with some festivity we know, but mingled also with prayer and song. "It is not altogether fanciful," adds the historian, "to call that three days' feast the first Thanksgiving. The New England Autumnal feast, now kept with gladness in the homes and with worship in the churches, all the way from Plymouth to the Golden State, began spontaneously when the Pilgrim remnant had harvested their first crop of Indian corn." So we may count that three days of rejoicing together, after their first summer's ingathering, another of the germinal forces in the genesis of our Thanksgiving day.

But this day that has become so dear to us did not grow into permanence at once out of those first rejoicings. Our feast of ingathering has no very definite point of departure. We do not know with certainty when it became permanent, or when it settled down to its traditional date, the last Thursday in November. But we know it had its birth and its nurture in our dear old New England. "The earliest recorded appointment of a day of public thanksgiving in America," we are told, "was by the governor of the Plymouth Colony, in the summer of 1623, two years after the three days of rejoicing over their first harvest." It was, like the Leyden thanksgiving, in token of gratitude for a divine deliverance. For six weeks there had been no rain, and the crops were perishing. Then they betook themselves to prayer for rain. A day of fasting was set apart by public authority. All day long they waited upon God in earnest pleading; and while they plead the clouds gathered, and the next morning the rain came, "distilling," says the chronicler, "in soft, sweet, moderate showers, with some intervals of fair weather, for fourteen days." And he adds, "It was hard to say whether our withered corn or our drooping affections were most revived, such was the bounty and goodness of our God." Then they turned from fasting to thanksgiving. "We thought," they wrote in their chronicles, "it would be great ingratitude if we should content ourselves with private thanksgiving; therefore, another solemn day was set apart and appointed for that end, wherein we returned glory, honor and praise, with all thankfulness, to our good God who dealt so graciously with us—whose name, for these and all other of his mercies toward his church and chosen ones, by them be blessed and praised now and evermore."

That was the first formal Thanksgiving day ever observed in this country. It was in July, 1623. It was celebrated in the fort church of the colony, and was signaled by a very long sermon from Elder Brewster. (So you see we have high authority and good warrant for the length of these services, that keep the Thanksgiving dinner waiting, while the appetite grows keen.) A very long sermon they had from Elder Brewster. I do not know what scripture he read; but remembering that it was a thanksgiving for God's blessing of the fourteen days of rain, I presume he read that beautiful sixty-fifth Psalm, that says, "Thou visitest the earth and waterest it; thou greatly enrichest it with the river of God, which is full of water. Thou preparest them corn when thou hast so provided for it. Thou waterest the ridges thereof abundantly; thou settlest the furrows thereof; thou makest it soft with showers; thou blessest the springing thereof. Thou crownest the year with thy goodness, and thy paths drop fatness. They drop upon the pastures of the wilderness; and the little hills rejoice on every side. The pastures are clothed with flocks; the valleys also are covered over with corn; they shout for joy; they also sing."

So our Thanksgiving day began in New England, hard by Plymouth Rock. But it was a movable feast as yet—not annual and not autumnal. "The colonial records show official appointments of such days in the colony of Massachusetts Bay in 1634, 1637, 1638 and 1639; and in the Plymouth colony in 1651, 1668 and 1680," at about which time it would seem, from the form of the proclamation, to have become annual and autumnal. And so we have kept the feast in New England with great regularity, and I do not know but with undeviating uniformity for more than two hundred years. It has been a distinctively New England institution, the product of the New England type of faith in an over-ruling Providence —the expression of New England's religious earnestness, and especially of its intense conviction of the reality of a divine interposition in the affairs of men.

And as the day had its birth at the New England hearthstone, so it stayed by the New England hearthstone with a peculiar clinging, as being nowhere else quite at home. It seemed as though it would never get beyond our New England hills. It was almost two centuries from that first feast of ingathering around Plymouth Rock before it went over the border into the State of New York. Occasional days of thanksgiving for special mercies the Dutch Governors of New Amsterdam had appointed. They, too, remembered Leyden, and her day of gratitude for divine deliverance. But no annual thanksgiving had the proud old Empire State ever had till New England had been going up to her harvest-feast for almost two centuries. In the year 1817 came the first annual recommendation of the day by the Governor of New York. Probably that was the first time our annual autumnal festival had ever gone beyond the borders of New England. It reached Virginia in 1855. It had gone West some years before, I do not know just how many, but it went West about as fast as New England went. It appeared here on the Golden Shore soon after gold appeared here; for the sons of the Pilgrims were among the pioneers of this sunset civilization. It was creeping slowly into the South, but very slowly, when the providence came that made it a national festival. Some of you remember it well, that first proclamation of an annual national Thanksgiving. We had had a few national Thanksgivings before. Through the war of the Revolution the Continental Congress had several times summoned the people to a day of public praise; and at the close of the war, in 1784, it ordered a general thanksgiving for peace. Washington issued two thanksgiving proclamations, in 1789 and in 1795, and Madison one upon the declaration of peace in 1815. But we had had no annual national Thanksgiving of any kind. And we had had no occasional thanksgiving of the New England kind—never a national feast of ingathering, till God put it into the heart of Abraham Lincoln—name to be loved and cherished and honored forever—to summon the whole American people to a day of gratitude. Some of you remember that proclamation well. No such proclamation was ever before written, and none such has ever since been written. It is a State paper of unrivaled beauty and fitness and force. It recounts God's mercies, his "blessings of fruitful fields and healthful skies," his gift of strength to the nation through the perils of "the camp, the siege, and the battle-field," his watchful care over our imperiled freedom, and then says, in such thrilling words as have rarely been written by any nation's ruler, "No human council hath devised, nor hath any mortal hand worked out these great things They are the precious gifts of the Most High God, who, while dealing with us in anger for our sins, has nevertheless remembered mercy. It hath seemed to me fit and proper that they should be solemnly and reverentially and gratefully acknowledged, as with one heart and voice, by the whole American people. I do, therefore, invite my fellow-citizens in every part of the United States, also those who are at sea and those who are sojourning in foreign lands, to set apart and observe the last Thursday of November next as a day of thanksgiving and prayer to our beneficent Father who dwelleth in the heavens."

And so our dear old New England feast of ingathering became the nation's festival. And it is rapidly becoming national in fact as well as in form. The sons of the Pilgrims are carrying it wherever they go, and they are going everywhere. Already they have taken it beyond the seas. Out in mid-ocean, in ever so many islands of the Pacific, the song of thanksgiving for God's goodness to this land mingles to-day with the sound of the surges of the unresting sea. In old England, to day, the wanderers from our shores are keeping festival with us. In Paris, in Berlin, in Rome, by the shores of the Bosphorus, on the heights of Lebanon, round about Mt. Zion, everywhere where the sons of New England are fretting the seas with the keels of our commerce, or enlightening the nations with the story of our freedom, or teaching the perishing the story of our Christianity, there this day is kept with song and prayer and sacred memory of the land which God has blessed. May the day hasten, God speed its coming, when in every city and village and hamlet and home of the land we love, all the people on the last Thursday of November will go saying, "Let us sing unto the Lord; * * let us come before his presence with thanksgiving, and make a joyful noise unto him with psalms."

A MORMON TRIAL.

People who wonder at the existence and steady growth of polygamy may find a reason in the recent prosecution of Elder Clawson before the Utah courts. Clawson is a Mormon bishop, and was indicted by the government for having married and cohabited with a second wife. There was no dispute whatever as to the fact of his living with the woman, and no doubt on the part of any one that a marriage ceremony had been performed. But when the prosecution tried to prove the fact of marriage, it was met by such an attempt to shield the defendant from the consequences of his act as has seldom been seen in the courts of any country. A great many witnesses were called by the government, but no Mormon could be found who would admit any knowledge of the alleged marriage, or that he had ever heard of it. Even the father of the accused swore that he knew nothing whatever of the charges, while the mother of the second wife, though freely admitting that she had visited her daughter while living with Clawson, did not know that she was married. Numerous other witnesses, intimately acquainted with the parties in all their other relations of life, proved equally ignorant. President Taylor testified that the canons of the Mormon church required polygamous marriages to be performed at the Endowment House, and admitted having conferred on a great number of persons authority to perform such marriages, but declared on oath that he was unable to recall a single name. Bishop Canon testified that he had solemnized such marriages, but could not recollect the names of any of the parties, and had kept no record of them. In brief, apart from the unguarded admission of his polygamy to an outsider by Clawson, and that of his second wife, forced by imprisonment, the prosecution, taking the testimony of Mormon witnesses, had not the shadow of a case. Indeed, the trial proves conclusively that where polygamy is concerned falsehood and perjury are lost sight of in the intense desire to protect the church and her customs. Although the fact is notorious and avowed that polygamous marriages are of daily occurrence, the proof is so hedged in by trickery, pretended ignorance and downright perjury that conviction is an exceedingly difficult, if not wholly impossible, matter. Justice seems unable to cope with Mormonism with her present legal panoply, and utterly repugnant to the moral sense of the community as polygamy is there is apparently no way under our laws by which the spread of its infamous doctrines and practices can be restrained.—The Interior.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS:

OR

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR.

BY E. E. FLAGG, AUTHOR OF "HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

CHAPTER V.

The Opinions of a W. C. T. U.

Nelson Newhall in his vigils by his brother's bedside had found plenty of time to think, and the result of his thinking was to deepen an already settled conviction that the temperance question was destined to take precedence of all others as a vital, living issue—one which would not much longer allow itself to be thrust out of sight by party politicians, each with their own axes to grind; certainly not after every intelligent voter could be made to realize that it was burning a hole in the nation's pockets to the tune of several hundred million every year, which neat little sum he and his brother voters must necessarily be the ones to pay in increased rates of taxation. For after all that philanthrophists can do or say we must acknowledge that one good, telling argument addressed to their pockets will go farther with the majority of men than any amount of mere abstract sentiment or reasoning.

It did not occur to him that behind this question stood another which affected it like an unknown quantity—a disturbing factor in every attempt at solution, though he was aware of certain puzzling anomalies connected with the subject. Why, in the face of a largely increased prohibition sentiment among the people, should prohibition as a political principle make such slow advances? Why were prohibition candidates nominated and prohibition tickets put in the field only for sure defeat every election day?

Tom was slowly coming back to life and consciousness. The pale, wasted face, as it lay on the pillow, seemed to open afresh the fountain of fraternal love in Nelson's heart, and he felt once more something as he remembered feeling in the old days when Tommy was his all to guard and love and cherish, and defend if need be, against the world.

The door opened, and Martin Treworthy, who had been an indefatigable nurse and watcher, entered with a bunch of hot-house grapes which he laid on the table, while he himself took a chair, remarking as he did so,

"I can read my Bible or the newspaper in one place as well as I can in another, and I thought maybe there was somebody not far off that would be glad to see you for an hour or so."

Nelson colored slightly, but did not wait for any broader hint. Only stopping to tell Mr. Treworthy about some new medicine the doctor had ordered, he put on his overcoat and was gone.

For Martin Treworthy had watched with almost paternal interest a certain small bit transacting under his eyes of the old Edenic idyl which has never been quite lost out of the world, and never will be while that Gospel lives which has glorified all true human affection by making it the type and shadow of the heavenly union between the believing soul and its risen Redeemer. Any young couple starting out in life with only their bare hands and their faith in God and each other might be very sure of his blessing, for as previously stated he had once been a lover himself, and believed thoroughly in the New Testament ideal of marriage, while he had correspondingly small patience with the low and mischievous notions on that subject which prevail so extensively in our modern days. Thus it happened, that, thanks to Martin Treworthy, the bright-faced little dressmaker to whom Nelson was engaged, received that evening a visit from her betrothed that she was not expecting. Martha Benson was a good specimen of the best class of young American women, steady and sensible—not handsome according to any of the generally accepted rules of beauty, yet of so bright and wholesome a countenance that no one could deny her the meed of comeliness. Well educated—she had taught school several terms,—well read in solid literature and deeply religious, she was a prize for any man's winning, rich or poor; and Nelson Newhall, unlike many of the masters of creation under similarly fortunate circumstances, was sufficiently aware of the fact to wonder humbly at his own good luck. Obliged to earn her own bread, she had tried a number of ways to do it, and was now working for an aunt who had a small shop in the suburbs where she carried on dressmaking.

Martha herself answered her lover's knock, and read in his face the good tidings even before he spoke.

"Tom is better! I am so glad. I have been wanting to hear all day. And you really think the danger is over?"

"All present danger," answered Nelson, as he pressed her hand and gazed into her pleased, earnest face. "But it has been a hard pull, and after all, Martha—I don't know—perhaps death would be better than life for him, poor fellow!"

"No, Nelson; don't say that," said Martha, earnestly. "Perhaps this experience will have the effect of checking his appetite for drink. I have heard of such things. Tom is not quite like others, but we must remember that it is a trial permitted by Providence that should only make us more patient with his weakness."

"That is true, Martha; and I love you all the more for thinking and feeling so. Not every woman would. But I honestly believe this cursed rum is at the bottom of all poor Tom's misfortunes, for I remember one day after father began to drink his giving him a push—it was a push, not a blow—so that he fell and struck his head so hard against the edge of the stove as to stun him for a while. Mother was very sick and knew nothing of the accident, and father was too intoxicated to realize it. So I did the best I could. I held Tommy and bathed his head and after awhile he seemed to come to all right, and I thought no more about it till he began to be strange and have fits. Even then it was a long while before I put the two things together as a cause and consequence."

"Oh, this terrible rum business! Can it never be stopped?" said Martha, sighing.

"Sometimes I feel discouraged and think it never will be. Still the local option law works well in many places and is a long step towards it. What do you say, Martha, to going on to a farm and making butter and cheese?"

"I say that it shall be the best butter and cheese made in the township," replied Martha, who saw the drift of this seemingly irrelevant question better than the reader probably does. "You know I was born and bred on a farm."

Nelson's brow cleared. Evidently her cheerful answer had removed some hidden obstacle in his pathway, but he asked, doubtfully,—"Do you really mean it, Martha? that you would be willing to go on to a farm if I could find a good one without going out of the State? In a year, if everything goes right with me, perhaps I could scrape enough money together to buy one. You see how it is, Martha; Tom would be more out of the way of temptation. 'Take care of Tommy,' was mother's last words to me as she lay dying; and if I am ever permitted to meet her in heaven I want to be able to tell her that I have taken as good care of him as I knew how."

"Of course I mean it, Nelson;" said Martha, looking up with moistened eyes. "Didn't you suppose I understood the reason the minute you asked the question?"

"Oh, Martha; you are a blessed woman. I ain't half worthy of you. But after all, perhaps if the balance was rightly struck it would be found that I owed more to Tom than he owes to me. Having him to guard and defend has been many a time like the grip of God's own hand on my soul to keep me from going to the devil as I might have done without. To be sure I had a sister, but she must be altogether grown out of my remembrance by this time."

Martha had always regretted this separation for she felt a natural desire to be acquainted with her future sister-in-law. She said nothing, however, but sitting down to her sewing machine stitched away busily.

"You seem in a hurry," remarked Nelson, after watching her for some minutes.

"Only to finish this." And she stopped the whir of her machine, and held up to his view the garment she was making. It was an infant's robe, fine and white and dainty enough for any fond mother's darling; but as she smoothed it down and looked it over critically it struck Nelson that her face was unusually pale.

"You are not well, Martha," he said in alarm. "Or has something happened to trouble you? You look about sick. Do put away your work for to-night."

"I am well, Nelson—only heartsick. Do you know what it is I am making?"

"Nothing more than a baby's dress, is it?" inquired Nelson, wonderingly.

"It is a baby's shroud—another innocent victim to the Moloch of Rum. I am making the last garment it will ever wear, for a child deliberately burned to death by its drunken mother—here in this nineteenth century, in civilized and Christianized America! Why, would it have been any worse off—poor thing—if it had been born in Old Testament times when mothers threw their infants into the heated arms of an idol god?"

"Shocking!" exclaimed Nelson. "Do you mean Mrs. McLean's child? I heard it had got dreadfully burned and I knew she was a drinking woman, but still I supposed it was all an accident."

"No; it was the deliberate, fiendish act of a brain crazed with bad liquor. The reason I happen to be making its burial robe is because Aunt used to work in an undertaker's establishment and she had some nice fine remnants laid by that were just the thing. The poor little creature breathed its last in my arms. Oh, Nelson! it seems so awful, so terrible! will this curse never cease? Must the cry of innocent blood forever go up in vain? O, if I had but the power to make every voter in the land hear that murdered babe's dying cries as I heard them! They ring in my ears now."

And Martha clasped her hands over her face in a convulsive shudder.

"It is awful, but what can we do? Both our great political parties are controlled by the saloon power. They will dodge and shirk the question, but they won't touch it with a pair of tongs. And as to the Prohibition party, it lacks something—union or zeal, or both, or it would certainly accomplish more. Now last year, when there was so much temperance talk done, why were nearly all the votes cast for the old parties? And this year it will be the same. Temperance men will support our anti-prohibition candidates for fear of giving away their vote to the other side."

NORTHERN KU-KLUX.

From the many accounts of the outbreaking rage of so-called Republicans toward those who voted for St. John, a few selections are due the Cynosure readers. A few letters have been received at this office, but they are from persons who would have complained in any case, had the American party changed candidates or not.

The first letter is from J. W. Haggard, of Bloomington, Ill., to the Lever, which reports a piece of mean villainy perpetrated upon the property of H. W. Whitcomb, a refined and intelligent Christian gentleman, a frequent contributor to the Cynosure, and an earnest supporter of Elder Browne during the series of meetings he held in McLean county, Ill.:

"When I returned home from your city last week, I found that some vandal hand had cut down and carried off my St. John and Daniel portraits and banner.

A few nights later they visited the house of H. D. Whitcomb, Esq., one of our very best citizens, and besmeared all one side of his newly painted house with red paint.

It is proper to say that Mr. Whitcomb had stood at the polls all day with St. John tickets and could not be overawed by the rabble.

He is the father of your much esteemed citizen, Arthur Whitcomb, your candidate for circuit clerk of Cook county."

The Union Signal printed the following last week:

'We give below excerpts from communications received since election. Comment would be impossible for us. 'The servant of God must neither strive nor cry.' Let us remember 'the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church.'

From a New England State:—I came home from St. Louis full of zeal for the work, but thus far have had to use all my grace to keep sweet-hearted. My husband voted for St. John, and we have been persecuted and insulted publicly and privately. His parishioners threatened him savagely if he dared to do this—as if a Christian minister ought not to vote his convictions! Don't you think my work for the present is self?

From Kansas:—We are having troublous times. Gov. St. John has been hung in effigy in our town, in Topeka, and many other places. Violent language is used in regard to him and if he escapes personal violence it will be almost a wonder. The W. C. T. U. is in disrepute also. But God reigneth.

From Illinois:—A noble pastor in this city has had withdrawals from his church because he dared to vote for St. John, and men who had subscribed money to an addition to the church have stated that they would cancel their subscriptions.

Another from Illinois, to wit:—Mr. ——, a true-hearted reformed man and blacksmith, finds that angry Republicans will not patronize him farther. Some say the W. C. T. U. women ought to be buried. A pastor declines to give notice of our gospel meetings. O, may the eyes of these Christian people be opened to see the strangeness of their course.

It should not be forgotten by those who show a spirit of intolerance, that no cause has ever grown so rapidly as when its persecutions were most bitter. Can we not agree to disagree, and live in peace?"

In an editorial upon similar outrages and threats the Brooklyn Union, a Republican paper, reads its party a sound and needed lesson, closing thus:

"Such incidents as these, and these are only samples of a great number—should teach the North that it has still itself much to learn as to the right of freedom of opinion. When party spirit has gone to such lengths that men who feel compelled from a sense of duty to oppose their party's candidate are burned in effigy, injured in business, driven from their pulpits, and barely escape mobbing by representatives of the "party of moral ideas," it is high time to call a halt. In fact the wisdom of the change of administration decreed by the voters has been made even more manifest since the election than it was before. When men who profess to be intelligent, tolerant, and even Christian, have sunk to that stage where they confound partisanship with patriotism, and betray their open sympathy with a bulldozing even meaner than that which they have long condemned in the South, the country needs a change to open their eyes and show them how unpatriotic and un-American they have insensibly grown. The lesson of political tolerance proves to be one which the North sadly needed to learn, and it is not the least beneficent result of Cleveland's election that it will teach this lesson."

—In addition to previous reports of the vote for St. John in different States the following have been officially reported during the past week. These figures may not be correct, as different papers, we notice, give different results. North Carolina, 448; Minnesota, 4,791; Kansas, 4,495; Ohio, 11,269; Missouri, 2,152; Georgia, 184; Texas, 2,468; Alabama, 610. In New York the highest vote for a prohibition elector was 25,006; the lowest, 24,948. Plurality of the Cleveland elector having highest vote, 1,149.

Belva Lockwood received ten votes in Texas, the only ones yet reported to our knowledge.

CORRESPONDENCE.

POLITICAL EFFORTS IN WISCONSIN.

Baraboo, Wis., Nov. 10, 1884.

Dear Cynosure:—Now that the smoke of battle has cleared away, it may be well to note the results. The State of Wisconsin had been organized politically in the interest of Prohibition for about three years. At that time a ticket had been run and the head of the ticket had received about 14,000 votes. After the nomination of Pomeroy and Conant, it was evident that if anything were done in that especial direction, the State would have to be organized, conventions called and tickets nominated, and the task was so great that it was soon seen that nothing thorough could be accomplished. The withdrawal of Pomeroy was foreshadowed to that extent that it seemed best to wait and see what would be done.

In the meantime the local Prohibition conventions were being called and we had to decide quickly what we would do. It was thought best by the friends in this vicinity to join heartily in the movement of the Prohibitionists, and so help to give an impetus to the cause which would show our good will and help it greatly in getting a good start. We did so with a will, and we were heartily welcomed as workers in the common cause. In due time Pomeroy withdrew, so we were left in good shape and hard at work. For my own part, I spent three weeks in the field, speaking nightly. We were ground between the mill-stones of both great parties. The Democrats were complacent toward us, but gave us but few votes. The Republicans were angry and misused us very much, but yet we received most of our votes from that party. Now, that the result is declared for Cleveland, their wrath is almost fierce. They say a good many things which they will have to take back before they win another Presidential election.

As to ourselves, we have doubtless fallen off some from the old vote, but we are now on bed-rock, thoroughly sifted and tried. The party now can only be reduced by death. Republican rage has driven every Prohibitionist's principles into him and clinched them, so that they cannot be withdrawn. A Prohibitionist who has stood all the fire and fury of the past six weeks can be relied upon for the rest of his life. I have not yet met a weak-kneed one.

I think we did much better to go ahead than if we had hesitated, and been disunited. We are in better trim in every respect. The temperance cause, in order to win, must break loose from the trammels of secretism, and become a popular movement; and it is doing this, in our State. We must help it in this direction. A man who is quickened on the subject of reform in one respect, is very likely to sympathize with it in other directions. It is to some extent a habit of mind.

I approve of the course of the Cynosure previous to the election, and I think that the result proves its wisdom. St. John has been hung in effigy in our streets. It was intended to insult the Prohibitionists, and it has been a good thing for us. The Republicans have that form of madness which pagan tradition says was encouraged by the gods, as the first step towards destruction.

A good many of our friends became frightened at the idea of losing their votes, so they threw away their principles. They have now lost both votes and principles, while the rest of us have saved our principles, and believe that we have saved our votes, too; that is, they will eventually win. Respectfully, J. W. Wood.

A CANVASSER'S HINTS.

Ellington, N. Y., Nov. 14, 1884.

Dear Cynosure:—As I have met with some success in securing subscriptions, it may not be amiss to offer some suggestions to those who are engaged in a like work. My plan has been as follows: On first meeting Mr. A, for instance, I make known my work, stating that I am engaged in the anti-secrecy reform, and gaining his views on that subject. After a brief talk, if worth while I present the paper; but never until Mr. A has become interested in our work. If he is in sympathy with the reform I show him the necessity of the work and the need of keeping posted in reference to what has been and is being done. If he is not informed, and consequently takes no position, I show him that God holds him responsible for what he might, as well as for what he does know.

If he is a professed Christian and yet says that he does not care to inform himself, I show him that everyone is in a sense his brother's keeper. If the watchmen on the tower of Zion see the enemy coming and blow not the trumpet, and the people are not warned, their blood is upon him. In short, I present the work to some in one way and to others in another, as I may think the case requires.

"Well," Mr. A will probably say, drawing a long breath, "what you say may be all true, but we take so many papers already we can not begin to read them all. There is the Rochester Democrat, and the Herald, and the Advocate; and Betsy she's got to have a religious paper, and Johnny"—

"Hold on, my friend, just tell how many papers there are that you ought to take that you do not. We know that everybody is flooded with all sorts of reading matter. Of the making of papers there is no end. Now let me ask you a few questions. Do you believe the anti-secret and temperance reforms to be right?"

If he answer in the affirmative, go on:

"How can these reforms be the most successfully advanced?" "By agitation."

"How can you agitate?" "By personal effort and through the press."

"You, sir, then believe that the press is necessary to the carrying on of great reforms?" "I do."

"You also state that you believe these reforms to be right?" "Yes."

"How must the press be sustained?" "By personal subscription."

"What class of persons will subscribe?" "Those who are interested, of course."

"You have already said you were interested; now what is your name and address, please?"

If Mr. A still holds back, take the paper, open it, and if he be a farmer, call his attention to the farm department, tell him of the market reports, etc. If he be a common workingman, tell him that on the back page of the paper each week he will find a brief account of the principal things that have occurred during the week without reading of a whole host of murders, etc., as in secular papers. If a minister, speak of the Bible lesson and other religious matter. Speak of each of the points that would be the most likely to interest them.

By showing the paper in the above manner we frequently obtain subscriptions where others have failed.

OREGON NOTES.

Portland, Oreg., Nov. 5, 1884.

Editor Cynosure:—Politically, we in Oregon seem to be entirely lost in the fog of circumstances, but I trust we will be all on board when we can find each other. Personally I am with the American party as truly as ever and agree with our editor and the leaders in the party. I did watch with interest and not without some fears the movements to unite with the prohibitionists. I knew there was need of wisdom, skill and grace, and much involved; so I prayed that God would bless and direct the work and movements made, and I believe he has done it. That is enough. I am satisfied, and more—am glad. As one of the chosen electors for our party in Oregon, on receiving the news officially in the Cynosure of the decision of our nominees and central committee, I wrote to our vice-president, Rev. W. H. Pr tt, stating that I was glad it was no longer necessary for my name to go before the public in that way and I was now ready to support St. John.

This change left us at sea, as we were not in the St. John company here and did not know our men, and could not find out anything save this: The Templars' lodge was "agin" it, as per letter of their State lecturer in the Oregonian. Next we turned to the "State Temperance Alliance," but I saw a notice of Dr. Watts, president of the Alliance, addressing a Blaine and Logan club, and he is a Good Templar. So I saw he could not be trusted. All was controlled by the lodge, it seemed. Now, election over, news from a number of polling places in Portland and others in the country, and no St. John tickets known or to be found there; or, as far as I can yet learn, anywhere.

Well, I feel clear. I have tried to cast my influence for the right. I have sent out over 130 copies of the Cynosure, old and new. I am glad I have had the privilege so long of reading the Cynosure, and my heart and confidence are with the noble men who are pushing on the good work against danger and the powers of darkness. May God bless all, and the means used, to his glory. I like the new reform story so far and have no doubt of its great excellence, as is all that comes from that writer. She is no doubt one of God's chosen ones, because she has chosen him. Truly yours in Christ,

THOMAS C. HAINES.

P. S., Nov. 6—I must add to-day that after writing the above I received a letter from Bro. Pruett containing St. John tickets. He had ordered tickets sent me ten days before, and, fearful I had not got them, sent me some of his as soon as he could. He has been afflicted, too, and scarcely able to write. So he is doing bravely and nobly, and though not pleased with the change, says we must vote as we pray, etc. I learn, also, St. John tickets were at one place four miles from here, and have no doubt there were some in Portland. So it may be myself who was in the fog of ignorance, as my opportunities are not the best for gaining news.

It did me good, some time since, to meet brother and sister Sherrick, readers and lovers of the Cynosure, and have a good talk with them. T. C. H.

A POINT IN AMERICAN POLITICS.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Will you allow me to say a word or two on a point of American politics which seems to me very extraordinary, and not in keeping with the purpose of your glorious republican system? Can it be true that in the working of your governmental administration there is any just ground for the charge that there is an "infamous system of ring government by Presidential patronage?" My point is found in the last two words, as bearing directly on the personal action of the Presidents.

In Europe some sovereigns may have some such power, but not the Queen of the British Islands—all her power being in the hands of the cabinet, who are hourly responsible to the people's house, and liable to be voted out of office on any question which comes up, be it legislative or executive. But this elastic power of correcting a wrong policy, or any policy disapproved by the people's house, seems here to be lodged in the unchangeable, fixed periods of the elections of the President and Congress. Neither can be turned out until their time expires.

There seems to be two ideas afloat on the power of the President: one that he is the third branch of the legislative power of the country; the other that his functions should be purely administrative, having only recommendatory and veto power in legislation. The non-responsibility of your Cabinet to the people's house seems to Old Country democratic republican sentiment a want which should be supplied as a protection against any "infamous system" possible in your Republic. It is the habit of us Old Country liberals to regard the United States as the pattern of excellence in government. Now, being among you, permit me free speech enough on this point to say that it does seem as if a responsible executive here would be a great protection against corruption rings, and also a protection to your Presidents from the assassin's bullets. It is, to me, very awful that two of your best Presidents should have been martyred. We had fancied that despots in Europe sometimes deserved a shot, but in your glorious country there should be found an immediate remedy, and such an adjustment as would render almost impossible, even to a fanatic, the idea that the President is a tyrant and that his life should be sacrificed as a cure for any evil.

Let us suppose the prohibition or anti-lodge candidate to be placed in the White House in Washington; and I ask this question: Would his supporters feel perfectly secure of his life in peaceful occupation of the seat for the Presidential term? If he should prove to be the third martyr, would it greatly surprise the country, or would it be enough to say that some saloon-liquored victim had done the deed, or that an oath-bound secretist fanatic had fancied he was serving his order and doing his god service by the killing of such a man? Now, sir, I fancy that Cabinet responsibility, not personal, Presidential responsibility, would be the best antidote against the "infamous system" which already stars your history with President martyrs. Truly yours,

A FOREIGNER

LITERATURE.

The North American Review for December opens with an important paper by Judge T. M. Cooley of Michigan, with the title, "Labor and Capital before the Law." The danger of incidental harm to the community, or to certain classes of people, from the increased use of machinery, the extension of public works, etc., is greatly diminished when those who make the laws, and especially those whose duty it is to interpret them, recognize that law is a progressive science; that it is a means, not an end; that when a state of things arises for which there is no precedent, a new precedent must be made. How the most enlightened jurists hold this principle constantly in view, and how the common as well as the statute law is thus made to keep pace with the general advance of civilization, is well set forth in the article. William K. Ackerman contributes some suggestive "Notes on Railway Management," Dr. Schliemann tells what he found in his excavations of the ruins of Tiryns, in Southern Greece, and Principal Shairp supplements his scholarly article on "Friendship in Ancient Poetry" with one on "Friendship in English Poetry." The other articles in the number are, "The British House of Lords," by George Ticknor Curtis, and "Responsibility for State Roguery," by John F. Hume.

Choice Literature for November is a well-selected number, the names of Lord Cochrane, Prof. J. R. Seeley, the poet Swinburne, Sir John Lubbock, the historian Froude. J. A. Farrer and H. A. Taine appearing among the authors and magazines which have been drawn upon to make it up. "Concerning Chili," "Norway Once More," "Charles Reade," "On the Reading of Books," "Socialism as Government," and "War and Christianity" are among the articles of most permanent value. The latter is a learned and forcible argument for the awakening of the Christian church against one of the world's most devastating and fearful evils, and deserves a wide reading. Choice Literature surpasses all other eclectic magazines in the number and value of its selections, and especially in the small subscription asked. Published in New York.

Home Science for the month maintains the hopeful reputation which it has so early gained as an advocate of the homes of America from the scientific view. The articles by Dr. Oswald and Miss Andrews in favor of less book cramming, and more outdoor practical life for our children are worth a careful reading by school teachers and directors. Helen M. Cooke writes with friendly appreciation of our American poetess Lydia H. Sigourney. Rev. W. T. Hogg, of Buffalo writes on "Extravagance," a theme which he once ably handled in the Cynosure. The contributions of Julia McNair Wright and Prof. E. P. Thwing, who bear somewhat of an editorial relation to the magazine, greatly enhance its value. Published at 29 Warren street, New York.

The Report of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture is a document of value to every one interested in the broad farms and grazing lands of that pioneer prohibition State of the West. Besides a topographical description of the State and its mineral resources, there are various statistical tables of value. Published by the Board at Topeka.

Purdy's Fruit Recorder, Palmyra, N. Y., for November is full as usual of fact and experiment attractive to the practical gardener. Friend Purdy has suffered a heavy loss in the burning of a large evaporator building, which was destroyed in the very midst of the busy season.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON X.—Dec. 7, 1884.—Drunkenness. Prov. 23: 29-35.
GOLDEN TEXT.—Be not among wine-bibbers. Prov. 23: 20.
[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The woes of the drunkard. Vs. 29, 30. "Who hath woe? who hath sorrow?" etc. Drunkards in their sober moments are the most unhappy of human beings. All reformed men testify to suffering agonies of physical pain and remorse in the moments when reason and conscience assert themselves. "Who hath contention?" At least nine-tenths of all the shootings and stabbings of which we read in the daily papers are the result of drunken quarrels. Yet drunkards are not by nature any more quarrelsome than other people. The reason is to be looked for in the physiological effects of alcohol on the brain and nerves, causing temporary insanity. "Alcohol is first and last a brain poison," is the assertion of the highest medical authorities. The stomach, with its many blood vessels and constant flow of gastric juice can soon get rid of the intruder in a measure, but the brain, for which it has a stronger attraction than any other part of the body, cannot so readily expel it, and is forced to retain the poison a much longer time. "Who hath babbling?" Only the thoughtless can find matter for mirth in the foolish, incoherent talk of the drunkard. "For every idle word men shall speak they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." That he has for the sake of appetite so clouded his reason that he thinks he is talking sense, will not save him from condemnation. "Who hath wounds without cause?" Drunkards are more liable to physical accidents than others. They sometimes lay down on a railroad track and are killed by passing trains. One man teased a mad dog and died of hydrophobia, when if he had not been in liquor he would have seen the signs of madness in the animal. "They that go to seek mixed wine." It seems that in Solomon's day some drinks were more intoxicating than others, but perhaps the worst were not so bad as modern spirits The United States consul at La Rochelle, France, states in a recent report that the so-called "cognac" sent to this country is prepared from grain, potatoes and beets, and adds: "It produces an intoxication in which the patient is especially inclined to rage and physical violence, while hopeless insanity is the inevitable consequence of persisting in its use."

2. The way of escape. Vs. 31–35. God told Lot and his family to not even look behind them in their flight from the doomed cities of the plain, and all through the Bible we find it emphasized and reiterated that the one way of escaping temptation is to flee from it without even a backward look. The wine-cup has always owed much of its power over men to its attractive appearance. Poets have sung its beauty, but at the last "it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." The snakes seen by the drunkard in the terrible delirium tremens are but faint images of the real serpent which lay coiled up in the bottom of his first glass. "I will seek it yet again." That the drunkard should turn back after each fresh debauch to the enemy that he knows is ruining him body and soul is a sad mystery. But let us thank God that there is another mystery of salvation—a Redeemer mighty to save, and redouble our efforts against this great destroyer of humanity.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What should the young flee? 2 Tim. 2: 22. Where else is woe pronounced upon the drunkard? Is. 5: 11, 22. Where upon the men who make drunkards? Ha. 2: 15. Where upon those who live in easy indifference to great wrongs? Amos 6: 1–6.

NOTES FROM PELOUBET.

"Who hath contentions?" may mean the conflict between desire and conscience; more probably, quarrels and bickerings. "Quarrelsome when in his cups" is an old saying. "Let me tell you how much a gallon of whisky cost," said a judge, after trying a a case. "One gallon of whisky made two men murderers; it made two wives widows: and made eight children orphans." The statistics of some of our prisons show that seven-eighths of their inmates reached their wretched condition through drunkenness.—The Century, 1883.

"They that tarry long at the wine." The Orientals have no notion of any enjoyment of wine apart from the exhilarating inebriety it produces; and hence, when they do get drink, they usually indulge in it to the last degree of excess. D'Arvieux relates that during his sojourn among the Arabs, near Mt. Carmel, a wreck took place on the coast, from which one of the emirs secured two large casks of wine, and thereupon sent to the neighboring emirs, inviting them to come and help him to drink it. They gladly came, and continued drinking for two days and two nights, until not a drop of wine was left. During this time they never quitted the table except to rest in some corner of the tent, after which they resumed their places. When all was gone, they deliberated how to obtain a fresh supply of the pleasant bane; but seeing no prospects of success, they dispersed reluctantly to their several camps.—Kitto.

"Look not." Do not put yourself in the way of temptation; avoid moderate drinking; do not go where strong drink is sold or used. Do not talk about liquor, nor regard it wistfully. Nor sip a little. It is worthy of our attention that the statistics of the Woman's Prison of Massachusetts show that out of its hundreds of inmates, the greater part began their dreadful career, at the average age of eighteen, with beer, drunk for companionship's sake. In the English Parliament, some years ago, a member moved the appointment of a committee to investigate the cause of intemperance among the people. Another member arose and said he thought he could tell them without a committee; it was drinking. This being a clear statement of the case, a clear statement of the cure will be, stop drinking.

"When it is red." Red wines were most esteemed in the East. So much was the red color admired, that when it was too white they gave it a deeper tinge by mixing with it saffron or Brazil wood. By extracting the coloring matter of such ingredients the wine may be said to make itself redder, a circumstance which, in Mr. Harmer's opinion, Solomon meant to express in the proverb (23: 31).—Paxton.

"Behold strange women." Better strange visions. They are here strange sights which the drunkard sees, as appears, too, from the strange language afterwards ascribed to him. We may compare it with an awful passage in the Odyssey, xx. 354, where the drunken suitors see the most terrific sights, "the walls sprinkled with blood, and the house full of spectres."—Lewis. Intoxicating drink excites lust. "Behold" here denotes "look upon with evil intent." Intemperance involves moral defilement, to which no young man of lofty and pure spirit will subject himself.—Prof. Phelps.

"Thine heart shall utter perverse things," because the heart itself becomes perverse. Wild ravings thy heart shall utter. The primary sense of the verb being to turn a thing upside down, as said so often of Sodom and Gomorrah. Hence the noun denoting topsy-turviness, utter contradictoriness, absurdity, and wild confusion, the talk of a man in the delirium tremens.—Tayler Lewis.

"They have stricken me, and I was not sick; they have beaten me, and I felt it not." This is the inebriate's contemptuous answer to the admonitions of those who warn him of sickness and wounds. He has been stricken, and not made sick; he has been beaten, but he has felt no bruises. It was but the temporary results of a frolic. There is no occasion for being troubled. Advice and warning are of little use then. The very drinking habits dull the conscience and harden the heart. "The fool will not learn even by experience."—Peloubet.

"I will seek it yet again." The picture ends with the words of the drunkard on waking from his sleep. He has been unconscious of the excesses and outrages of the night, and his first thought is to return to his old habit.—Cook.

THE LATE HENRY FAWCETT.

Great Britain's illustrious Postmaster General, Henry Fawcett, M. P. D., C. L., statesman and humanitarian, died at London, England, aged fifty-one. He is one of the most notable figures in English politics, made so by the reforms he has fathered, his eloquence and ability, and his infirmity. Born in 1833, he was educated at Cambridge University, graduating in 1856 with high mathematical honors and being chosen a Fellow of Trinity Hall. Two years afterwards, while shooting a premature discharge of a gun deprived Henry Fawcett of his sight. But instead of stopping a brilliant career, the sad accident only spurred the student to greater energy. He became one of the leading thinkers and workers in England on political economy. In 1865 he published two striking books on the subject, "A Manual of Political Economy" and "Economic Position of the British Laborer," besides contributing extensively to the magazines and reviews articles on economic and political science. In 1863 Henry Fawcett was elected Professor of Political Economy to the University of Cambridge, and had established himself in the front rank of political economists and political thinkers. In 1857 he was first elected to Parliament as an advanced Liberal from the borough of Southwark. Since then he has taken a prominent part in most of the important questions under discussion by that body. Almost his first appearance was as an advocate of the abolition of tests in the English university, and after hard fighting, the battle was won. He was a supporter of the proposal for extending the franchise to all women who possess in their own right the property qualification giving men the right to vote.

The Roman Propaganda has an immense force of missionaries in the field. It has under its control, we are told, no less than 6,700 missionaries, of whom 1,000 are Capuchins, laboring in India and the islands of the Indian ocean; 2,500 Franciscans in Morocco and various parts of America; 300 Oblates in Jaffa, Natal, and Ceylon; 700 priests in the foreign missions in Malosia, Corea and Tonquin; 1,500 Jesuits in British Guiana, Armenia, and Madagascar; 200 priests of the Congregation of the Mission, familiarly called Lazarists, in Persia, Abyssinia, and Kiang Su; 500 Dominicans in the Phillipine Islands, Central Tonquin and elsewhere. It is claimed that, in 1883, as the result of the labors of 700 of these missionaries, 20,000 pagans were converted, and 29,000 children of Christian and 89,000 of heathen parentage were baptized.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1884.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following. as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)
Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.
Disciples (in part.)
Friends.
Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.
Mennonites.
Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.
Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)
Moravians.
Plymouth Brethren.
Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.
Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)
United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.
New Hope Methodist, Lowndes Co., Miss.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, HENRY L. KELLOGG, } EDITORS.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1884.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

OLATHE, Kan., Nov. 19, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Our statement that St. John was burnt in effigy here at his home, was an error copied from the Kansas City Journal and other prints, which manufacture news to order. Some few growled and talked "tar and feathers," but I am assured the population here would not have tolerated effigy-burning; and the wicked were advised not to attempt tar and feathers till they had bought enough to tar all who voted for him. St. John receives frequent threats of assassination, by mail. So did President Finney and many others, but such barking dogs seldom bite. However, we read, "Some of you they shall put to death;" and that has been true, and doubtless will be repeated. I have consented to preach here this (prayer-meeting) evening and twice next Sabbath.

I hope the action of the Board of Directors will be read over and over again by every one who sees the Cynosure. If a call for a general convention can be circulated among Presbyterians, Baptists, Congregationalists, Friends, Wesleyans, Free Methodists, United Brethren (and all can be reached through their papers), and fixed at Northampton, Mass., if that call with ten thousand signers is presented to President Seelye, Gough, and Dr. A. A. Miner, I believe all three of those men will attend and speak at Northampton. Will the American National Committee put this call in motion at once? Rev. Joseph Travis of the Free Methodist will give excellent advice how to get the names.

I saw Gov. St. John yesterday. He looks well for a man who spoke so incessantly during the campaign. After breathing he re-enters the field. J. B.

KANSAS ITEMS.

The editor of the Cynosure by request led and addressed the regular weekly meeting in the Wesleyan church, Olathe, on Wednesday evening, Nov. 19. The attendance was good, and six or eight interesting young people requested prayer. The meeting was harmonious and happy.

We hear of some extravagant things being said and done about the election, but the mass of the population acquiesce cheerfully in the result, and society moves on quietly and happily as ever. The wonderful threats are by parties away off nobody knows where. The only facts which come to our knowledge are violent and abusive letters, and there are far less of these than came formerly addressed to President Finney of Oberlin, and the publishers of the Cynosure, and like them, generally without names.

H. Curtis, Esq., of Olathe, Kans., warmly seconds the Directors' proposition for a general convention of Americans and Prohibitionists who are opposed to nominating men to rule the whole people who are under special secret sworn obligations to a part.

In the cars from Kansas City to Olathe three solid-looking, intelligent farmers said they voted the Republican ticket, but if it was to do again they would vote for St. John. A colored man, editor of a Wyandot paper, was the only one in the car who abused St. John.

For three years to come there are to be no national candidates before the people. The country will doubtless be as quiet under Cleveland as has New York State. Union revival meetings are being talked of in different places; and never was there a more propitious time to seek first the kingdom of God.

The promise, so repeated in the Bible, that God will "strengthen the heart" of those who trust him, yields a practical cure for faint-heartedness, and all fear.

A well-dressed, intelligent Hungarian in the cars said all the royal families of Europe are all connected by marriage and hostile to the interests of the masses. When asked of the Nihilists he was silent.

OBERLIN REJUVENATING.

The visit of two Presidential candidates, Blaine and St. John, to Oberlin during the campaign, seems to have stirred up the political sediment of the place from the "lowest bottom," and the scum came to the top the other day very odiously. Thursday night after election an inglorious end came to a series of seranades, parades, hootings, howlings, night circulation of handbills insulting the Prohibitionists, and other political "jollification," in which the property of quiet citizens was destroyed, their rest disturbed, and their peace and safety threatened. The midnight parade became more boisterous and threatening at the home of a theological student, and fearing personal violence, which he might well do from the outcries, he fired a pistol to intimidate them. No one was hurt, but the young man was held under bonds for "shooting with intent to wound," by the Republican magistrate, when there was no evidence about the shooting but his own, and that was clear that the scaring of a mob was the only purpose; and when it was given as the opinion of lawyers that had he shot some of the mob he would be legally justifiable. The story as given to the New York Witness by D. W. Gage, a Cleveland lawyer who appeared for the defense in the trial, is worth reprinting:

On that night, November 6, after the people of Oberlin had retired, generally, and at near midnight, a gang of roughs, together with many of the college students and some of the citizens, and among them a Republican constable, stimulated by the postmaster and other prominent Republican citizens, and without rebuke from college professors and citizens, a riotous mob of between two and three hundred persons, paraded the streets with horns, bells, pans, and every device that could make night hideous, and with hooting, screaming and yelling, marched to the residences of the prominent Prohibitionists of Oberlin village, and among them that of W. T. Mills, whom Bro. Scott will remember as one of the committee of reception to St. John. They went there hooting, yelling, and with various instruments making unearthly and indescribable noises.

Previous to this some of the rioters had assaulted Mr. Mills, who is one of the theological students, and a most quiet, inoffensive, Christian gentleman. They had threatened him with personal violence; insulted him repeatedly while upon the street with his wife; had two nights previous torn up the sidewalk leading from the street to his house; had done the same to the walks of several other Prohibition men, and women even—widows did not escape the terrorism of the mob. Fences were broken down, and gates wrenched from their hinges, and houses were battered. All this with no word of rebuke from any Republican college or village officer. A card written in blood-red ink, surrounded with skull and cross-bones, coffins, and implements of death, and bearing the words following, had been pasted to Mr. Mills' door some ten or twelve days previous:

> "The O. K. K. K., being revised and abridged, and regulated into good working order, do hereby order you to leave the State of Ohio within ten days. O. K. K. K., OF OHIO. (Decree.)"

The mob, on the night in question, a little before midnight came upon the premises of Mr. Mills, and with unearthly screechings and noises upon the instruments named, attacked the house and the rooms in which were Mr. Mills and his wife. His wife became terrified when they began yelling, "Bring him out!" "Drag him out!"

When it had gone thus far, Mr. Mills and his wife being alone, and fearing personal violence, he resorted to an old-fashioned revolver that his wife had laid away in a drawer. Going to the open window he turned the blinds, and saw a crowd upon the fence and about the house on one side, and a crowd upon the walk to the right with a space between where there were none. (It was bright moonlight.) He fired up in the air away from where there was any one, turned the barrel and fired again and a third time, to warn them that he was there and armed. He aimed deliberately away from them, and no one was hurt or hit. No one saw Mr. Mills. He told his friends and others the facts as here stated.

One of the rioters swore out a warrant charging him with shooting with intent to wound. He was arrested by a constable, who was one of the rioters, and brought before a Republican justice of the peace who was in full sympathy with the mob. He refused to permit questions on cross-examination to ascertain the names of those present, and would not permit questions as to the object with which the rioters went onto Mr. Mills' premises, his rulings being: "The object with which they went there makes no difference in this case." Mr. Mills testified in the case and made a frank statement of all the facts, and his own statements were the only evidence in connection with the shooting.

The character and intelligence of the justice may be gathered from a sentence he uttered in deciding to bind the accused over for trial to the Common Pleas court, as he did for maliciously shooting with intent to wound. He then said: "But I wish to say for Mr. Mills that I admire his frankness in stating fully the circumstances, and have no idea that the shooting was done with criminal intent." I leave it for any one with ordinary sense to discover for what he was bound over.

No wonder that the veteran George Thompson ex claims, "the innocent man is made to suffer, while the guilty, rowdy mob of midnight disturbers are not molested! And this at Oberlin. . . . But we must bear reproach and even violence, as in the days of anti-slavery, and soon history will crown our patient endeavors." He and other aged men of Oberlin must vividly recall the early days of the town when Shipherd and his co-workers withstood the scorn of the world and its persecutions for their testimony against slavery.

MORMON CONVICTIONS.

The United States has a judge in Utah who is disposed to give the laws a chance to prove their value. His decision clearing the grand jury of forsworn men lately attracted the attention of the nation and roused the angry jealousy of the Mormon leaders. The indictment against Rudger Clawson, son of a Mormon bishop, was prosecuted vigorously by U. S. attorney Van Zile. In trying to find the records of the Endowment House he met the Mormon lodge oath. President John Taylor and others testified that they did not know that records were kept in the Endowment House, or where they were or who kept them. But the trial went on in spite of the bad memories of the Mormon elders, and Clawson was convicted by the jury. His speech to the court before sentence was pronounced, was full of defiance, and was sustained by the Mormon leader. "The Constitution of the United States," he said, "expressly states that Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. It cannot be denied, I think, that marriage, when amended and sanctioned by religious rites and ceremonies, is an ordinance of religion. The law of 1862 and the Edmunds law were expressly designed to operate against marriages as practiced and believed in by the Latter Day Saints. They are, therefore, unconstitutional, and, of course, cannot command the respect that a constitutional law would."

Clawson was sentenced to a term of imprisonment and to pay a fine. His argument for a new trial has been over-ruled, and he is likely to realize the cost of polygamy.

Another case is Joseph H. Evans', who has been convicted by the court, sentenced to three years and a half in the penitentiary and to pay a fine of $250.

The Mormon scruple about religious convictions and constitutional rights is supported only by their confidence in the Endowment House lodge oath. When the power of this is broken they can be governed like other people, not before.

MR. GARRISON AS A PROPHET.—The first Abolition Society in the United States was organized in December, 1831, in an African school-house in Boston. It numbered twelve members. Mr. Garrison, with a keen sense of the prophetic, remarked on that occasion: "We have met to-night in this obscure schoolhouse; our numbers are few and our influence limited; but, mark my prediction, Faneuil Hall shall ere long echo with the principles we have set forth. We shall shake the nation by their mighty power."

—President John Bascom, of the State University of Wisconsin, was the first to put his name to a Prohibition club roll in Madison, to begin the campaign of 1888. The work will be pushed in Wisconsin, and a fund raised to keep St. John in the field for the next four years.

—The Cynosure noted last week the report that the Ohio Grand Lodge of Masons had prohibited liquor-selling, and some of the temperance papers are so interpreting the action. The resolution, however, is far from going to the extent of prohibition, and though a mere expression of opinion, was carried only after a long and warm discussion. It reads thus:

"Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Grand Lodge that the selling of intoxicating drinks is a Masonic offense, and should disqualify any one for initiation or affiliation in any Masonic Lodge."

— The Berea, Ky., Evangelist reports a colored teacher's institute held at Berea last month, which is of special interest in the proof it gives of the substantial progress of the ex-slaves in intelligence. President Fairchild and the professors of Berea College took part in the institute, the former giving an address upon the progress of education among the colored people of the State. Fifteen years ago there were scarcely a dozen colored schools in Kentucky, and most of these supported by the American Missionary Association. There were then no colored teachers in the State, and no State system of schools for the colored people. A public school system was adopted seven or eight years ago, and improved two years ago so that white and black have the same proportion of the school fund. There are now 800 colored schools in the State, taught by colored teachers, and in some of the large cities the people are as proud of their colored schools as of the white.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

At last the National Republican gives up the vain hope so long entertained, that by some mysterious process Mr. Blaine would be counted in; and submits gracefully. There is, however, great depression and most gloomy forebodings on the part of government employes. The undertone of sadness is manifested in Sabbath discourses and in the prayer-meetings. It is not loud but deep. The colored people are most disappointed, and both here and elsewhere are much cast down. An intelligent colored pastor said to me that he expected the condition of the colored men to be put back to where it was in 1860.

Of course such forebodings are absurd. The country and the world have grown within the last quarter of a century. It is in the nature of things utterly impossible to turn back the dial of human progress. A considerable percentage of the freedmen have become readers and thinkers. They would make most dangerous slaves. A generation has grown up that never felt the yoke and would not submit to it, and, besides, if there were not constitutional and legal provision for the protection of their liberties, there is no desire whatever on the part of the ex-slave-holders to go back to the old regime.

On the other hand the Democrats are exceedingly jubilant. Their demonstration here on the night of the 12th was one of the greatest displays that this city has seen. From five to six thousand marched in procession with fire-works and music, and withal, in excellent order. There is no reason to doubt that they are as honest and patriotic as their Republican neighbors, nor need we fear that they will not endeavor to meet fairly the questions that may arise. In reference to the colored man's right to a free vote and fair count, I think it will be safer now than before. In the reconstruction of parties, which is inevitable, the colored vote will decide, and each party will become its champion.

Just now the trial by court martial of Gen. Swaim, arrests attention. Whatever may be the merits of the case, it is quite certain that the defense do not desire a full and free ventilation of all the facts. Swaim and his attorneys are fighting inch by inch; denying the jurisdiction of the court, objecting severally to its members, and in every way staving off investigation. Precisely the same line was pursued by the defense in the Star Route cases, and, it is safe to predict, with the same results. The court is at last fully constituted, Gen. Schofield being the leading officer, and the Secretary of War is to be subpœnied as a witness. The honor of the service is to be vindicated by the form of a court martial; but if a thirty-three degree Mason is convicted and punished it will be an astonishment to all people.

Just now there is a great outcry against St. John and the Prohibitionists. Some people are exhausting their vocabulary of epithets, which they hurl at us, vainly pretending that we have put back the temperance cause. In many instances they show their insincerity by declaring that henceforth they will favor the license system. Not so with the avowed champions of the liquor interests. They know full well that the St. John vote is a declaration of war, which must inevitably go on until either prohibition or free whisky shall prevail. In 1844 it was claimed that the vote for Birney had put back the anti-slavery cause, but such men as J. C. Calhoun, Robert Toombs and Mr. Foote of Mississippi, knew better. It was to them the hand-writing on the wall that told them of the approaching doom of the slave system, that they were seeking to perpetuate and extend. It is well to learn from our open enemies. What they desire us not to do is doubtless the wisest plan to adopt.

Among the political changes in the next House of Representatives will be the absence of Mr. White of Kentucky, the earnest friend of temperance, and consistent Christian, and the presence of Mr. J. Murphy of Iowa, the outspoken advocate of free whisky, and member of the Personal Liberty League; which means a league to defy the laws of God and man.

The recent letter of that eminent Christian statesman, John Bright, congratulating us on our repudiation of the protection policy, though a most natural conclusion, is doubtless far from the truth. It is not probable that the tariff question materially affected the result. Much more to the point are his reasons for free trade rather than protection. He shows that since the adoption of free trade in Great Britain, the wages of laborers have nearly doubled, the hours of labor diminished, and with lessened cost of living. He says that though there is at present great business depression it is not greater than in the United States, Russia, and other countries that have been under the protection policy. Surely these are good reasons why this nation and all others ought to remove all restrictions on legitimate commerce.

Among the objects of interests in the Old World, perhaps none is more important than the pending Congo Conference. Two great rivers, the Niger and the Congo, comparable to the Mississippi and the Amazon, traversing regions abounding in fertility and teeming with myriads of people, are being opened up to the commerce of the world. Never in the world's history was there more earnest demand that commerce, civilization and Christianity should join hands and take peaceful possession of this vast empire in the name of the Prince of Peace. Doubtless the expedition of Gen. Woseley up the Nile, is to be overruled for the development of African civilization, but the great work that is being done on the Congo is eminently peaceful.

H. H. HINMAN.

WHAT NEW ENGLAND NEEDS.

[From a letter to the General Agent.]

Praying, preaching and teaching must be relied on as the principal means of a permanent reform. I believe in earnest political action; but nothing valuable in politics can be accomplished except as the fruit of patient toil in the primary steps of moral reform, as has been illustrated in the whole work of the National Christian Association for the past ten years. The past political flurry may work favorably to the Anti-masonic reform. No doubt it has opened the door to some minds hitherto unapproachable.

I rejoice that New England is not wholly forgotten in the programme for work. I will co-operate with you to the extent of my ability. What New England needs is six State conventions, held in six consecutive weeks by yourself, assisted by local talent in each State. Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island and New Hampshire ought to be all ready to co-operate. Every State convention confirms old friends and developes new ones. It also opens the door for reform papers and books.

The Christian Witness, it is hoped, has done some good work. Its average circulation has been greater this year than ever before, averaging about 1,450 per month. October edition, 2,500; December, 2,250. These editions are extra large on account of brother Hyatt's Confession in October, and tract in December. The Confession was sent to every pastor in the Free Baptist denomination, numbering one thousand men. Your fellow-laborer,

S. C. KIMBALL.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

—There are 121 lodges of A. O. United Workmen in Michigan.

—The eighteenth annual session of the National Grange met Nov. 12th, in the Senate-chamber of the State Capital, at Nashville, Tennessee. J. J. Woodman, Worthy Master, presided.

—The "Ancient Order of Foresters" held its "Subsidiary High Court of the United States, Tenth Executive Council," in Philadelphia, Pa., in October. The order has existed fifty years in this country, or since the Morgan murder.

—The Masonic Grand Lodge of Michigan represents 351 lodges in the State, with a membership of 27,181. Receipts of cash during the year were $11,535.10. This is the contribution to the Grand Lodge only; add that paid to the local lodges and the sum is immense.

—The Phi Delta Theta secret college fraternity held a national convention in Nashville, Tenn., November 12th. Forty-nine active and eight alumni chapters were represented. The delegates visited Vanderbilt University in a body and were cordially received by the faculty. Literary exercises were held in the Hall of Representatives at the Capital, at night.

—The Freemason of Detroit in its initial number says of a champion in wrestling matches: "Col. J. H. McLaughlin, the well known athlete, has an advertisement in our paper. Bro. McLaughlin is a genial, whole-souled, good fellow, and will welcome all who call. He has one of the finest, well-stocked places of the kind in the city." "Bro." McLaughlin's advertisement is of a liquor store!

— The action of the Masonic Grand Lodge of Massachusetts in threatening expulsion to all Masons who took the degrees of the "Rite of Memphis," or of the "Cerneau Ancient and Accepted Rite," has been followed by some other States. This makes the three-degree lodges deciding the merits or demerits of those pretending to thirty-three degrees. The matter of more or less degrees is insignificant, however. Masonry is one system.

—The Memphis Rite is ruled by a "Sovereign Sanctuary." The English body objects to its members joining themselves to the 33-degree Masons, which causes the Masonic Tablet to remark:

"The Sovereign Sanctuary of India is simply and purely a Sanctuary of the Ancient and Accepted Rite of Memphis, 96th degree, and does not profess to have control over the Ancient and Primitive Rite, 33d degree, the Reformed Rite, 33d degree, etc. The body has been regularly and legitimately established by the Illustrious Brother Darius Wilson, 33d, 96th and 90th degrees, who is Grand Master of the Rite in the United States. On what ground, therefore, Most Illustrious Brother Yarker, G. M. of the Sovereign Sanctuary of England, can object to it, we fail to understand. In Kneph the two rites (A. and P., 33d, and Supreme Rite of Memphis, 96th degree), have always been alluded to as two separate and distinct rites. We regret, therefore, to find the Sovereign Sanctuary of England objecting to its members in England taking these degrees. It looks too like the colonial Masonic policy of the Grand Lodge of England."

—The Odd-fellows are taking steps, in view of the approaching Exposition season in New Orleans, to celebrate a given day by a meeting of a very large number of the craft at the World's Exposition. Dr. J. W. Adams, deputy grand master, in order to further the project, has issued the subjoined circular: "NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 11, 1884.—According to the desire expressed by many prominent members of the fraternity, the deputy grand master, acting for the grand master, has appointed a committee of three past grands, to act in codjunction with similar committees from the subordinate lodges and encampments, to advise as to the propriety and advantage of arranging for a reunion of all the lodges of Odd-fellows and visiting brethren in the city in the near future. Now, therefore, you are requested to appoint a committee of three to act with the above named committee. They will name time and place of meeting."

—The Detroit Evening News indulged in the following account of the late meeting of the "Sovereign Grand Inspectors General" of the 33d degree in Masonry in that city: "At ten o'clock this morning the rooms of the Detroit commandnry began to fill up with visitors. Old men with venerable gray beards flitted noiselessly about the rooms, ornamented with all the paraphernalia of the patriarchs of old. Staid business men of dignified bearing, who turn up their noses in contempt at a passing political procession, did not think it beneath them to don the silk and gold embroidered regalia to deck themselves out with all the pomp and rare bird feathers of their office. First came the high cockalorum with an interminable title, who bore a great resemblance in his finery to a marshall on St. Patrick's day. Following him was an officious secretary, and next came the secretary to the secretary, bearing the parchments containing the truths strong to them as holy writ, for they took pains to hide them from the vulgar eye of the on-lookers. Suddenly there stepped from the midst of the solemn conclave a haughty, self-important individual, with all the superciliousness commensurate with a man who could sport such costly drapings as he wore. He pranced about like a proud steed, and pointing to a bully of a janitor, gave orders to disperse the astonished spectators. The hireling, according to orders, rudely repulsed the people, and accompanied his commands with words not of the choicest English. 'Git out here!' he said. 'You ain't got no business here.'

'All right,' replied an old gentleman. 'We will not profane sacred ground. The show can proceed without us.'

Reporters were informed by a dignitary with an unpronounceable name that their most majestic majesties would be invisible for the rest of the day. They would be closeted until nightfall to listen to the reports of the ambassadors from the various dominions in the Scottish rite, and also to a speech by the omnipotent commander, or whatever his title may be. The public will be informed, by the gracious consent of the council, what it would have them know, in the near future. It is to be hoped that business will not be suspended from anxiety and impatience to learn who are dubbed the high, past, present and future commanders of the tribes. There is a lurking suspicion that several mysterious boxes which arrived this morning at the council rooms will be investigated. They are marked 'Dry Goods;' but a wag who saw them brought through the rain said that the most noble officials would have to sample them as wet goods."

— How decent men sicken of their lodge folly is the proper subject for the following extract from the Grand Master's report in the Masonic Grand Lodge of Indiana, May 27, 1873:

"From the Grand Lodge proceedings of 1854 to 1872, inclusive, may be seen the amount of work lodges have done during the nineteen years just passed. The year 1854 is the first of our Grand Lodge proceedings in which is found a tabular statement showing all initiations, demissions, suspensions, expulsions, affiliations and reinstations. The total number of members reported in 1854 was 6,526, against 26,216 reported in 1872. Since the year 1853 the lodges in this jurisdiction have initiated 34,201. Of this number they have honorably discharged those who have demitted and affiliated in the Grand Lodge above 3,327, leaving a balance of 30,774, as charged against the lodges. Of this number you have on hand the difference between the number of members in 1854 and 1872, 19,790, or in other words you have retained but 19,790 out of 30,774 initiated. But the tables show that you have demitted 17,528 against 9,741 who have affiliated, giving you the credit of all doubtful testimony, and presuming that the affiliations are those who have demitted and removed from one part of the State to the other. It is not begging the question when you take into consideration the increase in population in this State, to say that as many Masons have come into, and affiliated in this jurisdiction, as have moved out of it. By admitting that you may have credit for those who have affiliated, you have trained and equipped an army of non-affiliates of 7,787. This vast army have turned their backs on you, and not one of them will be of any service in time of need and trouble. The question that first presents itself is, Why have so many demitted? Why have 7,787 who were favorably impressed with the institution of Freemasonry and received into the order as men free born and well recommended, who have assumed the duties and responsibilities of an organization based upon brotherly love, relief and truth, deserted you?"

THE HOME.

A THANKSGIVING SONG.

I bring my hymn of thankfulness
To Thee, dear Lord, to-day;
Though not for joys Thy name I bless
And not for gifts I pray.
The griefs that know not man's redress
Before Thy feet I lay.

Master! I thank Thee for the sin
That taught mine eyes to see
What depths of loving lie within
The heart that broke for me;
What patience human want can win
From God's divinity.

I thank Thee for the blank despair,
When friend and love forsake,
That taught me how Thy cross to bear,
Who bore it for my sake,
And showed my lonely soul a prayer
That from Thy lips I take.

I thank Thee for the life of grief
I share with all below,
Wherein I learn the sure relief
My brother's heart to know,
And in the wisdom taught of pain
To soothe and share his woe.

I thank Thee for the languid years
Of loneliness and pain,
When flesh and spirit sowed in tears,
But scattered not in vain;
For trust in God and faith in man
Sprang up beneath the rain.

I thank Thee for my vain desires,
That no fulfillment knew;
For life's consuming, cleansing fires,
That searched me through and through,
Till I could say to Him: "Forgive!
They know not what they do."

What fullness of my earthly store,
What shine of harvest sun,
What ointment on Thy feet to pour,
What honored race to run,
What joyful song of thankfulness,
Here ended or begun,
Shall mate with mine, who learn so late
To know Thy will is done?

THE GREATEST MISTAKE OF HIS LIFE.

A THANKSGIVING STORY.

"It was the greatest mistake of my life." Parson Ely was so in the habit of saying it that his friends, gathered around the Thanksgiving table, looked up from their good cheer and waited, with amused expressions, to see what was the last error, considered by the tender conscience of their self-accusing pastor as the greatest in a life, in which he had already chronicled so many. Parson Ely was an impressionable, impulsive man, full of enthusiasm for any good cause which appealed to his better feelings and sense of right, but timid and very dependent upon popular support, the opinion of others somehow strangely affecting his opinion of himself and his actions. Some time before, a wave of the great Washingtonian movement had swept over the little village of Poncocke, multitudes of names were appended to the total abstinence pledge, that of the impulsive pastor standing high upon the pledge-roll, while his interest and enthusiasm carried forward the meetings and lectures, and assisted to lash public sentiment up to a white heat. But all excitements necessarily have their reactions, and even so it was in Poncocke. The Washingtonian lecturers went their way to other towns, which equally needed their services. The "reformed men," such as were really reformed, quietly took their places among other industrious citizens, and lost their temporary prominence, while others, having only been swept along in the general enthusiasm of the movement, and not having been pointed to the religious as the only true basis of reformation, soon fell away, and brought terrible disgrace upon the cause. Then the moderate drinkers and the respectable portions of the community, whose present gains or paternal fortunes were largely involved in the manufacture and sale of New England rum, and to whose unenlightened consciences a distillery was as innocent a possession as a flour mill is to us, began to take courage and say: "I told you so."

They said it in the parson's ears in a most uncomfortable way, for many of them were his elders and deacons, his church members in the highest standing, and from whom his salary must of necessity come. Some of them thought—there were such men in those days—that the latter circumstance gave them a right to dictate as to their pastor's actions not only, but also as to his most private opinions of right and wrong, and so they gave him a lively time with their comments upon his recent position, declaring that radicalism such as his must inevitably prejudice his pulpit and pastoral influences. Some went so far as to say that in signing a pledge the minister had done dishonor to his ordination vows, which ought to cover temperance as well as all other kinds of godliness; and others, that he had introduced schism into the church by joining an outside society. And the poor pastor, self-distrustful, as usual, went round with his head bowed like a bulrush, vainly bemoaning his inability to undo the work of that enthusiastic impulse.

It was when the hard cider, which always preceded apple-jack, perry, and other well-known compounds at the Thanksgiving festivals of those days, was passed first to the minister, who refused it with a painful flush, that he added to his tremulous denial the phrase so familiar to his hearers:

"It was the greatest mistake of my life."

"How a mistake?" said one present, who, having recently returned to his home, which he had left during the excitement of the temperance movement, was not acquainted with the present reaction in public sentiment. "I remember hearing you say, parson, that when you put your signature to that pledge it was the happiest moment of your life, and that you felt as though your influence with this people would be redoubled by this act."

"Did I say that? Well, I was excited and enthusiastic. It was a great mistake, I have lost all my influence, the best people don't come to the service as they used to, my elders are estranged, and I fear there will be trouble in the church before we are through with this thing."

"Why not put an end to it, then, and break that foolish pledge once for all?" said his host, courteously offering the Thanksgiving cider.

"I have given my word," said the pastor, faintly but firmly; "a man's word is as good as his bond, they say, and the pledge of a minister of the Holy Gospel ought to be as sacred as the immutable word of Jehovah himself. Forgive my seeming discourtesy; I am pledged to total abstinence as long as my life shall last, and though the promise be a foolish one, God helping me, I'll keep it."

Of course courtesy forbid that more should be said; the conversation drifted to other things; full justice was done to turkeys, pies, and other good things, and dinner being over, the company adjourned to the seldom used "best room," where there were nuts and apples, more hard cider and plenty of New England rum; then, at the "gloaming," horses were "hitched," and the whole company set forth towards their homes.

The minister was ill at ease. He had not enjoyed those Thanksgiving festivities. His singularity had, he felt, thrown what is familiarly known as a wet blanket upon the company; his influence with those young people was gone, they would no longer look upon him as a genial, friendly pastor, on whose sympathy they might depend, as he attempted to draw them into the fold, and the elder men considered him as an enthusiastic fanatic, whose judgment was unreliable. Somehow, in spite of his morning sermon on the text, "In every thing give thanks," the pastor's Thanksgiving had not yet begun.

As he neared his home he perceived some dark object directly across his own front door, and hastening on to see what it could be, found a cart, which two rough-looking men were busy in unloading. On the top lay a fine turkey, attended by two pairs of fat chickens, all prepared for roasting, and sure to keep in this cold weather. Then came three barrels of apples, golden fall pippins and Spitzenbergs and Baldwins hard and sound for winter use. Next came five bushels of potatoes and underneath lay in square-ended logs, half a load of good hard fire wood.

"It's a present, parson, from the people down to the mills," said one of the men, as having finished unloading, and put all the things where the minister's one servant suggested, he first became aware of that gentleman himself, "an' I was ter say, least wise the ould 'ooman tould me ter, that its a Thanksgivin' present 'cause yer got the men to sign the pledge. Yer see we was that given to the drink that we didn't have nothin', not hardly enough to put in the babies' mouths, an' no shoes nor nothin' nice to send the childer to Sunday school in, and my ould 'ooman and me, we felt bad about it, because in the ould counthry they always went to the school where the genthry was, regular, an' whin the timperance spaker came along, Mike, that's the bhoy that lives forninst me, sez:

"'Pat,' sez he, 'if ye'll soign the pledge I will shure.'

"Thin, sez I, 'No shure, I wont, this is a free counthry, an' if the rich men is free to dhrink their wine an' their cider, I'm free to have my whisky an' my rum, shure.' But we wint to the matin', and when we saw you, parson, stip up an' sign the pledge, Mike sez:

"'Thar, now, Pat, there's one of the genthry signed away his liberty, just to set an example, for shure the minister isn't fond of the dhrink, so lets you an' me sign too;' an' we did, an' we got lots of other fellers in the mill ter sign, too. We've all kep' our pledge, for we're dacent people from the North, an' we'd be ashamed to go back on our word, an' somehow the money's stuck to us iver since. The homes look clane an' tidy now, and the childers got enough to ate, an' my ould 'ooman thought it would be nice-like fur us all to put together some o' our savins an' sind ye a Thanksgivin' present, 'cause we'd never 'a signed but for you."

"My dear fellow, I am very much obliged," said the impulsive minister, touched in his innermost sensibilities; "but do I know any of you, are you my people, do you come to my church?"

"We didn't use to go to tdr meetin' much, we men went to the tavern Sundays, and the women staid at home an' claned up. But we were well brought up at home, and afther givin' up dhrinking we got ter thinkin' o' the old times, an' some on' us have tended pretty reglar, yer might 'a seen us all together in the back seats. But it's a long way ter come, a matter of over two miles, an' the wimin an' children can't walk so far; besides we haven't all got good clothes to come among gentle folks. So we thought if we might be so bold, we'd ax yer to come over some time an' preach to us in the dryin' room of a Sunday after noon; the overseer sez we may have the use of it, an' we bhoys will fix up the seats."

"Come! of course I will, every Sunday afternoon, if you want me," said the pastor, his thanksgiving anthem swelling up at this opportunity for extended work in his Master's vineyard. And he kept his word, finding a most attentive and devout congregation, trained in the reverent churchliness of the Scotch Presbyterianism of the north of Ireland. He went again and again, and God greatly blessed his ministrations, pouring out a large spiritual baptism in answer to his prayers. From the "drying room" of the mill the fire spread to the church in the village, and multitudes of souls there openly professed the faith of Christ.

Years afterwards, when the temperance movement had taken its place among the other legitimate objects of Christian labor and prayer, and it was looked upon as a rather disgraceful thing in Poncocke for a church member to own a distillery, Parson Ely, standing with the popular side now, would often tell the story of the Thanksgiving of 18——, and pointing to the flourishing condition of his church, as well as of that which had been built at the mills, would offer to God thanksgiving for that "greatest mistake of his life."—*Margaret E. CHILDREN'S CORNER.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

The corn is in the barn, and the fruit is in the bin,
And the workers are away;
The world is cold without, but the fire is bright within,
For 'tis Thanksgiving Day.

The children's glowing cheeks are like apples round and red,
In their eyes mirth has its way;
In vain the elders shake the wise, reproving head,
It is Thanksgiving Day.

The mother smiles with pride on the tall son at her side,
Watching his babies at their play;
A daughter, lily fair, sings a good old meeting air,
For 'tis Thanksgiving Day.

Around the table spread with wondrous meats and bread,
Long time the revelers stay;
The nuts and games come last, while the old folks read the past,
For 'tis Thanksgiving Day.

Now, in the Holy Book they all together look,
And the grandsire kneels to pray;
Then most, when on the air falters that trembling prayer,
It is Thanksgiving Day.

A THANKSGIVING STORY.

"HE COULD NOT FORGET."

"Father, can't I get Isaac to help pile that lumber?"

"Isaac Martin? Why, John, he is twelve miles from here. Oh! there are plenty of boys right round here," and Mr. Baylass put on his overcoat and smoothed his silk hat to go to his office.

"I know that, father; but if you would let me get Isaac to help me for two or three weeks, he could earn a new suit of clothes," persisted the young son.

"Well, how will you get him here?"

"Ned is safe, and if you will let me take him I will have him here before sundown," and John looked very happy as he saw he would gain his father's consent.

"Well, John, drive slow, for the roads are bad," and Mr Baylass left the house.

While John is patiently yet joyfully plowing through the mud with a basket of "goodies" from his pantry for the "little Martins" we will introduce the reader to John and his family, and explain his acquaintance with Isaac Martin of "Cobtown."

Mr. Baylass was a very extensive lumber-dealer in the city of N——; he had a very elegant home on one of the finest avenues, and, better than all, he had a happy family, a good wife, and two bright children, John and Nellie. Nellie was a chubby, rollicking child; but John had always been delicate. His parents had kept him in the air and sunshine as much as possible and so he had spent hours in the lumber-yard, around his father's office. It was here he met his friend, Isaac Martin, who was his father's errand-boy. When not busy, he and John had fine times. They were hiding in the lumber or playing ball, and sometimes, though not often, sitting in the office chatting away like two girls. They had been together in this manner for nearly a year, when the Martin family, which was quite large and very poor, took a small piece of land to work in the country, twelve miles from N——, and John was almost heart-broken over the loss of his friend.

It was now nearly nine months since John had seen him. He thought it too bad the roads were so heavy and the horse, the only one he could drive, was such a slow affair. But then Isaac would have a new suit of clothes! and that would pay for all these vexations.

He was not quite certain of the house, though he had frequently ridden through that part of the country with his father. But that question was soon settled by the familiar appearance of old Bose, who came out from a little low shanty to warn all trespassers. His bark was suddenly turned into a whine of delight and his tail wagged most vigorously as he recognized his friend, who he doubtless remembered had given him many a good bone.

Forthwith the face of a Martin filled each small pane, and Isaac was helping him care for the horse.

While the little folks were eating and trading with each other the cakes, candies and sweetmeats from John's basket, he made known his errand.

"God bless you, Master John!" said the mother. "Isaac was just a-sayin' his clothes was gittin' shabby and he didn't see how he' git another; farmin's dull just now, you know."

"George," said the father, blowing his nose to hide his emotion, "you take Master John's basket and fill it with some of the nuts you gathered this fall. You'll not have a chance every day to divide with such a kind, thoughtful lad as him."

Isaac's clean blue shirt and socks, which the mother declared it fortunate she had washed the day before, were soon pressed and darned, and after a lunch of bread and butter and pumpkin pie, the two boys started for N——. They reached home before sundown and the next morning Isaac went to work.

John pleaded so earnestly that he was allowed to board at the Baylass mansion, though his parents yielded to this desire of their son rather unwillingly.

In the evening the children were together.

John would bring Isaac into the library, or he and Nellie, with their books and games were in the kitchen.

"I am glad Isaac is a good, manly boy," said Mr. Baylass to his wife, as he saw these things. "I know of nothing particularly against the family, though of course they are very poor. It seems strange John prefers Isaac's company to the Jeffrey boy's or Freddie Storrs', for they are more of our class."

"Yes, it is strange," replied Mrs. Baylass; "but it has always been so, and as long as Isaac is a boy of such good habits and disposition, and John is so young, I do not think we need to worry about it. Their friendship will last but a few years at the most."

Mrs. Baylass always took a very sensible view of matters, in which Mr. Baylass coincided.

A happier boy, we are sure, could not have been found than was John the day he carried Isaac home, in a new suit throughout, "from top to toe." How fine he looked to the brothers and sisters! How proud his parents were of him, and what copious blessings they showered upon "Master John," who had brought it all about.

"May you never come to want," they said to him as they tucked the robe around his feet, and raised the cover to the carriage, for a cold rain was coming for him to ride home in.

In a few months John overheard his father, while he was at the office, speak of another extra job he must get done. He at once proposed to engage Isaac. In fact he was always on the watch to help him.

He realized that Isaac found but little chance to pick up money on the small, sterile farm, that must keep so many. Finally, it came to be understood between Mr. Baylass and his son, that Isaac was to be hired for all extra jobs when practicable. And John never thought it any hardship, but rather a privilege, to drive the twelve miles for him, whether through rain or shine, heat or cold.

Matters continued this way for a year or two, until John was sent away to school, and the Martin family went West, when the boys, fast becoming young men, lost all track of each other.

* * * * * *

It was with a heavy heart that Mr. Baylass went home that evening. How could he tell his wife? A long time ago he had told he that his business worried him, that things looked dark for him; but of late he had kept every thing to himself, hoping matters would yet take a turn for the better. But the failure of several large lumber firms had embarrassed him, and now the crash had come, and everything would be swept from them.

"Why what is the matter, William?" asked Mrs. Baylass, as she ran to her husband, who almost fell, white and fainting, into his sleepy hollow that stood by the hall door.

"We are ruined, Mary," he said with great effort.

She understood, and brave, noble woman that she was, did all in her power to lift the load of affliction and make the sudden change in their circumstances endurable.

"And how will this affect John's business?" she asked that evening, as they sat before the glowing grate, in their beautiful, but now sad, home.

"Badly, badly enough. Poor boy! and his health is miserable, and his family of little ones. Too bad, too bad!" and Mr. Baylass broke down completely.

But the relentless, unpitying wheels of time and fortune soon found them in a very humble home, there to spend their declining years in the most rigid economy.

And but for the energetic Nellie, now teaching in one of the public schools of the city, they would have suffered want.

John grieved bitterly that his parents, so unused to hardship, must come to this, yet he was powerless to aid them, with his poor health and growing family.

* * * * * *

"Have you a directory, sir?" asked a very nice-appearing and well-dressed stranger of the hotel clerk after he had registered and been assigned to a room.

"B——, B——," said the stranger, half aloud, as his eye followed his finger down the long list of B's.

"Yes, sir; here is one."

"John Baylass, lumber, 247 Jefferson street. That must be the one. Can you tell me, sir, where Jefferson street is?"

"Jefferson, Jefferson," repeated the clerk, thoughtfully.

"I can," interrupted one of the bell-boys, "I lives there," and he gave the directions for finding it, wondering all the while what such a fine gentleman could want on Jefferson street.

After dinner, the stranger set out to find the place. It was a raw chilly day in November. The streets and cross-walks defied the lazy efforts of the street sweepers, and reveled in mud almost ankle-deep; but the gentleman did not seem to mind it as he wended his way to the car that ran to Jefferson street.

On and still on they went, and farther and farther out of the better portion of the city. He must be wrong for surely no lumber-merchant would live there.

"This is Jefferson street, mister!" said the conductor, as he rang the bell.

He followed the rather narrow street, with here and there a cottage, but mostly built up with tenement houses, until he came to "247," only a semi-respectable looking house.

"It's no use to inquire," said the stranger; "I know this can't be the place."

But as he turned to go back to the street car, the door opened and a gentleman, who was evidently a doctor, stepped outside, and he heard him say to the pale woman who followed him, "I cannot deceive you, madam; Mr. Baylass is failing fast."

Yes, this was the place, and had he needed more to convince him, he found it in the face of the little girl clinging to her mother's dress, so like her papa, with her bright eyes and her clustering curls.

He turned and went in. His quick eye took in everything at a glance—pinching poverty was written everywhere. And there over the wooden mantle, in woful contrast with the cheap paper on the wall, and their other surroundings, hung two very fine portraits of John Baylass' father and mother, taken in their prime. He had seen these same gilt frames before, but, oh, in such a different home. And he could not hide his emotion as he realized that some paralyzing blow had come to the fortunes of the family he had known only in their wealth and elegance.

Little Johnnie and Willie, before their mother could prevent, ran into the sick-room and told their papa that "there was a man out there that wiped his eyes when he looked at grandma and grandpa."

"Excuse me, madam," said the caller, recovering himself. "I used to be well acquainted with your husband, and if he is able I would like to see him for a few moments, at least."

But before Mrs. Baylass could speak there came a feeble voice from the sick man saying:

"Isaac Martin, can it be that that is you?"

Yes it was Isaac, as the reader has doubtless suspected. John's warm, true heart had carried the memory of his youthful playmate's voice all the twenty years; no greater, happier surprise, save that of health restored, could possibly have been his.

They talked over everything, all the ups and downs through which they had passed, as freely as though they had been boys again.

Mrs. Baylass greatly feared the result of so much excitement; but John seemed so happy she could not break in upon the interview with even a word of caution.

"And now, Isaac, what of yourself?" asked Mr. Baylass, after he had told him of his father's failure and sudden death soon after; his own steps down from the first lumber merchant in L—— to a bookkeeper and then a clerk, and then from sickness to poverty.

"I went West, as you know," said Mr. Martin, "and have seemed to be wonderfully prospered. John, the last money you rode twelve miles to help me earn, was the nest-egg of all my fortune. I invested that in pork; it raised in value, and I have seemed to be fortunate ever since."

"And, Isaac, are you the Martin of 'Martin & Co.,' of C——?"

"I suppose I am," modestly replied his friend."

"This is my first trip East in all these years. I found myself delayed here for twelve hours, and some good angel called to my remembrance that I had heard you were in business here, and I at once set about finding you. What a nice family of children you have; I have two, and my boy, I must tell you, is named John Baylass Martin."

As Mr. Martin bade them good-bye, he wished them a happy Thanksgiving on the morrow, and promised to call again on his return in about two weeks.

"Papa, papa, said Mary of twelve, in great delight, as she ran to the sick-room a few moments after Mr. Martin had closed the hall door. "Just see what he gave me for you and all of us!"

Their eyes were so full of tears they could scarcely see the shining twenty-dollar gold piece, Mary laid in her father's thin palm.

"He said to tell you he could not forget your kindness to him."

"What did you do for him, papa?" continued Mary.

"Dear children," said the mother, "you must wait until some other time, for your father is very tired now."

Before dusk that afternoon the delivery-wagon of the largest grocery store in town stopped at their house, attracting no little attention. Mrs. Baylass hastened to the door to tell the man he must be mistaken, when he presented her a receipted bill, telling her a stranger had ordered them sent there.

There was everything, from a barrel of flour to candies and raisins for the little folks.

"He's answered his own wish, hasn't he, mamma?" said the sage little Fred.

It is needless to say that Thanksgiving Day was a most joyful one in that humble home.

"The man has cured papa, hasn't he, mamma," said Susie, with tears in her eyes, for she could not remember ever seeing her papa look so happy, or eat so heartily.

Though the father's disease was of such a nature he cobid not live long, he had every comfort that money could buy, and his wife and children always found a true friend in Isaac Martin, who could not forget their father's kindness to him when a poor boy.—Interior.

LITTLE HEADS TOGETHER.

A THANKSGIVING PUZZLE.

(Half of a town near Otsego Lake), (a town in Georgia), little (an isle near France) and (a city in Australia) lived in a pleasant part of New York city. Much as they enjoyed playing, going with their parents to the Central Park to see the animals, and going to the (a body of water)-shore in the (one of the seasons), there was nothing they looked forward to with so much pleasure as visiting their grandmother at Thanksgiving time.

For a (part of the year) before the eventful day, the three little girls would (a project) and talk about what they would do at grandma's; and (a city in Australia), although he did not talk so much about it, yet thought the same as the little girls.

They rode to their grandmother's in a (to kill), as (mountains in Africa) fell before Thanksgiving day. When they arrived at the (something that opens) of the (an animal) old homestead, so many (insects), uncles, cousins, and even grandpa and grandma, came out to welcome them, that it was a wonder that they all got into the house as soon as they did. They were soon settled by the open (part of a lake north of the United States—an island near Long Island), and all the sisters, brothers and cousins were talking to each other. There was always so much to say when they met.

Soon after supper the little ones were put to bed, that they might be up bright and early. Oh! what a good time they had the next day. After church they skated on the (body of water) near grandma's, and then what a dinner they had! Like all grandma's dinners, the (country in Asia) was browned to perfection. They had a (an animal noted in Roman history), chicken, (part of the face), sausage, (the plural of a lake in New York), (the plural of a river in one of the New England States), (a grain), (a vegetable introduced into England by Sir Walter Raleigh), (an old mother who had a poor dog) squash, celery, (a hydraulic engine, relatives—something associated with printers) and (something used by cooks and the fruit of a tree).

Some of the cousins ate more than was prudent, but after the games and merry romps that they played, they had a good appetite for the supper at eight o'clock, and did justice to the (fruit of a tree), (fruit) and (something cooks use—the fruit of a tree) by the great (island near Long Island), while grandpa told stories of the days when he was young. Altogether, they had a very pleasant day, as happy as they had expected. I hope all the Little Heads will have one as pleasant.—Ex.

TEMPERANCE.

THE TRAFFIC ARRAIGNED.

Speaking of the liquor traffic, John B. Gough uses the following strong language:

"All the while the measure of its success depends on the deterioration, physical, mental, social, commercial and moral, of the entire nation, and on the utter ruin of an enormous number of thinking, feeling, suffering persons. There is not a beneficial business or a reputable profession anywhere in the land that has not authoritatively admitted these facts.

"If the nation acted on the confessed sober thought of its representative men in every other walk in life, they would feel compelled to drive this trade from the fair face of this country, as they would a pirate from our seas and oceans. It is the pirate against all righteous business. The greatest kindness to those engaged in it, and to all connected with them, is to compel them to take to other occupations. Such a course will surely add to instead of deducting from the value of all other business, and, even though these other occupations do not bring in 200 per cent profit, yet they will not be sending many thousands every year, of all ranks, to dishonest graves, or to a life worse than death. Fire is a thing to be respected; but when it is claimed right to legalize a use of it that sets into a blaze multitudes of homes, and destroys multitudes of minds that might otherwise be stars in the firmament of this nation's intellect, leaving only the white ashes of desolation as its best result, ought we to do nothing to prevent it?"

TERRIBLE FRUITS OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

The damages caused by intoxicating drinks, says the N. Y. Witness, appear in endless variety of disease, starvation, brawls, fires, shipwrecks, beggars, tramps, homicides, murders, etc., etc. The following story from Glasgow is the latest and most remarkable instance of the terrible damage that may be done by an intoxicated person. When will society have the common sense to free itself from these endless and most expensive troubles by prohibition of the liquor traffic?

GLASGOW, Nov. 1.—A serious panic occurred this evening at the Star theatre, caused by a cry of fire being raised. In the rush by the audience to escape from the building, sixteen people were killed and twelve more seriously hurt. Shortly after nine o'clock some person shouted "Fire!" The whole audience instantly made a rush for the several doors. The great mass of people who occupied the pit, in escaping therefrom, met the crowd that was descending from the gallery and a fearful block ensued. Loud cries of distress and shouts for help arose from the mass of panic stricken and struggling humanity. The crowd frantically rushed toward the outlets, trampling and jumping over each other until the theatre was finally cleared. Sixteen corpses were found on the stairs leading from the gallery, and twelve persons were so badly injured that they only gave evidence that life was not extinct by their moauings. The police force, aided by volunteers, endeavored to keep the entry clear by aiding all that could to escape to the street, but the crowd was so large that the officers were interfered with in their labors. The number in the theatre was esmated at 2,000.

GLASGOW, Nov. 2.—The man whose cry of "Fire!" caused a panic in the Star theatre last evening has been arrested. He was drunk when he raised the false alarm. Persons who were in the theatre at the time describe the scene on the staircase as terrible. The steps were strewn with ribbons, hats, cloaks, and shawls. The victims were first suffocated and then trampled to death. The panic lasted fifteen minutes. It is a noteworthy fact that the authorities had disapproved the means of exit from the gallery. The scenes witnessed when the relations identified the dead were most affecting. Among the victims were eight females.

THE CHURCHES.

— Prcs. C. A. Blanchard preached in Chicago Avenue church, this city, last Sabbath, after an absence of several weeks.

— This church, as usual, make a special Thanksgiving scrvice. Provisions are to be distributed to the poor. Donations of provisions or money will be received by a committee on Wednesday.

—The committees appointed by the ministers' meetings of Chicago met Monday afternoon of last week in Farwell Hall to consider the proposed night missions for the reclamation of young girls of the city. Mr. Allen, of New York, was present and spoke at length of the work, showing how aid might be rendered to these girls and to others, men and women, who were forced to be at work in the night. Resolutions were adopted expressing sympathy with Mr. Allen in his work.

— The treasurer's report of the Methodist Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, recently in annual session in Baltimore, showed the following receipts for the year: New England branch, $17,261.86; New York branch, $25,292.88; Philadelphia branch, $16,875 53; Baltimore branch, $7,674.98; Cincinnati branch, $21,138.74; Minnesota branch, $3,811.25; Topeka branch, $5,147.36; Des Moines branch, $9,564.03; Northwestern branch, $35,831.-91. Total, $143,199.14. Increase, $16,375 81.

—By the late dynamite explosion at Strouchburg, Pa., the Lutheran church of that place was badly wrecked. It was a fine stone building, and worth about $15,000. The roof is in an adjoining field, the 100 foot spire is in ruins on the ground, and every window and door is gone.

—The former railroad king and millionaire, Henry Villard, of the Northern Pacific road, is a German who came to this country quite young. He has recently established a new deaconesses' house in 8peyer, Germany, "as a memorial of his good and faithful mother and her sister, who is united with her in the great beyond. "This is the second establishment of this sort in Speyer.

—The Swedish Lutheran college and seminary at Rock Island, Ill., says the Lutheran Standard, are full of students and overflowing, to the discomfort but also to the joy of the professors. The corner-stone of the new college building was laid November 6th, with solemn and imposing services. The Ladies' Seminary is also prospering. The Book Concern has moved into their fine new building near the college, and are keeping press and bindery hard at work to fill the heavy orders for their publications.

—A new mission to the Jews is about to be established in Tiberias by the Frec church of Scotland, to be called "The Sea of Galilee Medical Mission." The report given to the "Assembly" by the deputies who had been appointed to visit Palestine to consider the prospects of Jewish missions there, was very encouraging in its character. They stated that the younger Jews were manifesting a spirit of restlessness and inquiry, and an impatience of Talmudical authority which made them specially open to efforts for their enlightenment on Christian truth.

—The Morning Star, the new missionary ship, is expected to complete her voyage to Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, in December.

—There was an addition of twenty thousand pupils to the schools of the Norwegian missions in the interior of Madagascar last year.

—It is reported that two Chinese women, educated by missionaries and sent to San Francisco to do mission work in that city, have been sent back to China under the law forbidding Chinese immigration.

—The General Baptist Missionary Society of England, whose missions are in Orissa, India, and Rome, Italy, reports thirteen missionaries and twenty-three native preachers among the 7,000,000 who speak the Oriya language, and one missionary and one native evangelist in Rome. The membership in Orissa is 1,222. Last year eighty converts were baptized, and a vast amount of literature circulated.

— Dr. Murdock, who has labored some twenty years in India and Ceylon in connection with the London Tract Society, declares that European skepticism is becoming more and more the antagonist of missionary effort in the cities of India. Madras is now the headquarters of a society managed by American infidels. It has two "free thought" weekly papers, in which religion is called a "cancer," and Christians "superstitious fools." His fears accord with those of the Japanese missionary who dreads "native heathenism" less than "imported infidelity."

—Another successful missionary has fallen a martyr to the climate of West Africa. William Allakura Sharpe, who was born on that coast, of Moslem parents, was for some time a slave, was set free and educated by a Washington missionary in Lagos, has passed away. After his conversion his great desire was to go up the Niger, where his parents lived, to induce then to accept the Christian religion. He made a search but never found them; but he had the satisfaction of preaching on the Niger, and of proclaiming to many the excellence of the gospel.

— Edward Hine, the apostle of Anglo-Israelism, started for the United States October 1. He proposes to make a lecturing tour of the States and then go to Australia. It is said that he has secured proofs, which seem to him irrefutable, of the identity of the English people with the lost tribes of Israel, and hopes to be able to convert the American people to this view.

— All who are interested in the welfare of the children will be pleased that the American Sunday School Union has gathered 398 new Sunday schools in the Northwest since the season opened, and induced 1,581 teachers and 12,977 scholars to attend them, besides aiding 702 old schools, which have a membership of 3,268 scholars. It supplied 3,268 persons with Bibles and Testaments, and placed in those communities religious literature valued at $4,042. The last annual report of the society can be had free by application to F. G. Ensign, 150 Madison street, Chicago.

— The Methodist Protestant Year Book for 1884 gives the following statistics for the year past: Annual conferences, 48; itinerant ministers, 1,409, being a gain of 51; local ministers, 977; lay members in full membership, 121,853, a gain of 2,885; probationers, 3,758; total lay membership, 125,611; number of churches, 1,318, being a gain of 342; number of parsonages, 300, being an increase of 10; value of churches and parsonages, $2,988,-490; number of Sunday schools, 1,624, being a loss of 24; teachers and officers, 14,222, a loss of 4,255; scholars, 83,-222, a loss of 7,480; missionary collections, $7,475, a gain of $2,718; ministerial education, $3,183; churches reported built during the year, 95, at an average value of $1,907 each; parsonages built during the ycar, 22, valued at $25,234.

— The following vessels are owned by missionary societies: The John Williams, in the South Seas; the Ellen Gowan and Mary, in New Guinea; the Good News and the steel life-boat Morning Star, of Lake Tanganyika, all of the London Missionary Society; the Dayspring, for New Hebrides, of the Free Church of Scotland; the Henry Wright, of the Church Missionary Society; Illala, of Lake Nyassa; the John Brown, for the Mendi Mission of the United Brethren; the Morning Star, of the American Board, for the Pacific seas and Micronesia; and the Allen Gardiner, recently built for the use of the South American Missionary Society.

THE LUTHERAN CHURCH.

The Lutheran Book Concern, at Columbus, O., has recently compiled complete statistics of the Lutheran church in the United States. There are altogether in this country 56 different Lutheran synods, separated from each other by geographical, doctrinal or language lines. There are four larger organizations, namely, the Synodical Conference, with 934 pastors, 1,253 congregations and 265,-202 communicants, representing the extreme conservative side of the church; the General Synod North, with 849 pastors, 1,301 congregations and 129,164 communicants, representing the liberal branch; the General Council, with 721 pastors, 1,319 congregations and 205,806 communicants, occupying a middle ground, but daily becoming more and more conservative, and the General Synod South, with 108 pastors, 187 congregations and 14,336 communicants, inclining partly to the General Synod North and partly to the General Synod South. Besides these, there are 13 synods in no official connection with other bodies, numbering 1,124 pastors, 201 parochial teachers, 2,251 congregations and 261,724 communicants. The grand total for the whole Lutheran church in America is 3,736 pastors, 779 teachers, 6,302 congregations and 873,382 communicants. It is certainly the most polyglot communion in America; embracing Americans, Germans, Swedes, Norwegians, Danes, Finns, Hungarians. It sustains 31 academies, 18 colleges, 19 theological seminaries, 14 ladies' seminaries, 34 benevolent institutions, such as orphans' homes, hospitals, infirmaries, homes for the aged, deaf and dumb institutions, and the like, and 19 publication houses. As a church, the Lutheran is poor in this world's goods, and probably not a single one of her many institutions is satisfactorily endowed. Ncarly all live from hand to mouth, being sustained by collections and gifts from the various bodies under whose control they are. As a factor in American church and public life, the Lutheran church is as yet not very powerful, probably because the majority of her people speak a strange tongue and belong to the lowly of the land. It may be a generation or two before this church will command anything like the influence in America that she does in Germany and Northern Europe, where the scholarship of Protestantism is in her hands. For the present, and even for decades to come, her main mission will be to gather into the fold and see to the spiritual wants of the thousands of her members who come over yearly from the European shores to find a home in America. The various synods vie with each other in this good work, and much is being done. But yet the harvest is great and the workmen few. —Independent.

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

OBITUARY.

REV. JESSE RENFRO was born in Lincoln county, Kentucky, September 22, 1796. In 1810, when 14 years old, the family came to Illinois. They spent the winter of 1810–11 in Ridge Prairie, three miles south of Troy, a short distance from Downing's station, a post erected for the protection of the settlers against the Indians, in the edge of the present county of St. Clair. His father, James Renfro, a Baptist minister, in the fall of 1810 died, while on a visit to Kentucky. In the spring of 1814, Jesse Renfro, then not quite 18, enlisted as a mounted ranger in Captain Whiteside's company, which was engaged in protecting the frontier settlements. He served as a ranger one year, and six months more in the militia service. He was the fourth child in the family of eleven. September 4, 1817, he was married to Letty West, a daughter of Isaac West, onc of the pioneer settlers of the present Collinsville township. At the close of the war he received a pension. He was the father of thirteen children, five sons and eight daughters. Two daughters and three sons still survive. When thirty years old he was converted and joined the Methodist church. Soon after he was licensed to preach. At the conference in St. Louis October 8, 1843, he was ordained deacon by Bishop Andrews, and September 17, 1848, at Belleville, Ill., he was ordained elder, by Bishop Morris. He lived to see his children of the fourth generation. He lived to celebrate his golden and diamond weddings. At his diamond wedding dinner there were present one hundred of his descendants and many friends and neighbors. At an early day he was preacher, school teacher and justice of the peace. For sixty-five years he and his wife lived happily together. He expressed a strong desire to live long enough to give his vote for prohibition.

He was a strong opposer of all secret societies and was very outspoken. He refused to support ministers who were members of secret lodges. At one time he subscribed for a number of copies of the Cynosure, and sent them to prominent Masons, Oddfellows, and others. He had collected quite a library of anti-secret books for loaning. He had exhibited in Troy by J. F. Browne and Starry, at his own expense, the first and third degrees of Masonry. When he saw his end was near, he gave his library of anti-secret books to Rev. Laughlin, then pastor of the Troy M. E. church. He had lived sixty years in the same house, which he had built. We can truly say of Jesse Renfro, "a prince, and a great man has fallen in Israel," and who shall take his place?

As he was breathing his last, he was asked, "Is all well?" A pleasant smile played over his face, and all was still. The going down of his sun was like the setting of a summer's sun, without a storm and without a cloud. His age was 88 years and 15 days. The funeral services were held at the house, conducted by Rev. J. Borland of the M. E. church and Rev. T. W. B. Dawson of the Baptist church of Troy. Text, Rev. 16:13: "I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; yea, saith the Spirit, That they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." T. W. B. DAWSON, SR.

HENRY M. HULETT, for a number of years connected with the Cynosure as compositor or foreman, died at his house on Perry Avenuc, just outside the limits of Chicago, on Sunday, November 9th, in the 48th year of his age. He was born in Rochester, N. Y., and for the greater part of his life followed the "art preservative of arts" with success.

In 1860–61, during the Pike's Peak fever, he joined the human tide for the new Eldorado, and met with varying success in the mining districts, where he took some claims and endured many hardships. When Denver became a city he was engaged as manager of the first daily paper office, and carried on a large and important business successfully.

Mrs. Hulett, who was a compositor like himself, or some of her relatives, have been, with the exception of a brief period, engaged in setting up the Cynosure ever since the great fire, now some thir teen years; and the readers of the paper are therefore much indebted to their faithful labors; and although the printers' trade is largely controlled by the secret union in the cities they have always shown a warm interest in the Christian reform which they so materially but unostentatiously assisted.

ACTION OF THE W. C. T. U. OF WHEATON on the death of Mrs. M. E. Blanchard:

WHEREAS, Our dear sister, Mrs. M. E. Blanchard, has been called away by death, we feel that our society has lost a friend whose prayers were an inspiration, and whose words and acts were always in the interest of suffering humanity and the cause of Christ,

Resolved, That, while we recognize the loss the church, the community, the College, and the Benevolent Society of which she was President, sustain, we extend our especial sympathy to the family of the departed, and we who are left to labor on will not soon forget the example of patience in the last hours of suffering, and the interest she manifested in the salvation of those around her and for the good of our cause and country. TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS.

The Christian Cynosure will be sent to any address eight weeks on receipt of twenty-five cents.

Much of the progress made in this reform has been through individual efforts of old subscribers in introducing the Cynosure to their friends and neighbors. A single Cynosure sent by some old subscriber has been the means not only of securing a permanent subscriber to the paper, but also of setting to work agencies which have evangelized whole neigh borhoods, and have broken the backbone of lodge power in that community.

Those who have sent in trial subscribers for the campaign will begin now to secure them for the balance of the year. Write for special terms.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S L Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, hy attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each: per dozen $1.25

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and TENDENCY OF FREEMASONRY. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scriptnre, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen 75 cents.

FARM NOTES.

WHEN THE FROST IS ON THE PUNKIN.

When the frost is on the punkin and the fodder's in the shock,
And you hear the kyouck and gobble of the struttin' turkey-cock,
And the clackin' of the guineys and the cluckin' of the hens,
And the rooster's hallylooycr as he tiptoes on the fencc;
O, it's then's the time a feller is a feelin' at his best,
With the risin' sun to greet him from a night of gracious rest,
As he leavcs the house hareheaded and goes out to feed the stock,
When the frost is on the punkin and the fodder's in the shock.

They's somekin' kind o' hearty-like about the atmosphere,
When the heat of summer's over and the coolin' fall is here—
Of course we miss the flowers and the blossoms on the trees,
And the mumble of the hummin' birds and huzzin' of the bees;
But the air's so apertizin', and the landscape through the haze
Of a crisp and sunny morning of the early autumn days
Is a picture that no painter has the colorin' to mock
When the frost is on the punkin and the fodder's in the shock.

The husky, rusty rustle of the tossols of the corn,
And the raspin' of the tangled leaves, as golden as the morn;
The stuhhle in the furries kind o' lonesome-like, hut still
A-preachin' sermons to us of the harns they grow'd to fill;
The strawstack in the medder and the reaper in the shed:
The hosses in their stalls below, the clover overhead;
O, it sets my heart a-clickin' like the tickin' of a clock,
When the frost is on the punkin and the fodder's in the shock.

WHAT IS A BUSHEL OF INDIAN CORN?

All grains in their natural state contain more or less water, the amount depending upon the conditions by which they have been surrounded. In Indian corn the moisture may reach as high as fifty per cent, and probably never falls much below twenty per cent at the time of harvest. Unfortunately but little is known of the exact composition of grains as they come from the harvest field. All published analyses give the moisture content as the sample came to the chemist, but usually omit to state its age or manner of curing. Professor Brewer's special census report on the cereals gives ninety-eight analyses of all varieties of Indian corn, having an average of eleven per cent of water, with a range of from 4.10 to 20.08 per cent, but most of the samples were undoubtedly taken from well-cured corn.

The curing process of Indian corn has been made the subject of careful experiment at Houghton farm. Samples are selected at the harvest from each of the thirty-one experimental corn plots, and being grown with as many different manures, represent a wide range of composition. These samples are then stored upon suspended racks and under conditions which allow of rapid drying, and weighed at regular intervals during the succeeding year.

There is a loss of from 10 to 15 per cent of moisture during the year, and a weighed bushel at the end of this time contains this amount of moisture less and an equal quantity of solid matter more than the weighed bushel at harvest, yet the legal weight, 56 pounds in most of the States, remains the same for both conditions. The only departure from this occurs in Ohio, where a legal bushel of corn on the ear weighs 70 pounds from harvest to January 1, and 68 pounds from that time on. At Houghton farm the 31 lots of Indian corn, selected from the crop of 1882, gave in December following the harvest, an average weight per bushel of 54.1 pounds. The following April, bushels from the same lot averaged 52 pounds; in July, 53.4 pounds; and in October, one year from harvest, 55.4 pounds. The crop of 1881 was followed through a similar series of changes, and averaged 55.5 pounds per bushel, one year from harvest; hence Indian corn does not reach a standard weight per bushel, until after a year's drying. In business this is important. The increase of two pounds from July to October was a gain of 3.7 per cent in value if sold by weight, but not taken into account if sold by measure.—American Agriculturist.

OVER-FEEDING.

Over-feeding is one of the common injuries to horses, says a writer in the New York Tribune. All cannot be fed alike. Dyspepsia is a frequent disease with them. When a horse is wind-broken, heavy or has indications of either trouble, he should be given but little hay, and this should always be wetted. In all cases it is better to give cut feed and wet. Such horses should never be over-loaded, over-driven, or obliged to do anything that requires excessive action of the lungs. There is no "cure" for a wind-broken horse. Many an old horse has died of starvation because he could not grind his food, which with a little dentistry would have lived and done well for years. In such cases the front teeth should be shortened so that the grinders can work together. Old horses, often, and horses that are not old, have jagged or rough teeth, which prevent them from eating well. These teeth should be smoothed with a file, or a float, an instrument made for the purpose.

Mr. Edward Atkinson, of Brooklyn, is keeping three cows on what he raises from one-half an acre of ground. The system of ensilage does it.

A wind-break, properly arranged near a strawberry bed, will cause the snow to lodge on it. This makes the best protection for the winter that can be had.

Lime should only be applied in a finely divided condition, and not in small lumps, as is frequently the case. The finer the more immediate its action.

Mr. Furguson, a breeder of Polled Angus cattle at Kinnochtry, Scotland, has refused $5,000 for four of the choicest of his cows, exhibited at recent shows.

At the last meeting of the New York Dairymen's Association it was stated that there were 1,500,000 cows in the State, the product of which amounted to $100,000,000 annually at the least.

"SCRIP and STAFF."

BY H. M. HUGUNIN.

This new and attractive volume is now ready. It is composed of thirty-nine chapters on nearly as many topics. Neatly bound in cloth with gilt stamp. Price 60 cents.

The Chicago Evening Journal of May 3, says:

The author of this little volume, for many years a working editor of the EVENING JOURNAL, has here presented us with a variety of topics of a religious character. Among the number we note "The Evils of the Sunday Newspaper," "The Divine Sanction of Church Organizations," "The Good Work and Government of Sunday-Schools," "The Bible in our Public Schools," "Fallacies of the 'Evolution Theory,'" "Chronology—The Age of the World," and "Labor and Laborers." Mr. Huguniu writes as an independent thinker, untrammeled by denominational alignments. His style, however, is marked by the vigor of earnestness and sincerity, and with these characteristics, and with a close adherence to Bible Christianity, his book becomes a suggestive aid to evangelical workers. In discussing the topics above named, as in others, he deals consistently with questions of public interest and great importance in the reform of individual and social evils.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

The Master's Carpet

HOME HINTS.

A PLEA FOR FARMERS' WIVES.

Having seen in several papers, lately, articles concerning reform on the farm, it occurs to me that the root of the matter has not been touched—namely, the treatment of the farmer's wife. Too often is she regarded, we might say, as almost a mere machine, calculated to do so much work a day. The household, the garden, the dairy, the poultry yard and the children (who necessarily are more or less neglected) come within her sphere. She works from sunrise to sunset, until at last her poor, tired form is laid in its final rest.

But lay aside this phase of the matter, and take into consideration that for the farm to be at its best the future men of the farm must be of the intelligent class. This must be mainly brought about by the mother. It is she who must begin the boy's education and stimulate him all through his boyhood. And is not this the highest duty of the farmer's wife? Will it not in the end accomplish more and pay better than all the butter and eggs she can sell? She has the advantage of having her boys with her, which the mother of the town boy has not. The resources of the farmer's son are necessarily at home. He cannot, like the town boy, seek his friends and pass the evening, perhaps, in mischief. And if in the evening he can read and talk over with his mother some good work, she interests his mind in the right direction. But unless the mother's burdens are lightened this cannot be.

Ask yourselves, farmers, how many of you have thought of this? How many of you would rather have your wives when you come in ready to talk over with you and your boys and your girls the topics of the day, instead of being in the kitchen until bed-time?

This is not a picture of all farmers' wives. But it is to be lamented that there are any who drag out such a spiritless existence.

When traveling a short time ago, I was in the vicinity of two young lady schoolteachers, returning to their homes for vacation, and relating their experience to each other. Their schools were both in the country. One of them told of her good fortune in securing a good boarding place. She said it was so different from any other she had ever found—the family was so refined and educated, and their tastes so congenial to hers. The reason was, the mother was a school-teacher! I was both amused and somewhat indignant at her disrespect for the learning of farmers' wives in general, being one myself. But let the wife and mother at the farm have more leisure time, and the farm-house will contain the pleasantest and most refined home to be found.—Country Gentleman.

SCRAP-BOOKS.

The scrap-book is a useful friend, and you owe it to yourself and the children to have one. I find a half dozen not only useful but necessary. I want one for bits of missionary news and jottings of personal interest from the foreign field. Scattered through the religious papers and magazines are many articles of real value, and to find the information which they give in brief and comprehensive form I should have to go through libraries or ransack encyclopedias. She who has her carefully-kept missionary scrapbook, properly indexed, will never be at a loss when called upon to lead a meeting, or to assist in entertaining a circle of young people with something more serious than mere frivolities.

I want a scrap-book for poetry. Some of the sweetest and most comforting strains in the language are floating about in the newspapers, waifs of song, fragments which will never find their way into volumes, but which do find an open door to many a weary heart.

A scrap-book for receipts is exceedingly "handy" to the house-keeper.

To the Sunday-school teacher a scrapbook filled with short anecdotes, stories, illustrations and notes on the various lessons, is beyond price. It grows imperceptibly, costing only a few moments now and then, but, like all growths, it becomes very precious after awhile.

A charming scrap-book might be made containing only thoughts for devotional seasons, culled from many sources, sometimes from a quaint old divine, and again from a modern sermon or a suggestive editorial.

The children's scrap-book should be rather miscellaneous, and they should be allowed to make their own selections for its pages.

It is a good plan to cut out, paste in a book and keep for reference the notices and reviews of current literature which appear in the daily or the religious journal. These notices give you a good idea of the books that are coming out. You cannot possibly read them all, but you want to know something about their general scope. When you can treat yourself to a book, there is your scrap-book to aid you in buying intelligently. Books should be selected for the family collection with great care. And now let us hear our first correspondent this week.—Christian Intelligencer.

PRICE, FIFTEEN CENTS. Ten for a dollar.

A Wonderful Woman,

A Wonderful Life,

AND

A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Flizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

Her book is neither fiction nor founded on fiction, but is an interesting narration of facts of a most thrilling character, as every one will find and testify who will get and read her book, now on sale at the Cynosure office, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill. Price, cloth, $1,75; half Russia, $2.25.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness. The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

BATAVIA CONVENTION PAMPHLET.

A Staggering Blow!

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in BATAVIA, N. Y., September, 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freedmen and Secret Societies" by Rev H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

COUNTRY.

—A conflagration caused by torchlights and fireworks used by Democrats, destroyed a large portion of the business section of Hickman, Ky., Wednesday night, the loss reaching $125,000.

—Carriage hardware manufacturers representing $4,000,000 capital formed a National association Thursday, at Meriden, Conn., and decided upon a pooling combination for the restriction of goods placed upon the market.

—Fifty Chiricahua Indians raided a ranch in Presidio county, Texas, murdered Mr. and Mrs. Petty, and carried off three children, whom it is believed they also killed. They looted the district through which they passed, and slew a mining engineer. Troops are in pursuit.

—The school superintendents of Massachusetts resolved, at Boston, Friday, in favor of opening all the schools in the State for night sessions; it being shown that 90,000 persons can not read and write.

—Students at Harvard have begun an effort to make attendance at morning chapel voluntary for men twenty-one years old, and optional with parents for students under that age. The co-operation of Harvard graduates throughout the country will be invoked.

—At New York, Friday, the Rev. W. H. Ramscar, superintendent of the Home for Children and Seminary for Girls, was convicted of sending children out to beg, and sentenced to thirty days in the city prison and be fined $100.

—The telegraph brings the news that the Great Eastern steamship will shortly leave London with a collection of exhibits for the World's Exposition at New Orleans. It is understood that the Great Eastern, the largest ship afloat, will remain at the wharf adjoining the City Park till June next, and that she will then carry back to England such exhibits as remain unsold when the Exposition closes.

—At New York, Thursday, the suit of the Lamar estate against the Secretary of the Treasury to recover $110,000 for cotton taken during the war, was dismissed in the United States District Court.

—For refusing to take out a license under the Downing law sixty saloon-keepers at St. Joseph, Mo., were fined, Monday, $200 each, and will not be given a license for two years. A number of similar cases are pending, and the decision of Judge Grub has caused consternation.

—The fire at Goldsboro, N. C., destroyed twenty-seven buildings and 300 bales of cotton. The loss is said to be $300,000, with insurance amounting to $200,000.

—The steamer Captain Sam, plying between Montgomery, Ala., and Selina, exploded its boiler. The boat was badly wrecked. About twenty-five people were on the boat, and Captain English and several of the crew were hurt. Five people are missing, including the little daughter of the captain.

—Three children of John Roader perished by fire in his farm-house, near Vassar, Mich., on Thursday, while the parents were at work in the fields.

—The strange disease reported Wednesday as prevailing in Virginia, also exists in Kentucky and West Virginia, where whole families have been swept away, and thirty or more new graves are seen in a small cemetery. The people call it cholera, for want of a better name, and the malady upholds its dreadful title, victims, upon being seized, seldom living longer than twenty-four hours. It is said the scourge affected majorities in some precincts at the recent election. Numerous corpses have been left unburied, and the stench from the decaying carcasses of animals pollutes the air. Flour, corn and meal are needed to succor the starving population, and unless rain falls annihilation may be anticipated.

FOREIGN.

—Excitement prevails in the Mexican capital over the question of the conversion of the English debt. Opponents of the bill claim the extra issue of £2,500,000, authorized over and above the amount to be devoted to the conversion, is a "grand steal," and that Mexico will be unable to meet the interest. Crowds gathered shouting, "Death to Gonzales"—the outgoing President. Although the crowds were unarmed, they were needlessly fired upon by soldiers, and a few persons killed or wounded. A crowd in front of the residence of General Diaz, the incoming President, called for him to appear and state his position, but he made no response.

—A snowstorm raged all day Thursday at Quebec, with the thermometer at zero.

—A French transport will sail for New York in May next with Bartholdi's statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World."

—A Paris dispatch says the Chinese Government offers France 75,000,000 francs in settlement of claims, but France demands 1,250,000,000 francs. Two new Chinese ironclads have arrived at Shanghai.

—In the Congo Conference, in session at Berlin, John A. Kasson, the American Minister to Germany, announced that Henry M. Stanley, the African explorer, had been appointed technical delegate to the conference for America.

—Dispatches received at the State Department from Paris announce that the French Government is in earnest in its proposed legislation against breadstuffs and hog products imported from the United States. The Tariff Committee of the House of Deputies have had under consideration a measure to impose import duties on the American products named, and have adopted it by a vote of 6 to 5. The opinion is expressed that the committee's measure will create a lively discussion in the Chamber, but that it will be ultimately adopted. Should France impose duties upon American breadstuffs and hog products, it is quite probable that Prince Bismarck will induce the Reichstag to follow this lead.

—Twenty-seven cases of small-pox occurred Thursday in the village of Sioco, Canada, and business is entirely suspended. At certain railway stations intending travelers can not procure tickets unless they show clean bills of health.

SERMONS AND ADDRESSES.

Sermon on Secretism, by Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen. 50 cents.

Prof. J. G. Carson, D. D., on Secret Societies. A most convincing argument against fellowshiping Freemasons in the Christian church. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

ONLY 15 CTS. for 3 FRENCH DOLLS
WITH AN ELEGANT WARDROBE OF 32 PIECES.

Consisting of Reception Dresses, Evening Dresses, Street Costumes, Morning Dresses, Cloaks, Hats and Bonnets, Hand Satchels, Sun Umbrellas, Music Portfolios, Overcoats, Sailor Suits, Military Suits and Drums, Street Jackets and Dress Suits, Watering Place Suits, Traveling Costumes, etc. These dresses and suits in this elegant wardrobe represent Nine Different Colors, and they are lovely beyond description, several of them being from designs by Worth, of Paris. There is one little Boy and two Girl dolls in each set, with pretty faces and life-like beautiful features, and their wardrobe being so extensive that it takes hours to dress and undress them in their different suits. Every child, and in fact every mother that has seen them go into ecstasies over them. Children will get more real enjoyment out of a set of these French Dolls than out of articles that cost $10. Every person that buys them sends immediately for more. A lady writes us that her little boy and girl played for five hours with a set of these French Dolls, and they felt very bad indeed to think that they must stop and eat their supper, and if mothers only knew how much amusement there is in these dolls they would not only give 15 cents but 50 cents for them rather than not have them. Sample set, consisting of three dolls with their wardrobe of 32 pieces by mail, postpaid, for 15 cents; two sets, 6 dolls, 64 pieces, for 25 cts. Ten sets for $1. If you send for one or two sets we will send our Secret Method and Full Directions how you can make more than One Hundred Dollars a month out of these dolls. This is an opportunity too valuable for you to lose. Address FRANK O. WEHOSKEY, PROVIDENCE, R. I.

So many reports of cutting down wages and closing factories, mills and mines were printed just after the result of the election became known, that there was some appearance of conspiracy to effect business. There are some evidences of reviving business. The Pittsburgh iron mills, which are a gauge for immense business interests, show a revival in trade, large orders creating a hopeful feeling. The orders for shutting off work in the coal regions is also likely to be countermanded, because of an unexpected demand. Yet there are thousands enough in want as the winter closes in. It is estimated that in Chicago alone there are thirty thousand men, women and children out of work, and appeals for human sympathy and aid speak at every corner.

The action of the British Parliament this week will be noted with deep interest around the globe. The extension of general suffrage, increasing the number of voters from three millions to five, is a step toward republicanism that, while looked upon narrowly by the supporters of monarchy, should thrill the hearts of all who uphold the equal rights of mankind. The great and permanent gain this act will give to the liberal party eclipses any temporary check that may come from the redistribution of parliamentary seats, which may send some seventy members home. The latest news from England informs us that Lord Salisbury, leader of the Tory opposition, has surprised the ministry by consenting to a more radical scheme of redistribution than Gladstone proposed, and the only opposition will come from the ultra minds of both parties.

The faculty of Harvard College have a committee of three on athletics which has issued decrees of late that are more despotic, if possible, than the so-called sumptuary laws that hedge the way of the philanthropic saloonist. They have forbidden the students to play foot-ball and will not allow the boat clubs to employ a professional trainer. Loud is the wail of the young men at this curtailing of their privileges. They see Harvard withdrawn, beaten and disgraced from the annual races, and they can no longer indulge the savage pleasure of biting, kicking, scratching, pushing and mauling each other in foot-ball matches. But the greatest good of the institution, of the students, and of society at large, of which they soon must become an active part, is a rule they cannot overthrow. As Harvard has a committee on athletics, it ought to be presumed that there is one also on moral culture, from which the public may expect some remarks on the secret lodge work of the Greek fraternities, and as radical action prohibiting them as has been taken against foot-ball and boat-racing. The Harvard action is recommended to the lodgites in the Indiana legislature who disgraced the State two years ago by compelling the resignation of President White for maintaining the rule of Perdue University against secret societies.

The old Independence bell, with its motto, "Proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof," was a great attraction both to the patriotic and curious at the Centennial Exposition. A more cherished memento of the struggles of our fathers hardly exists. The managers of the New Orleans Exposition have conceived that it will be as attractive now as eight years ago and through the mayor of New Orleans have formally applied for it, promising the utmost care in transportation and while in their keeping. The mayor's letter adds this argument: "Your consent to the temporary absence of this reminder of our forefathers' valor to be used in heralding the greatest occasion of our city, will tend greatly to heal the unfortunate estrangement that has existed between our people for the past twenty years." This hope let us all cherish, and let the text around the brazen brow of the old bell preach with silent and powerful eloquence against the prejudices and falsehoods which brought on secession and war.

The second and last session of the Forty-eighth Congress met Monday noon, and will adjourn on inauguration day. The President's message was read without having as usual been given to the press a few hours before. Mr. Arthur writes well, and his recommendations, if they present nothing outside of the usual routine, are expressed in clear and felicitous terms. It is prophesied that the session will be uneventful. The calendars of both houses are well filled with measures of great importance, but beyond the annual appropriation bills little is expected. There is some talk of tariff reduction, and an effort may be made to put sugar, salt and lumber on the free list. The pension laws will also be the subject of revision. The postal telegraph scheme is ready to be revived, and Senator Blair's educational bill has passed the Senate only. The change of parties will also tend to make the session conservative in its measures, and not until a year hence must we look for any striking developments of Democratic character which we have been promised by their opponents.

Chicago politicians have a sensation equal to an ordinary election. In one of the precincts on the North side it was found that the Republican candidate for the State Senate had run behind his ticket several hundred votes while his opponent was correspondingly ahead of the Democratic candidates. Affidavits of voters were secured showing a great fraud, and the ballots were taken before the United States grand jury, who were astonished to find a large number of Republican tickets, properly numbered, but with the Democratic candidate for State Senator. Relatives and friends of the Republican thus appeared to have voted against him, contrary to their sworn testimony. Detectives have found that spurious Republican ballots were secretly printed more than two weeks after the election, and it is charged that the ballots were then changed. But at this time they were in the watched vault of the county clerk. The fraud, if it is one, was most adroitly conceived and covered up. The game is an important one, for the Illinois legislature is so evenly divided between the two parties that the election of a successor to General Logan in the U. S. Senate depends upon the result, and Carter Harrison, our demagogue mayor of Chicago hopes he may be the man.

The pompous celebration of Thanksgiving day by the Catholic council now sitting in Baltimore was as unusual as it was magnificent. It suggests the query whether the Romish church is becoming Puritanized; or, whether it is another instance of the facility of that church to absorb the religious festivals of whatever nation with which it may be closely allied, pagan or Christian; as it baptized the heathen Saturnalia into a jolly fine Christmas, so that men of every faith and none may unite in some sort of Christian worship. There are some propositions and acts of the body which it is well to mark. The representatives of the Irish Catholic Colonization society urged that there be large immediate purchases or entries of Western land to be held for Catholic colonists—or, the church may not need it for that purpose. The report of the 21st ult., has these significant lines: "The council experienced considerable difficulty in arranging sections of the canon law so that they might harmonize with the civil laws governing certain States. In considering this important subject the council proceeded with the utmost care, and it was only after the most profound deliberation that they decided that the Catholic church in the United States should be ruled by canon law." What explanation may be given to this action is for the future; the bare report reads as if the supremacy of the Romish church over princes, potentates or powers was just as dogmatically claimed now as when Henry IV. went to Canossa.

SHALL WOMEN SPEAK AND NOT VOTE?

HOW TO HARMONIZE THEM.—NO. 2.

BY REV W. W. AMES.

Having in a previous article endeavored to harmonize the subjection of the wife to the husband in the family with her equality as a citizen in the state, showing that the authority of the husband relates to family affairs, I desire now to show that the silence enjoined upon the woman in the church, is consistent with her voting in the affairs of the state.

If a man says that because a woman must keep silence in the church or public assembly of the disciples, she must not therefore vote as a citizen of the State, it rests upon him to prove it; for the church is not the state. The church is presumably composed of regenerate men and women, but the state is composed of men and women, good, bad, and indifferent. And if a bad and ignorant man may vote because he is a citizen, surely the virtuous, intelligent Christian woman should be allowed the same privilege, unless forbidden by a plain precept of God's Word. Where is that precept to be found? And if one class of families may vote as citizens of the State, shall the rest be disfranchised? It might be well to require a man to be able to read the Constitution as a qualification to vote. But if there is nothing required of a man but to be a citizen, native or naturalized, why should anything more be required of a woman? Does the enjoined silence in the church make it wrong for the woman to drop into the ballot-box a little piece of white paper with her yes or no upon it, side by side with a similar piece of paper from the hand of her husband, brother or son? Whittier has told us that these pieces of paper, falling like the snowflake so silently

> "Execute the freeman's will
> As lightnings do the will of God."

Many talk and write so sweetly about the "silent influence of woman," how mighty and far-reaching for good. Why be so alarmed at the silently falling ballot of the same good and true woman? Is she free? Then why should not the ballot execute her will also?

Shall we admit or claim that our mothers, wives, sisters and daughters are, and by right ought to be slaves, with the right it may be to hold and express opinions and wishes, but without power to do anything more that to express a wish? But some one will say that the women may "curtain-lecture" their husbands, sons and brothers. Others will say she may lecture on temperance and other reforms and persuade the men to vote aright. But if silence in the church make silence a duty in public everywhere else, what becomes of the right of the women to lecture on temperance and other reforms?

But what does the Apostle mean by the silence he enjoined upon women in the churches? Was it that they should not pray or prophesy? Why, then, does he give direction that they should do it with their heads covered? Was it that they should not sing? Who among the opponents of female suffrage would be willing to dispense with the female voices in the choir and the congregation? We all love to hear those voices blending with those of the "sterner sex" in church, in prayer-meeting, the Sabbath-school and everywhere else, for that matter. And she may teach in Sabbath-school, even a class of adult males, and no one seems to object. But Paul surely meant something when he said: "I suffer not a woman to teach or to usurp authority over the man." "Let your women keep silence in the churches;" "for it is a shame for women to speak in the church." "If she will learn anything let her ask her husband at home." What was Paul's meaning?

It should be remembered that the church at Corinth, as well as others, were largely made up of persons converted from heathenism and an immoral life, and that the subjection of woman among the heathen, as it is to-day, was so excessive that for her to walk the streets unveiled, or to speak in public, might be regarded as the token of a bold, bad woman. So that the then existing circumstances seem to have rendered it improper for women to assume the appearance of equality with men. But are not the circumstances sufficiently changed in our age and country to render it proper for her to walk with unveiled face, and, if gifted with the talents for it, to speak in public? For piety and intelligence are not many women not only the peers, but the superiors of many public men? When a really gifted woman is advertised to speak, either from the platform or pulpit, crowds of people will come and listen with rapt and earnest attention.

Only a few days since a lady from India, Miss Bissel, addressed an immense audience in the Congregational church in this place, dressed in the costume of an aristocratic Indian lady, personating a heathen wife and mother, and told the story of the heathen woman's degradation and woe. The long and the short of the matter is that among the heathen the women have few if any rights which the men feel bound to respect. The woman this lady personated had heard something about Jesus and his love, and she longed to see the missionary lady and learn more about Christ and his religion; but her husband would not let her see the missionary woman, nor talk with any person who had seen her.

What but the religion of Jesus Christ makes it so different with the women of our glorious land? Shall we insist that it has made no such change in the status of the woman, as to render it proper for her to appear unveiled, and to speak in the congregation? Then let me ask whether it is not a reasonable explanation, that Paul's words were designed as a rebuke to a custom that began to prevail, of women interrupting the speaker in the midst of his address, thus not only ignoring the prejudices of the age against a woman's speaking at all in public, but creating confusion in the assembly? Was not this the reason why he said, "If she will learn anything" (ask explanations or propound questions) "let her ask her husband at home?" It seems plain from the main drift of this chapter (1 Cor. 14), that the speaking "not permitted to the women," had reference to interrupting the speaker with questions, and engaging in public disputations with the men, and claiming to speak with tongues; and not to "praying and prophesying," exhortation, reading or singing. It would seem to be an injunction of general application, but not designed to repress such women as claimed, and were well known to be, moved by the spirit of inspiration to address the people. But a disputatious tendency would invalidate such a claim. They might ask questions of their husbands at home. But the "unmarried and widows," not having husbands, might, properly enough, ask other women's husbands, or their wives after their husbands had instructed them, if necessary.

But Bro. Springstein or some one else may say that Paul enjoined silence not only for the above-named reasons, but because it is enjoined in the law, Gen. 3:16. But let us not forget that Paul's injunctions of silence and subjection of women, relate directly to the family and the church. Are we bound by them to conclude that they may not properly vote and be voted for in the affairs of the state?

THE FIRST WINTER'S STORM.

BY ALEXANDER THOMSON.

Darkly the night falls o'er us,
And sadly the night winds whine;
'Tis the roar of the wak'ning tempest,
And the moan of the solemn pines,
And the beating, ceaseless beating,
Of the sleet against the pane,
That raps with its white ghost fingers
To tell of the winter's reign.
All these are the voices of Nature,
Her deep and articulate sigh,
Which tell that the harvest is ended
And the grace of the summer is by.

No more in the woodland pasture
Stand browsing the glossy kine;
No more in the lowland meadow,
They on juicy herbage dine.
No more shall the blue-bird springing
From the nest in the briery grove,
Trill out in its sweet-toned music
Of gladness and of love,
But only the low, hoarse croaking
Of the inauspicious crow,
Shall sound from the deep blue heaven
To the hardened earth below.

To-night by the low fire sitting,
How sad is the heart and lone,
Who hears in the voice of the tempest
But an echo of its own!
Who sees in the grip of the Winter,
In his grim, relentless sway,
But an emblem of icy fetters
That are barring his upward way;
While Grief with her white ghost fingers,
Determined to prevail,
Beats in at the spirit's windows,
Like the pattering of the hail.

Yet out of the gloom and darkness
A radiant form appears,
In garlands of green and of roses
And glistening with dewy tears.
She points with an upward finger,
And a speechless love in her eyes,
To the blossoming stars of heaven,
And the dome of the peaceful skies.
'Tis Faith that is sent to guide us
Over our thorny road,
To the home of our Elder Brother,
To the city of our God.

ALL QUIET ON THE POTOMAC.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

In the long weary months of inactivity that followed the disastrous battle of Bull Run in July, 1861, the above caption was the burden of the daily telegrams from the seat of war. At first they were received gladly. It gave assurance that there was no rebel attack and there was time for rest and recuperation. Then it was read patiently; we must allow time to plan and to concentrate and to make sure of success. At last it was heard with humiliation and scorn and indignation. The war, which it was hoped would be short, sharp, and decisive, was now seen would be long and terrible. The hope of rebel success, which it was expected to crush almost in its inception, now had grown and become fixed, while the shadow of disappointment and sadness hung over all lovers of the Union.

But this proclamation of quiet on the Potomac was full of solace and comfort to the Confederate army. It meant to them the very opposite of what it was to their opponents. It meant enlargement, security and ultimate success. They had asked only to be let alone, to have their independence conceded and then there would be peace on both sides of the river.

Both the government and the people saw that unless this quiet, this truce between rebellion and loyalty was broken up, the Confederacy had gained its object and the Union was destroyed. The war would fail if it was not aggressive.

What was true of that great contest is not less true of all moral conflicts. A truce means victory for the evil. All iniquity seeks only to be let alone. The liquor traffic is ever willing to buy immunity, and having purchased a license duly issued and endorsed, it feels as secure as did the Confederate forces behind their entrenchments.

Freemasonry and its kindred systems of folly and sin grow in silence. They dread nothing so much as discussion. Silence and secrecy are the prime virtues of Masonry. When it is "all quiet on the Potomac," then is their time of special enlargement.

Indeed, there is not a single form of evil but loves darkness rather than light. Sin never dies out by being let alone. It must be destroyed, and its destruction requires great, earnest and prolonged endeavor. The grand undertaking which eclipses all others is that of Him who was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil, and when he shall see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied, then, indeed, will there be "peace on earth and good will to man." Truly there ought to be quiet on the Potomac and everywhere else, but not quiet in sin. So long as any form of evil exists silence and quiet are forbidden. There is a woe pronounced on those who are "at ease in Zion." There was a terrible curse on those who "went not up to the help of the Lord."

There is a sort of wisdom that is earthly, sensual and devilish. It is the wisdom of a false peace. But the wisdom that is from above is first pure and then peaceable. The Christian who seeks only the conservation of his own spiritual life has already lost it; and the church that ceases to carry on an aggressive warfare has already yielded to the enemy.

Verily, peace and quiet are the great ends, but righteousness is the indispensable means. The fruits of righteousness are peace, and the effects of righteousness are quietness and assurance forever.

WEEK DAY SERMON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

There are certain commands of Scripture which seem to border slightly on the paradoxical. "Honor all men;" and "Be ye perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect," are notable instances. Both lift up the standard of duty, the one on the human, the other on the Godward side, to what seems an impossible level. There has been very little said or written in explanation of the former command; yet there it is: a hard saying couched in a simple text, every word of which has a plain and familiar meaning. And yet what does it mean? Shall we honor the vicious, the ignorant, the degraded? It is the way of the world to despise such. I am afraid it is the way of some Christians.

Mrs. F. once told me an incident in the life of her husband, a man of almost apostolical piety and earnestness in winning souls, that struck me at the time as a perfect commentary on this dark passage. Walking in the streets one day, he saw before him a creature in feminine form—a mere bundle of rags and filthiness, with all the marks of a life of sin stamped on her haggard features; and a sense of instant repulsion, of utter loathing and disgust filled his mind. He wondered at the inscrutable Providence which allowed such a miserable being to exist, to burden the earth and be an offense to human sight.

The unpleasant apparition passed out of his view, and then the good man turned once more to his interrupted meditations. But the golden thread was broken, and neither prayer nor psalm nor holy words of Scripture could join it together. Thoughts of Christlike pity for the wretched creature he had just passed, would have been so many magnetic lines connecting his soul with heaven, and bringing back sweet responses from the King in his secret chambers. But instead there was silence—blank, deep, utter silence. At first he was simply astonished. He was as one over whose path falls a sudden eclipse at noonday. Why had his Saviour withdrawn his smile? He examined himself, and at last the truth dawned. He had despised a fellow-creature, and thus placed himself outside that Divine sympathy which has "no respect of persons."

"That sin cost him a long season of darkness," said Mrs. F.; "but I have often heard him allude to this experience as one of the best lessons he ever learned in his life. And I wish some other Christians could learn it, too. We are so apt to say to ourselves if we don't to somebody else, 'I can't bear such a one,' or, 'that one I don't want anything to do with,' or, 'so and so don't belong to my set.' And in this way we cut ourselves off from good that we might get, as well as good that we might do, if instead of putting them down we tried to help them up."

I wonder how much nearer the world would be to the millennium if we did in deed and in truth "honor all men." Sin, and dirt, and rags we have a right to despise as much as we please, but a human soul!—God's own handiwork—what right have we to despise that? We who have inherited from generations of sturdy Puritan stock all the best that is in us, may feel that our foreign fellow-citizens have much to be desired in the way of cleanliness, culture and morals; but is the sweeping scorn with which they are so often alluded to as a class, right or Christian? I am certain that the spirit of this command carried into the kitchen would do away with many of the perplexities of "the servant girl question." Bridget is ignorant and uncomely. She sets at naught all those unwritten rules of nicety dear to the heart of an American housewife; she confesses to a priest and prays to saints; but, my dear sister, honor the womanhood in her for the sake of him who was borne by an earthly mother. When we see in every social and moral inferior, no matter what may be his race or religion "something divine and God-made," as Ruskin puts it, we have come into fellowship with the Christ who healed lepers and talked with outcast Samaritans. We stand on heights where we see God—"for he that hath the Son hath the Father also."

GOD'S INFINITY.

BY ELDER NATHAN CALLENDER.

"God," says a laconic writer, "is as infinite in minuteness as in expansion." The microscope as well as the telescope loses us in the unexplored depths of the Infinite One. We return from explorations in either direction awe-stricken and overwhelmed with amazement. When thus struck with an overwhelming sense of our littleness, we are ready with the Psalmist to exclaim, "What is man that thou art mindful of him?" and were it not that God is infinite in minuteness we should sink into the abyss of despairing skepticism. What a wonderful God, to humble himself, not only to notice man, but even to number all the hairs of his head! Not only man's moral and spiritual being, which outweighs, ten thousand times his frail body, but this transient, decaying tabernacle, e gages God's infinite mind! How strange! Hence the resurrection is sure to man. The Omnicient eye looking into minuteness with infinite scrutiny, watches our ashes as it does the hairs of our heads while alive, and in due time, speaks them into glorious life. No telescope can aid the creature eye, no microscope can help short-sighted man to fathom the depth of the wonders of nature, but the infinite mind can fathom the infinite depths of both expansion and of minuteness. What folly in the skepticism of scientists to question the resurrection because they cannot see how God accomplishes it. Why not question everything they cannot comprehend and explain?

That God is as much to be seen in minuteness as in expansion, shows us that he enters into strict account with all his moral intelligences, and establishes a day of strict and final judgment as taught in the Bible. If he numbers the hairs of our head, and takes notice of the falling of a sparrow, he also notices moral actions and makes account of their character. Science shows that there is a universe, so to speak, of living, organic being, as perfect as anything in nature, too minute to be seen by the unaided eye of man. Nor does man know how deep and how fathomless is the realm of invisible minuteness.

THE LORD'S WAY TO RENOUNCE FREEMASONRY.

BY REV. ISAAC HYATT.

(Concluded.)

It would seem that any fair-minded person who has carefully investigated the character and claims of a Masonic oath cannot fail to see that this is most conclusively so. For the virus of sin runs all through it and when held up in the sunlight of truth it fairly sparkles with the iniquitous designs of Satan. And can a sin of such a character be confessed to men and not be exposed? It is utterly impossible. He who has taken it may acknowledge he has done wrong and is very sorry; but how is it to be known from his confession what he has done, wherein he has injured society, or sinned against the Lord unless he uncovers the oath?

And the Scriptures show clearly that it is our duty to confess the sin of taking wicked oaths. For it is written, "If a soul swear, pronouncing with his lips to do evil, or to do good, whatsoever it be that a man shall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty in one of these. And it shall be, when he shall be guilty in one of these things, that he shall confess that he hath sinned in that thing." Lev. 5: 4, 5.

Also, from Acts 19:18, we learn that under the Scriptural teaching of the Apostle Paul those who were guilty of a sort of Masonic jugglery confessed their sins by showing their deeds.

A Masonic oath is very much like King Herod's (Mstt. 14: 6–10). It was a blank to be filled by the dictation of another, taken when he was incapacitated to exercise good judgment and in the presence of unprincipled witnesses.

It differed in that it was open, did not require him to protect a brother in wrong-doing, conceal his wickedness or place him under the penalty of an inhuman death if he failed to keep it. With all its objectionable features it is a jewel in comparison to a Masonic oath. And it is unreasonable to suppose it laid him under obligation to carry out the request of the young damsel made at the dictation of her wicked mother.

Mathew Henry in his comments on it says: "It was a very extravagant obligation which Herod here entered into, and in no way becoming a prudent man that is afraid of being snared in the words of his mouth. (Prov. 6: 2). Much less a good man that fears an oath. (Eccle. 11: 2). To put this blank into her hands, and enable him to draw upon him at pleasure, was too great a recompense for such a sorry piece of merit. Promissory oaths are ensnaring things, and when made rashly are the products of inward corruption and the occasion of many temptations."

In speaking of Herod's self-justification he says: "Here is a pretended conscience of his oath with the specious show of honor and honesty; he must needs do something for the oath's sake. It is a great mistake to think that a wicked oath will justify a wicked action. It was implied so necessarily and it needed not to be expressed that he would do anything for her that was lawful and honest; and when she demanded what was otherwise, he ought to have declared, and he might have done it knowingly, that his oath was null and void, and the obligation of it ceased.

No man can lay himself under obligation to sin, because God has already so strongly obliged every man against sin.

Most assuredly nothing is plainer than that no past act can necessitate us now or hereafter to do wrong. And when we have done wrong the only way to escape is to confess our wrong-doing, making such acknowledgment or restitution as the Bible requires.

No doubt many that are in the lodge do not see the magnitude of the sin, because the deception required by Masonry has distorted their mental vision taken the edge from its keenness to perceive the difference between evil and good and deadened the susceptibility of the best emotions of their heart. Evidently in our age the alarming and far-reaching evil of Freemasonry, both within and without its pale, is its potent agency as an educator to teach the art to practice deception. And this deception casts a death-like blight upon every noble sentiment of mind and heart. It is the canker-worm that is eating at the vitals of everything that is dear and sacred to us, both in church and state. It is evident Masons do not see this; for, like the ancient Israelites there is a veil over their eves; but when they turn to the Lord it will be taken away. In their grossness of heart may it not happen to them that "seeing, they shall not see, and hearing, they shall not hear, lest they should be converted?"

There are others in the lodge who perceive its iniquity and are straitened to know what to do. Well do I know how they are held in their snare by the triple power of fear, self interest and the false sentiment that it is wrong to violate the oaths they have taken. It is my heart's desire that they may be relieved from the burden that rests so heavily upon them.

May our mutual prayers prevail before the Throne and we receive the wisdom, courage and grace we need. Amen.

CHRISTIANS "GIVING UP."

It is a pitiful thing to see a young disciple going about and asking everybody how much he must "give up" in order to be a Christian. Unfortunately, many of those who take it upon themselves to instruct him give him the same impression of Christian discipleship—that it consists chiefly in giving up things that one likes and finds pleasure in. But a man in solitary confinement might as well talk of what he must "give up" if he is pardoned out of prison, or a patient in consumption about what he must "give up" in order to get well. The prisoner must give up his fetters, and the invalid his pains and weakness—these are the main things to be sacrificed.

It is true that the one has the privilege of living without work, and the other the privilege of lying abed all day; these are privileges that must be relinquished, no doubt. And so there are certain sacrifices to be made by him who enters upon the Christian life; but they are "not worthy to be compared" with the liberty and dignity and joy into which the Christian life introduces us; and to put the emphasis upon this negative side of the Christian experience, as so many are inclined to do, is a great mistake.—Selected.

SIMEON AND LEVI.

When the patriarch Jacob lay on his dying bed, he called to his sons and said, "Gather yourselves together that I may tell you that which shall befall you in the last days." Glancing with anointed eye over the future, he pronounced in their ears his solemn, prophetic, parting words, pointing out the follies and sins of those whom he had loved, and giving such warnings, admonitions, and encouragements as were right and proper.

Of two of his sons he said. "Simeon and Levy are brethren; instruments of cruelty are in their habitations. O my soul, come not thou into their secret; unto their assembly, mine honor, be not thou united; for in their anger they slew a man, and in their self-will they digged down a wall. Cursed be their anger, for it was fierce; and their wrath, for it was cruel; I will divide them in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel." Gen. 49:5-7.

Simeon and Levi were brethren; they were both the sons of Leah; but it would seem that they were also brethren in cruelty, in secrecy, in plotting, contriving, and wrong-doing. In their habitations there were "instruments of cruelty." There was mystery about their dwelling-places; their assembly was not the assembly of the saints; their secret was not the secret of the Lord, which is with them that fear him. They seem to have been bold, bad, fierce and willful men. They had murdered the Shechemites most cruelly, and thus brought upon themselves the displeasure of the Lord, and of his servant. With the secret plans and plottings and the open acts of such men, Jacob would have nothing to do. "O my soul, come not thou into their secret." He pronounced his curse upon their anger and their wrath, and declares, "I will divide them in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel."

This was literally fulfilled. The descendants of these secret plotters were not allowed to perpetuate their confederacy, nor persist in their evil courses. The tribe of Levi had no inheritance in Israel except forty-eight cities or villages scattered among the different tribes; and the tribe of Simeon upon entering Canaan, had only a few towns and villages in the poorest part of Judah's territory. Josh. 19:1-9. This space proving too little for them, they colonized in various districts. 1 Chron. 4:39-42. Thus the descendants of these two plotting, treacherous, secret-keeping brothers, were separated from each other, divided and scattered through Israel, and deprived of the political power and influence which the other tribes possessed.

Levi and Simeon are not the only brotherhood which has been united in secret bonds for base and evil purposes. Other fraternities have had instruments of cruelty in their dwellings, oaths of secrecy to bind their consciences, and the blood of the murdered to stain their hands. The solemn curse of God, pronounced upon Simeon and Levi, may fall upon others who are guilty of their crimes, and every devout and humble heart may well adopt the language of the patriarch, "O my soul, come thou not into their assembly; into their secret enter thou not."—The Christian

CHINESE SECRET SOCIETIES.

Some years since a correspondent of the New York Telegram, speaking of the habits of the Chinamen, says:

One of the most curious features of Chinese emigration is that the emigrants carry with them one of the most interesting of their institutions. It is, of course, generally known that the original Celestials were conquered by the Tartars; that a Tartar dynasty was lifted to the throne of the Chinese empire, and that Tartar garrisons were scattered all over the land. All this occurred many hundred years ago. But two curious societies of the Ghee Hins and the Toe Peh Kongs, the former established for the purpose of restoring the Ming dynasty, and the latter for the purpose of maintaining the Tartar supremacy, sprang up at that period, and the feud has been kept up ever since. All Chinamen belong to one or the other of these organizations, and wherever they go they establish lodges. The Ghee Hins live in one street, and the Toe Peh Kongs in another. Each society has its flags and all its members are armed. On great occasions public displays of their strength are made, and very frequently an attack is ventured upon by the non-parading organization, and a bloody struggle ensues. Such faction fights are very common in Australia.

Until lately very little was known about these societies. But about two years ago, in the island of Pewang, there was a riot among the Chinamen, which lasted seventeen days, and in which 2,000 men were killed. The British government were powerless to stop it, and, perhaps, as the Chinamen did not attempt to molest Europeans they were not anxious to do so. But a committee was appointed, after everything was over, to find out the true character of the offending organization. For some time none of the witnesses examined had the courage to tell the truth about the objects and rites of their organization; but, at last, a man came forward who made a clean breast of it.

The rites of initiation, as he described them, are very elaborate, and occupy nearly a whole day. They begin soon after daybreak. The candidate, having been properly dressed and adorned with certain emblems, is ushered into the lodge blindfolded. The bandage is taken from his eyes, and he finds himself in the midst of men who are all armed with spears and maces, while the hall is hung with devices such as naturally inspire terror. The next thing done is to cut off the head of a fowl. The candidate is asked to carefully look at the operation, and to remember it well, for a similar fate would befall him if he should ever betray the secrets that are about to be confided to his discretion. Then comes the oath of good faith. It is administered by the President and is excessively minute and rigid, and so lengthy that its reading occupies two hours. The candidate is next handed over to the care of some of the brethren, who instruct him in the passwords and secret signs. The ceremony concludes with a sumptuous repast, cooked according to certain prescribed rules.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS:

OR

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR.

BY E. E. FLAGG, AUTHOR OF "HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

CHAPTER V.—Continued.

"Well, I am not a politician," said Martha; "I am only a woman, and I suppose I look at such things from a woman's point of view. I believe in men more than I do in parties, and in principles more than I do in votes. Most of the political talk in the newspapers just reverses this, and makes men and principles the least important things, when they are actually the only force the saloon power dreads, for it knows that parties can be controlled and votes bought, but men and principles, never."

"That's exactly the way it stands, Martha; but I don't see what is ever going to hammer it into the heads of the politicians," answered Nelson, with a doubtful shrug of his shoulders.

"Well, now, Nelson, it seems to me that I have grown to understand some things lately that I never understood before. You know I belong to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and I have belonged to the Good Templars, beside. I have always been interested in temperance work ever since I can remember, and I have been brought into some slight association with workers noted in the cause. Now if there is any want of union in the temperance ranks there must be a reason for it. Supposing an army is marching to attack the enemy, and a part should break up into little squads, each with its own leaders, its own secret plans and countersigns and passwords, how long would it be before there would be an end to all unity of action?"

"Not a great while, certainly; but I don't think I quite understand your comparison."

"And supposing," said Martha, continuing her parable, "these same petty squads, after considerable 'big talk' from their leaders of all the feats of valor they were going to perform, how they only needed a sight of the enemy to smite him hip and thigh, should let their arms rust and their amunition spoil while they sat down on the grass to play games and tell stories? Now you are wondering why the temperance cause is always meeting with a Bull Run. But look at it here in Jacksonville; there is no real unity among our temperance people because they are broken up into little secret cliques, each trying to rival the other; and as for good solid work, there is none done worth the name. It has all degenerated into play. Now the W. C. T. U. is a grand organization. It is meant for work, and the amount of labor that some of the women who belong to it perform, is astonishing; simply heroic. But I have yet to find, among the Good Templars, a real worker for temperance, man or woman, who makes a point of regularly attending the lodge meetings."

"Why, Martha! seems to me you are rather sweeping."

"Not a bit. I have been there and I know. I don't mean to say that the Good Templars have never done any good in the line of reform. When a lodge is first started there are always more or less of the members who join with a sincere desire to do temperance work, and if some of the W. C. T. U. women can be persuaded to come in they can't help carrying a portion of their vim and enthusiasm along with them. But such ones sink into a hopeless minority after awhile. They find that the leaders are not those with the most executive ability. They are the ones who can sing the best songs and tell the best stories, and contribute most to the general fund of amusement; and so the working spirit all dies out, slowly smothered to death, and the lodge comes to be a mere social club—what saloonist ever stood in dread of that?—a place where you can go and meet your acquaintances and have a good time. The last Good Templar meeting that I attended was just before the State election. There was a strong prohibition tide setting in, but instead of planning how to take advantage of it, I cannot remember that the subject of temperance was even once alluded to all the evening; nor was it made a specialty of at any of the meetings. Half the time was spent in drilling us in the secret work of the order, and the other half in talk that had no more to do with the subject of temperance than it had with political economy. Now, the more I think about it the more convinced I am that no good work for God or humanity can be done if we start with a wrong principle. 'Can a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter?' "

"Then it is the secrecy you disapprove of," said Nelson, who felt uneasy under this talk without exactly knowing why. "Now, I can't see any harm in it, necessarily. In the Knights of Labor, for instance, the secrets are so few, merely the grips and passwords, that they don't really amount to anything."

"Then why have secrets, anyway? If they don't amount to anything, what good do they do?"

Nelson felt posed. It was such a perfectly common-sense question, and Martha asked it in such a cool, common-sense way, that it was decidedly surprising, as well as inconvenient, not to find any answer ready. So what could he do but repeat at second-hand the old Masonic argument, with which his connection with the Knights of Labor had made him tolerably familiar:

"Why, society is so constituted that secrecy is necessary sometimes. Why do Grand Juries sit with closed doors, and Congress hold secret sessions? and even the family: what is that but a secret institution?"

Martha's eyes flashed.

"Don't name the lodge and the family in the same breath. It is profanation. Privacy and secrecy are two different things. Senates and juries publish the results of their deliberations to the world, which is all that the nation or the community is interested in knowing. And furthermore, such secrecy is only a temporary arrangement; Senators and jurors do not take solemn oaths never to reveal anything that is done behind closed doors. And as to the family," and the flash went out of Martha's eyes in a gleam of good-humored laughter, "you had better not try to exact any such vow from me. Just think of a family with its members pledged to keep all they say and do forever secret from the rest of mankind! I am sure that nothing would induce me to pass a single night under their roof for fear that murdering travelers and confiscating their effects might be among those precious 'secrets.' But there are other reasons in my mind why such societies must always be a drag on the temperance cause. As a Christian woman I believe that the gospel and the gospel alone is the true reforming agency for the world, and all organizations for that end will be successful just so far as they work by Christian methods. Good Templarism requires its candidates to believe in a Supreme Being, but all through the ritual the name of Christ is mentioned but a few times, his atoning work not once. Now, I don't believe that drunkards can be saved by pledges and good resolutions. They need something else. They need to be told of a Divine Helper who will stand by them just as they are, in all their vileness and degradation, and battle with them and for them against the demon of the still. They need to be told the old, old story of Jesus crucified for sinners, bleeding his life away that the vilest might look to him and live. Tell the drunkard that; guide his trembling, shaking hand till it touches, only touches the hem of Christ's robe, and his feet are on the Rock of Ages, and he is a saved man. But this is exactly what Good Templarism never does."

Martha spoke with quivering lips and eyes that shone through unshed tears, while Nelson gazed at her roused and kindled face with a kind of wonder.

"You talk like Martin Treworthy," he said.

"If I do it is because one Spirit has taught us both," she answered, resuming her work, which she had dropped in her momentary excitement. "Now, the Good Templars profess to be a religious order, or why do they have prayers and an altar and a chaplain? Yet, as I said before, the lodge does not and cannot convert the drunkard, and without conversion I do not believe in a permanent reform. I don't mean to say that there is no Christianity in its teachings. There is just enough to make them dangerous, for what more fatal delusion under heaven than a Christless Christianity? As a matter of fact the really religious members of the lodge fare about as bad as the workers. It is the worldly, irreligious element that invariably gets the upper hand. I have known a man who could hardly spell his way through the ritual, elected chaplain just for a joke, and not a single voice raised in rebuke or dissent. Yet there were Christian men and women present; I was there myself, and I remember feeling shamed and indignant at first, and then laughing with the rest at his manifest exultation at being promoted to the chaplain's desk, and the funny way in which he mispronounced his words. I blush when I think of it, but there is a mysterious something about these nightly gatherings that acts like a draught of enchantment. I have known professed Christians to say and do in a Good Templar lodge what they would not have said or done anywhere else. I am sure of one thing: Christ isn't there, and the Holy Spirit isn't there. Why should they come where their work is persistently ignored and set aside for mere human methods? The lodge is like the house in the parable, 'empty, swept, and garnished;' and Satan enters in and dwells there, and the last state of man or woman who joins it expecting to be helped thereby, or put in the way of helping others, is worse than the first. After attending the meetings for a few times I began to feel a strange deadness and indifference when I took up my Bible or tried to pray. I lost my relish for prayer-meeting; even for the dear old hymns that I used to sing over my work. I knew that something was wrong and it made me miserable, but I could not imagine what. I tried to think that it was only a common experience, a mere passing cloud, and I should feel all right again soon. All the while I knew better. I knew I had backslidden, but what had made me? Now if I had been enticed into attending some place of amusement, professedly worldly, like the ballroom and the theatre, I should have known in a moment; but how could I lay my spiritual darkness and trouble to attending the meetings of an organization that claims to have for its sole object, saving men and doing good? I will tell you what opened my eyes: an Anti-masonic tract that fell in my way. I was familiar enough with temperance tracts, but this was something new; so I took it up, half curious, half indifferent, thinking to myself, 'Women are never Masons; how can the subject possibly concern me?' But I found that it did concern me, and in more ways than one. I saw that it was a system square against Christianity on one side, and every principle of our republican liberty on the other. And I saw besides, as plain as two and two make four, that the same line of argument which condemns Freemasonry condemns Good Templarism."

"Oh, nonsense, Martha. You are so conscientious that you are like an over-careful housekeeper, who is always finding dirt and disorder where nobody else would think of looking for it. Now, I have seen books that claim to expose Masonry, and granted that they are true, what possible likeness between their barbarous, blood-curdling oaths, for instance, and the simple promise, or 'obligation', which is said to be all any of these minor orders require?"

"Just the difference that there is between a glass of champagne and a tumbler of stiff old Bourbon," answered Martha, promptly. "What makes the fascination in any kind of spirituous drink? Just the alcohol, more or less, that it contains. So these minor orders are fascinating just in proportion to the amount of secrecy which they cover. Now, the whole of Good Templarism could be just as well taught in one degree as in half a dozen; and all the object of the Charity, Fidelity and Council degrees, so far as I can see, is to serve the double purpose of making the principle of secrecy so familiar that the gradation to Masonry and Odd-fellowship will be easy and natural, and to shut the mouths of conscientious non-Masons. Now, Nelson, let me ask a plain question: are you just as ready to express your honest convictions about Masonry as you would be if you did not belong to a secret order? Don't you feel, without exactly knowing why, that there would be an inconsistency in your denouncing it? that it would certainly draw down upon you the dislike of the Masonic members of the lodge if you did so, and on the whole you had better let it alone?"

Nelson Newhall was decidedly an exemplary young man who would not have told a lie for the world. He neither smoked nor chewed; was a regular churchgoer, and taught a class of boys in a mission Sunday-school. I am afraid he was only a step removed from a well-meaning young Pharisee, though Martha, looking at him by the light of that glamour with which a true affection always invests the beloved object, saw nothing of the sort.

"I don't know but it is so, Martha," he answered, after a moment's hesitation, "though I never though of it before."

—We are prone to regard Romanism intolerant only in Catholic countries, but there have been some scenes in Montreal recently, which would disgrace Mexico. Rev. Mr. Chiniquy, a converted Romanist, has been preaching in that city. One public hall was so wrecked by a mob, while he was holding service, that it is unfit for use. He then began preaching in the Protestant pulpits, an even here it requires a very heavy guard to protect the congregation against violence. The police sympathize with the rioters and hence five hundred young men of Montreal have organized themselves as a bodyguard for the safety of the lecturer. The spirit of Rome is the spirit of persecution.—Associate Presbyterian.

—The general conference of the Methodist church has now organized ten annual conferences, which have developed from foreign missions, viz., Foochow, Japan, North India, South India, Liberia, Germany and Switzerland, Norway, Sweden, Italy and Mexico. During the last general conference acts were passed enabling Denmark to become a conference, and giving South India and Germany and Switzerland permission to divide, if it were thought wise, during the coming four years.

REFORM NEWS.

ALONG THE LINES.

From a quite general correspondence I infer that the action of the N. C. A Board, on the 11th of November, meets the approval of most friends and anti-secrecy reform workers. There is a more hopeful tone in the letters that reach me from different and distant parts. Some who hesitated to embark amid the uncertainty of party politics are considering the question of taking work with the N. C. A. as defined by the second resolution adopted by the Directors.

ILLINOIS.

William B. Lloyd, who has been successful as a Christian worker especially with Sabbath schools and the young people, will give now his consecrated zeal and continuous efforts to the work in Illinois. I bespeak for this brother a cordial welcome at the homes of friends and a hearty co-operation on the part of all lovers of the truth. Bro. Hinman is now in Illinois and will devote a few weeks, more or less, to work on the Western field. During his stay in Washington, Bro. H. has been a close observer of the "craft" and gathered much valuable information, which the people need to know. His address for the present is at the Cynosure office.

KANSAS.

Arrangements are well under way to give the cause of reform in Kansas the benefit of Bro. Robert Loggan's ability and experience after Dec. 13th. Should the plan be consummated, it will be a strength and inspiration to our many and earnest friends in that frontier State. All can work and give and pray, to sustain so judicious and able a standard-bearer. Friends in Kansas, address your State agent, Rev. R Loggan, Clifton, Kans., or write me at 221 W. Madison St., Chicago. Arrange for lectures and write to Bro. L., inclosing your offering if you have anything to give to aid the good work.

WISCONSIN.

Bro. Baneroft is working with unabated energy in Wisconsin and with fair success. Now that the political cyclone, which jostled some of our old stand-bys, is over, the time is favorable for holding a grand rally under the non partisan, unsectarian banner of the State Christian Association. I want to hear from the executive committee and fifty men and one hundred women, within twenty days who will either pray for or attend or contribute to sustain a State convention in Wisconsin and put another worker in the field.

MINNESOTA.

Minnesota asks for a stout-hearted, brave man, who can face a blizzard and not lose vitality or zeal in an atmosphere of lodgery that stands 26 degrees below zero the year round, as measured by the standard of Bible holiness. Funds are partly in hand to support this work, and God has the balance on deposit in the pockets of a willing people who will pay honestly for square work. Who that can fill the bill will volunteer for Minnesota? Has Bro. A. W. Hall of College Springs, Iowa, anything to say on the subject? A word from Eld. J. F. Browne would receive due attention. Speak out brethren; don't be afraid. Bro. R. J. Williams, Winnebago City, is anxiously waiting to hear and reply to your wise sayings.

OHIO.

A number of invitations to hold meetings of the old-time sort have recently come from Ohio. One brother writes from Cincinnati, under date Nov. 24th: "It seems almost incredible that this great State, so full of energy, should have remained idle so long in regard to the anti-secret work." While the State work was under the energetic leadership of Capt. J. M. Scott, it moved off grandly. Under Bro. Wm. Dillon's administration there has been less advance. Perhaps Bro. D. has been recuperating and gathering strength until he is ready to burst out in a perfect avalanche of zeal and good works. Let us hope so. It is high time something was done and brethren who accept positions understand that they are not ornamental or honorary members, but leaders and workers. Bro. Dillon, have you "fallen from grace," "settled on your lees," or what is the matter? Will you explain? Call a convention and arrange in connection with your executive committee for a State meeting or resign. I am at your service for whatever I am worth in a convention and will help you all I can in advertising and writing up the meeting. What say you, and what say the Ohio stalwarts on this question! Shall Ohio hold a State anti-secrecy convention after the manner of former times and put an energetic man in the field?

NEW ENGLAND.

Bro. S. C. Kimball has struck the right key for New England. Read his article in the last Cynosure and write me down for "six conventions in six consecutive weeks" as he suggests; closing, perhaps the series with the grand mass convention suggested by our editor in the Cynosure of Nov. 27th.

Indications from many quarters are favorable, and among the tokens for good is the prospect of adding other men of ability to the efficient corps already in the field. I intend to keep within easy range of my mail at the N. C. A. office for a week or two, and I want to hear from all who have anything to say in favor or against a forward movement, all along the line of the N. C. Association's work. J. P. STODDARD, Sec'y N. C. A.

FROM WESTERN NEW YORK.

HAMLET, N. Y., Nov. 24, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am at the home of Mr. J. E. Vincent, President of the Chautauqua County Association Opposed to Secret Societies, and am happy to report progress in New York. Friends here are seemingly more devoted to the reforms advocated in the Cynosure than before election. They are endeavoring to fulfill the old adage, "Strike while the iron is hot." There never has been a time, I am told, since the Abolition movement, when the political waters have been stirred as to-day. The pool of Siloam has been troubled. Who will be the first to get healed? Some medicines are bitter, but if they effect a cure, we welcome them.

Since my last letter I have spent some time in Chautauqua and Cattaraugus counties, soliciting Cynosure subscriptions, frequently speaking evenings, etc. Monday, Nov. 17, Father Ferrin gave me the use of his horse and carriage for a few days' drive. I visited the towns of Gerry, Jamestown, Lavant, Poland Center and Kennedy, returning Wednesday evening. At each place I found many warm friends, and secured their subscriptions. At Gerry there is a new Free Methodist seminary, erected through the instrumentality of Rev. W. E. Sellew, of Dunkirk. The design of this school is to teach "the beginning of wisdom," as well as the sciences.

Thursday morning Father Ferrin went with me to Cherry Creek, where arrangements had been made on the previous Saturday, for me to speak. In the afternoon, called at the home of Elder Edwards, in whose church I was to speak in the evening, but found no one at home. I proceeded to the house of the janitor, to see what arrangements had been made for the meeting. Found that he, also, was away from home. His wife said that he did not believe in such meetings; if we wanted the key we must get it of the Elder. I thought, could it be that after I had seen all the trustees in town, and had notices of the meeting given on Sabbath in all the churches, that they would try to shut the doors, when Father Ferrin, who had given as much as any one in the church, desired its use for a lecture! Yet this is doubtless what they tried to do. It had been reported all about town that the appointment had been taken up. We went to our supper, and called again at the Elder's, only to find the doors locked and the house dark. But at the janitor's we finally got the key; went to the church; rang the bell, lit the lamps, and built the fires. By 7:30 a goodly number had assembled, and later several came in from the Methodist prayer-meeting. The chaplain of the Odd-fellows, Elder Edwards. also put in an appearance. Good attention was retained throughout, and at the close an old Mason arose to say that Masonry was not a secret society. "All there is to it," said he, "is a few secret passwords and signs." I, of course, thanked him for the information.

Bro. Cornuelle, pastor of the Methodist church, kindly invited me to spend the night with him. In the morning I went on to Leon, and thence to Pine Valley, where I spoke to the Prohibition Club in the evening. The meeting was held in the Good Templar hall, and I was seated on the stand occupied by the Worshipful Master, when used by the Masons. Some sixty were present, and gave a unanimous vote of thanks at the close.

I then came on to Hamlet and was cordially received by our county president. He says we must have a county convention before long. Remember and prepare for this, Anti-masons of Chautauqua county. Further notice will be given later. W. B. STODDARD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MASONIC TEMPERANCE.

GALVA, Ill., Nov. 22, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Some years since a book on Masonry chanced to fall into my hands. It bore the title of "Mystic Circle," and was written by George H. Gray, of Mississippi. On looking through the book I found a definition of temperance that struck me as being somewhat peculiar. I copied it and have kept it ever since. Subsequent observations have led me to the conclusion that it is a fair and truthful showing of boasted Masonic temperance. Here it is:

"Temperance is that due restraint upon our affections and passions, which renders the body tame and governable, and frees the mind from the allurements of vice. This virtue should be the constant practice of every Mason; as he is thereby taught to avoid excess, or contract any licentious or vicious habit, the indulgence of which might lead him to disclose some of those valuable secrets which he has promised to conceal and never reveal, and which would consequently subject him to the contempt and detestation of all good Masons." Page 68.

The motive to temperance here held up to "the pick and flower of every nation" is surely a lofty one. How elevating such a principle must be! How firmly must such a motive hold them to the paths of rectitude and sobriety! How it must restrain their affections and pas sions, and render their bodies tame and governable, at the same time freeing the mind from the allurements of vice! But if temperance with such a motive to back it can do so much, why do Masons need to take an oath to not "violate the chastity of a brother Mason's wife, sister or mother?"

In the light of this definition, I think I can understand how it is that "there are thousands and thousands of us [Masons] who are rock-rooted prohibitionists," and yet vote for whiskey—yes, vote for men, parties and measures that have "one idea," and that one to foster and extend the liquor traffic so as to get the most money and influence out of it.

It is not the extirpation of intemperance as a great and formidable evil they are working for, but the security of their system of oath-bound secrecy. As Masons they must avoid excess, beastly drunkenness, lest they disclose some of the valuable (!) secrets which they have promised, under the most horrid oaths and penalties, to conceal and never reveal—must keep sober to avoid the contempt and detestation of all good Masons. From such motives to temperance, merciful God, deliver us!

R. CANNING.

GOOD FOR JOHN B. FINCH.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—According to Kenny's Illustrated Cincinnati, there are, in that city, twenty secret temperance lodges with a total membership of 2,250, divided as follows: Temple of Honor, 11 lodges, 1,000 members; Good Templars, 4 lodges, 500 members; Sons of Temperance, 5 lodges, 750 members. The official returns of the late election show that but 176 votes were cast for St. John in the whole of Hamilton county. Whether a single one of these was cast in the city, or by a "Sir Knight" or "Worthy Templar," we have no means of knowing, but both may well be doubted.

It is well that the people should know whether the so-called temperance orders are working for prohibition or for something else and to that end we would suggest to readers of the Cynosure that they collect statistics as above in their several localities and forward them for publication. We believe with the editors of the Cynosure that these "orders" are worse than useless pieces of machinery, training-schools for Freemasonry manipulated by ambitious individuals who care little or nothing for prohibition. COLUMBIAN.

ANOTHER ST. JOHN STORY.

SALEM, Oregon, Nov. 19, 1884.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Herewith I send you a late number of the Sunday Mercury, published at Portland, Oreg., on the second page of which you will find an article in regard to John P. St. John having been drunk. If this is true, the people who gave him 200,000 votes ought to know it, but if it is not true I hope the Cynosure will not remain silent while an infamous sheet lives that dare defame the character of an honorable man. Both Oregon press and private citizens are pointing the finger of scorn at Prohibition voters and classing them with lunatics, fanatics, bush-whackers, rebels, etc.

On election day I held St. John tickets at the polls of my own precinct and endeavored to place one of them in the hands of every legal voter. Three only of them were voted, yet I felt quite repaid for my services. I have had ample opportunity of hearing the Republican party whip crack loudly about my ears both on election day and since; but I am a free man besides being an American, and I fear not the whip of any "party."

When the Republican party awakes to a realizing sense of its own folly and weakness to control votes by the party lash, they will perhaps thank God that there are a quarter of a million Prohibitionists in the country.

Yours for a four years' campaign for God, Home and Native Land. ISAAC H. KEYES.

A MACEDONIAN TESTIMONY.

[The following letter is from a young man, a native of Macedonia, now studying at the Theological Seminary at Evanston, Ill. It will be read with deep interest. Bro. Stephanoff became acquainted with the lodge question through reading the Cynosure, while studying in Adams, New York. He has devoted himself entirely to Christ and will make it his life work to preach the Gospel; and while now preparing is supporting himself.]

EVANSTON, ILL., Nov. 18, 1884.

Last week I spoke with one of the professors of theology about Masonry. I asked him what he thinks about it. He answered me: "I cannot say that it is wrong, but it is foolishness." And after that he advised me not to preach against it, but to preach Christ. But how can a man preach Christ and not against sin? It is a hard thing for me. I told him if I shall be pastor in some church I shall never receive some who belong to secret societies, because man "cannot serve God and mammon" in the same time.

Another man said to me that "Masonry is from the Bible and is all Bible." I said in myself I am looking for some religion to find which comes from the Bible and is all Bible, but yet I could not find; and so I asked him to tell me about it. But he said: "I promised not to tell." I said, "If that is Bible you must tell it, or you are disobedient to the command of the Lord: 'Go and preach' (Matt. 28), 'What I tell you in darkness that speak ye in the light, and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the house tops,' (Matt. 10; 27). Again he said: 'In secret have I said nothing,' but he 'spake openly to all.'" And after that I said, "If the Lord is the God of the Masons they must follow his example, and so they must tell as Jesus spoke, openly and not in secret. But the god of Masonry is the devil and so they are ashamed and afraid to tell about their religion, and so they keep secret."

I never have been a Mason, neither I shall be, because I believe that Masonry is from the devil and not from God; and, therefore, we must not be yoked with the followers of Masonry. "Be ye not unequally yoked with unbelievers." A man who abides in Jesus and Jesus in him, he cannot abide in Masonry, neither can Masonry abide in him. There is no room for Masonry there. They who follow Masonry cannot follow Jesus, but they follow Baal, the god of Masonry. Oh, for ministers filled with the Holy Spirit to begin to proclaim separation from this evil and from all worldly things! Christians who belong to Masonry are not led by the Holy Spirit, because the Holy Spirit never leads men to Masonry. I have made a great many enemies by preaching against this evil and against worldly things, but I shall stand by the power of God, to preach against sin as long as I live. I am not afraid if all the world stand against me, because I know in whom I believe and I know what I am talking about. The church while yoked with Masonry and other worldly things shall be so long dead; but when the church shall be separate from this evil, then it shall have life and power.

I am resting very sweetly in Jesus and I praise him as never before, because he keeps me and leads me every moment to his truth. My cup runneth over; surely goodness and mercy has followed me and shall follow me in all the days of my life. The Lord has put an ocean of joy and peace in my heart. I am trusting in him, and as much as I preach the word of God, so much more he gives me power. Oh, what a glorious union is Jesus in us and we in Jesus! Oh, may all know it! Where Jesus is there is a heaven; and we to live in Jesus is a second heaven; by and by shall be added to us the third heaven. May the Lord keep us faithful to the end. Pray for me; may the Lord prepare me for his work and use me when he wants me as an instrument for converting many souls.

Yours in Jesus, B. STEPHANOFF.

SCHOHARIE COUNTY, NEW YORK.

This county is known in history as a battle-ground between the Indians and Tories on the one hand and the patriots on the other. The valley called by the same name is one of the most productive and beautiful in the Union. Its lofty hills, which might be called mountains, are spurs of the celebrated Catskills. The Schoharie creek, which runs through the county, takes its rise in the Catskill mountains, about two thousand feet above tide-water, within ten miles of the Hudson river, and after running one mile falls 180 feet, and then runs about three rods and falls 90 feet more. From this place the scenery is most beautiful and inspiring. This country is greatly sought by city boarders for its invigorating atmosphere. Railroads now penetrate the mountain defiles and make access to the places of interest much more pleasant than by stage. The Schoharie creek bends and tumbles down cataracts one after another in a tumultuous manner until it reaches the Schoharie valley and quietly winds its way, and empties into the Mohawk River, making a circuitous route of about 150 miles till it comes opposite to its fountain head.

I served four years in this county as a Free Methodist preacher. The first two years my circuit embraced about twenty appointments and about two hundred miles travel every four weeks. Though I had but two societies, I went beyond preaching Christ's Gospel. The circuit has been formed into two, and two good churches have been built.

What I intended to say, those two societies are anti-secret and prohibition to the core. I employed much of my time circulating our anti-secret literature, and wherever I could procure a place, either in church, school, home, grove or street, I not only preached the Gospel but exposed Masonic fraud and very often incurred the hate of the secret society men. The fruit of my labor was seen among other churches. My dear brethren (God bless them) stood nobly by me in the conflict.

I frequently would take an armful of Christian Cynosures and go into business places, as well as private residences and scatter the truth. I secured five subscribers for the Christian Cynosure on my circuit who sacredly kept them for me to use in the above manner, besides I bought "Masonry at a Glance" and sold them to Masons whom I knew to be such, and often saw the blush of shame come to their faces. Sometimes I was severely cursed and abused, but I knew God required it of me as much as to preach the Gospel.

It seems to me no Gospel preacher ought to hesitate for a moment which side he ought to take on the question of secretism. Bread and butter policy works well on the animal sensibilities, but the outcome will tell on which side God was; and the side he is on will win.

It seems that many temperance prohibitionists voted for the Republican nominee, and so did a rum-seller whose factory of perditibn is within hailing distance of my window. What a spectacle to angels to see a Gospel minister go to the polls with this man and vote for Republican temperance principles as embodied in the platform at Chicago; which declared against it by implicitly calling it sumptuary.

I talked by an invitation, before the national election, on prohibition, in a church-yard, in the presence of several hundred of both sexes; the scene was made pleasant by a brass-band and wide-awake lamplights. The minister of said church was on the ground just before I came, but could not be found when I wanted him to open with prayer. After the lecture he made his appearance as he came out of his secret retreat on his way home. I was informed that he was a sound temperance man, but did not wish to identify himself with the work because he and his church made it a practice to hold a yearly donation at the rum hotel for his benefit.

On which side was he? Who will swear that he was not on the side of rum? The mouth and heart do not always speak sympathetically. LEVI KELLY.

LODGE HATRED OF ST. JOHN.

HIAWATHA, Kansas, Nov. 21, 1884.

I feel ashamed of Kansas for the way she is treating Mr. St. John. I can see the hand of the lodge in it all. I notice in my own town the men who are the most vindictive are lodge-men. Mr. St. John's saying that he could stand on every plank of the American platform is enough, and they will follow him more vindictively even than they did Pomeroy.

I am satisfied that the Republican defeat is best for our cause, for had they succeeded they would have been more intolerant than ever. I feel sure that the lodge and the saloon must be destroyed, and it seems to me to be a very much greater undertaking than to conquer the rebellion. But "our God is a consuming fire", and Jesus "must reign till he put all enemies under his feet." Yours for truth and righteousness, J. W. MARGRAVE.

—The Manchester, N. H., Odd-fellows take the lead so far this season in public gambling. They cleared in a recent fair $7,000. They sold nearly 10,000 tickets for prizes from $1.50 to $1,000. Many ministers and church-members bolster up such iniquity, and most religious papers keep silence lest they "disturb our Zion."

—The Odd-fellow Sovereign Grand Lodge proposes to punish every Odd-fellow who shall reveal the lodge secrets. What does the "Sovercign Grand Lodge" suppose a converted Odd-fellow cares about its paper threats and paper punishments?

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON XI:—Dec. 14, 1884.—Vanity of Worldly Pleasure.—Eccl. 2: 1–13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Wisdom excelleth folly, as far as light excelleth darkness. Eccl. 2: 13.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The vanity of seeking happiness in worldly pleasure. Vs. 1–4. Solomon's memorable choice in Gibeon shows that in the early part of his reign he adopted the princely motto, Ich dieu (I serve), and found his chief happiness as a king in ruling wisely and justly over a prosperous and loyal people. In later years he made the fatal mistake of seeking his own pleasure and gratification before the good of his subjects. The honor and riches, meant to be a blessing, prove a snare. Solomon, with all his wisdom, did not know how to bear prosperity. This should be a warning to us not to envy worldly success. God knows better than we how much or how little is good for us. "Behold, this also is vanity." Those who make worldly pleasure the object and end of existence will meet with certain disappointment, for selfishness always defeats itself by a law as immutable as gravity. Said Matthew Henry on his death-bed: "You have been used to take notice of the sayings of dying men; this is mine: that a life spent in the service of God, and communion with him, is the most comfortable and pleasant life that can be lived in the world." "I said of laughter, It is mad"—i. e., when made the chief good; harmless mirth, in its proper place, the Scriptures nowhere condemn. "Give myself unto wine"—literally, draw my flesh (body) to wine. The image is taken from a captive drawn in triumph after a conqueror's chariot. What more striking picture could be found of the drunkard, the sensualist, or even the mere pleasure-seeker?

2. The vanity of seeking pleasure by great possessions. Vs. 4–11. The prodigal expenditures of Louis XIV in building royal residences and laying out vast pleasure-grounds while his people were starving, was one of the chief causes which lead to the first French Revolution; and doubtless Solomon, by burdening his subjects with heavy taxes to carry on these "great works," laid the foundation for the revolt of Israel under his son and successor, Rehoboam. Immersed in pleasure the king did not hear the murmurs of the people. Though this was a different and higher method of seeking happiness than by mere gratification of the appetite, the practical result was the same: "vanity and vexation of spirit." We may give ourselves to literature, art or science, but if we pursue these things selfishly, with no thought of God's glory or the good of our fellow-man, we shall find them as unsatisfying as lower pleasures.

3. The superior excellence of wisdom. Golden Text. It ought not to be hard for us to distinguish wisdom from folly when they are as different as light and darkness. God has implanted in every bosom a divine instinct to see that virtue is superior to vice; that churches and school-houses are better than saloons; that open, Christian methods are better than the dark ways of the lodge. Like Solomon, the majority of men have more wisdom than they put in practice.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

How was Solomon's resolve like the rich man's in our Saviour's parable? Luke 12: 19. What was the beginning of his sin? Chron. 1: 16; Prov. 16: 18; Rev. 3: 17.

NOTES FROM PELOUBET

"I will prove thee with mirth." Solomon was disappointed in the thorny path of wisdom and knowledge, yet not disheartened by the failure; he will try a new path. The man of wisdom turns himself into a man of pleasure. A great downward step indeed was it from the ways of God, or even from the pleasure of enlarged intellect, to the froth of an empty mind, to the brutal pleasures of sense! A fearful experiment! This is man's common delusion, to suppose that happiness is the creature of circumstances. Little does the self-deluded victim know that he carries the principle of his misery in his own bosom.—Bridges.

"I said of laughter, It is mad . . . of mirth, What doeth it?" The joy of the world is so constituted that it entails repentance, mortification and grief; but the pleasure that the faithful find in God is spiritual, constant, satisfying and inexpressible.—Starke.

"Yet acquainting mine heart with wisdom." A parenthetical clause that clearly indicates what the inner man of the preacher did whilst his flesh rioted in pleasure and enjoyments. The sense is, I did not plunge headlong into coarse, fleshly gratifications, but true to the warning counsel in Prov. 31: 4, I tested with calm reflection and in a composed way, whether real contentment was to be secured by means of sensual joys. —Zoekler.

"Till I might see what was that good." Till by trying several methods I might find out the true way to contentment and satisfaction.—Pool. He went over to the enemy's country, not as a deserter, but as a spy, to discover the nakedness of the land.—Henry.

"Great works . . . houses." He does not here refer to the Temple, but to the houses that he built for his own convenience and pleasure. His own dwelling-house was thirteen years in building. It is called "the king's house" in 1 Kings 9: 10. Solomon also built a house for Pharaoh's daughter, who was one of his wives. It was built of costly stones. Besides these, he built large and beautiful cities: Millo, Hazor, Megiddo, Gezer, Bethhoron, Baalath, and Tadmor in the wilderness. He built also the walls of Jerusalem. As to Tadmor (Palmyra or the Palm-tree city), its ruins are still the objects of wonder and admiration.—Peloubet.

"Made me gardens and orchards." The word for "orchards" is "paradises," i. e., parks or pleasure-grounds;

it occurs in Song of Sol. 4: 13, and Neh. 2: 8.—Cook. There were three of these paradises. One near Jerusalem, at the junction of the valley of Hinnom and of the Kedron, afterwards known as The King's Garden. A second, on a larger scale, was about seven or eight miles south of Jerusalem, and a short distance south of Bethlehem, at Etham, a spot still marked by three gigantic reservoirs which bear the name of the Pools of Solomon, and an adjoining hill still bears the name of the "Little Paradise." The third paradise was far away to the north. On the heights of Hermon, looking over the plain of Damascus, in the vale of Baalbec, were cool retreats from the summer heat.—Stanley.

"Possessions of great and small cattle." Rather, herds of oxen and sheep. At the consecration of the Temple he sacrificed hecatombs (1 Kings 8: 63), and the daily supply for the royal kitchen, which will at the same time serve to show the extent of the royal household, was (1 Kings 4: 23) enormous.—Delitzsch.

"There was no profit under the sun." None of these worldly things were profitable as the end and aim of life. Every one was disappointing. These are the words of the man who drank the fullest cup of earth's best joy, who "set nature on the rack to confess its uttermost strength for the delighting and satisfying of man."—Abp. Leighton. I can truly say that while I become daily more convinced of the empty and unsubstantial nature of all earthly possessions and enjoyments, I find all the innocent pleasures and accommodations of life doubled and trebled to me.—Rev. J. T. Nottige.

"For what can the man do that cometh after the king." Who could have so good an opportunity to test what this world can do for man, as the richest and shrewdest king in the world. If he could not satisfy his soul with pleasure, then no one can. The experiment was decisive.—Peloubet.

"Then I saw that wisdom excelleth folly." Though wisdom, as a source of rest, bears the stamp of vanity, we must not underrate its relative value. It is the gift of God, opening to us channels of rich pleasure and important usefulness to our fellow-creatures.—Bridges.

Although the highest good and true and lasting blessedness cannot be found in worldly things, it can be found in Jesus Christ. In his forgiveness of sins, in his love to us and our love to him, in consecration of all to his service, in doing good to our fellow-men as to his brethren and for his sake, in the hope of heaven through him, and in cultivating those qualities which make heaven and fit us for heaven, can be found perfect and enduring satisfaction, a worthy object for the soul, the highest good of life.—Pel.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1884.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1884.

A church with a good orthodox creed, with secret societies in its membership, resembles a basket of peaches or barrel of apples with a layer of sound and beautiful fruit on the top, but full of half rotten peaches or apples underneath.

There are some ten churches in Olathe, Kansas, and seventeen secret lodges; only one for women. The good Dr. McMillan, Covenanter, and Rev. Mr. Vail, Baptist, see that these secret cancers are robbing the churches and families of the pleasant town of Olathe of their life and the means of life. Another prominent minister says: "I have given no attention to secret societies."

Gov. St. John and lady attended at the Wesleyan church, Olathe, Kans., on Sabbath, Nov. 23, in the morning, and the Governor again at night, when the discourse was directly against the lodge. He is in good health and spirits, though in the daily receipt of Republican threats of murder, such as President Finney of Oberlin used often to receive. The chief Republican argument against the Democrats in the late campaign, was the danger of their assassinating negroes in the South for voting as they desired to vote. St. John now receives Republican threats of assassination in the North for the same cause, viz., not voting for the dominant party; and Republican papers urge this fiendish business on. See the Kansas City papers passim.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

OLATHE, Kansas, Nov. 24, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I preached here in the Wesleyan church, yesterday (Sabbath) morning, to a handful of people, and a fair congregation at night. I have attended two religious meetings here on Wednesday and Friday evenings last, and the Spirit of God was manifestly present in both. Several requested prayer, and we are to have a union prayer-meeting in the Wesleyan church to-night.

To-morrow I go to Bro. Richards of Fort Scott. He is president of the Kansas Auxiliary Christian Association, of which Dr. McMillan of Olathe is secretary. Bro. Paul Feemster resigned, as State Agent in Kansas, and has taken the pastorate of his church in Pearlette. The Association appointed Rev. R. Loggan of Clifton, in his place. Mr. Loggan came all the way from Plattsmouth, Nebraska, to the first of our conventions in Aurora, Oct. 31st, 1867, now seventeen years ago. When he had done speaking to us in the city hall there, Hon. Philo Carpenter, who sat by my side, whispered to me, "These men are giants!"

Mr. Loggan has worked steadily these seventeen years. He now writes to secretary McMillan thus:

CLIFTON, Kans., Nov. 14, 1884.

Dear Bro.—* * * I could not unreservedly take the agency without some assurance of being sustained; and if the committee can get an efficient agent I will be glad to have him take the ageney. If not I am willing to let my name remain and hold some meetings as the way opens. * * *

My prayer is that the interest in the cause may be much increased in this State and everywhere. Yours in love,

R. LOGGAN.

I am to see Dr. McMillan to-day and go to Rev. J. A. Richards to-morrow. I know not how Bro. Loggan's words above will affect others; but they move me deeply. If we do not find means to set FIFTY such men at work this year, I fear God will find some other way to reach our purses, as he did by letting loose upon us the war of disunion. Then, Charles Atkinson of Moline, told me, "I run a line through the middle of my property [it was immense], and set off one half of it to support the war."

WAR CLOUDS.

A mullatto edits the World newspaper here at Wyandotte. The editor handed me a number of his paper, Nov. 15, containing this:

"Old Saint John, the evil spirit of the earth, has done his work. May the bottled up curses of heaven be thrown upon him, and may he have that remorse of conscience which will make him, like 'Judas,' go and hang himself. Then let some fellow write above his head this inscription: The worst traitor, the foulest fanatic, and the vilest crank that ever lived."

This same paper demands that Cleveland be not seated, but that the votes of three Southern States be thrown out on account of frauds. There are not wanting men enough of this stamp who cannot write at all, to follow such leaders and plunge our country in blood.

I said, "St. John was your good angel during the exodus, why do you curse your good angel?"

"Ba—h—h," he bawled out. "He gave us culled uns some ole clos," etc., etc.

Now it is not difficult to trace this cowardly assassin's zeal back to the money voted and sent by brewers and distillers, and paid out of secret lodges to defeat St. John, compared with which clean cash, the old clothes and bread gathered by St. John for the poor, naked, starving, dying fugitives from the ex-slave-holders were regarded with contempt by this well-fed, well-dressed stimulator of assassination.

There are photographs of St. John lynched, and hanging by a rope, his neck bones parted in the most horrible manner, and the Kansas City Journal suggests that St. John be taken out back of the deaf-and-dumb asylum, not far from his house, and made to howl so that the deaf could hear his groans. I saw one of those pictures day before yesterday and inscribed above it: "John Peter St. John (his name is Pierce not Peter), Judas Annanias," etc., etc. As yet this savagery does not reach and affect the masses of the Republican party, only that small portion who would stab for a little money and a chance of impunity. And if traced to their source these wicked outbreaks would be found to come from men who have sworn themselves, and help swear others to have their throats cut if they do not conceal the crimes of a "brother."

THE MORAL.

I hope those members of the American party who refused to vote for St. John because "he is a Mason," will carefully ponder the above. Are those men mistaken? Is St. John's heart with the lodge which he left seventeen years ago and "will never enter again?"

But let that pass. The coast is clear and the deck scoured. St. John is no candidate nor will any one be for three years. Let us apply ourselves to God and to God's people. The skies are all bright and the omens all propitious. Satan never howls till his cause is in danger. Give us fifty lecturers like Loggan.

SOME SOUNDS OF RAIN—ABOUT ST. JOHN—WHAT ARE WE TO DO?

FORT SCOTT, Kansas, Nov. 26th, 1884.—We held meetings at Olathe on Wednesday, Friday, and Monday evenings, and twice on the Sabbath with manifest tokens of God's presence. On Wednesday evening seven requested prayer, and on Monday evening toward the close of a good season of witnessing for Christ, a young man arose far back and said:

"I wish to speak. I knew nothing of these meetings till yesterday and I know not why I have been drawn here to-night. My father was a Freemason and a moderate drinker, and used to give me the sediment of his glass when I was a little boy. He educated me in that school and I graduated with his highest honors, such as they were. I became a drunkard. I had a perfectly inveterate passion for gambling, and have been living the miserable life which these things imply. I had about given up all expectation of escape, but these meetings have kindled just a little hope, that I may be saved and be of some use to my fellow-men. I wish you would all pray for me."

His visage looked somewhat battered, and confirmed his words. But he was, on the whole, a well-looking young man, and evinced inherent native power of thought and utterance. If he escapes the power of the devil, he may follow Gough. Christians were much impressed with his and other cases, and there was prayer and joy in the Holy Ghost.

A TRUE ESTIMATE OF ST. JOHN.

Addressed to M. R. Britten, Dea. John Park, Peter Howe, Esq., and other Americans who did not vote for St. John..—The political battle-field is clear. There are now no candidates; the smoke is blown off, and we can see clearly. I have been a week at Olathe. I am now out here where, in 1842, there was a fort named for old General Scott, around which a town of some ten thousand people has grown up. Before prohibition, each night was hideous; now it is an orderly city, with seventeen secret lodges, besides a small army of clans professing temperance, and the G. A. R., which, one of the members translated "Grand Army of Rogues."

In 1882 there were twenty-four cases in court docketed under Prohibition. Ten were withdrawn at the cost of the defendants, who promised to keep the law. Thirteen of the fourteen were prosecuted to conviction, costing the county in all $87.50 and paying the county school fund above eleven hundred dollars. The same year six criminal cases cost the county $704, without a single conviction. There are still some liquor sellers, rattle-snakes and skunks in this vicinity, but they all keep out of sight. Those who say the liquor-law is a failure are those who wish to have it fail. There are still fresh cases of prosecution. Such is St. John's judicial record here, in a city sprung from a fort.

IS HE A MASON?

He left the lodge seventeen years ago, and told Senator Pomeroy and Dr. Kirby, myself and others, that he pays no dues, gives no gifts, and "shall never enter the lodge again." This, too, he has told Finch, Van Vleet of the Lever, Dr. Jutkins and leading Prohibitionists. Van Vleet said to secretary Stoddard and myself, "If the Good Templar lodges were all dead, I would not turn my hand over to bring them to life."

But, you say, Why did St. John not come to our meetings, and say, in print, what he said in private?

I answer: Why did not Obadiah assail Baal-worship openly as Elijah did? Obadiah did not understand Baal-worship as well as Elijah did, and St. John has probably paid as little attention to Freemasonry since he left it as he has to the secret proceedings of the Hottentots.

But now, again you say, since the election is past, and the subject is pressed on his attention, why does he not utter himself like a man and a fearless statesman?

I hope he will in his own time and way. Up to June 3d last, he was a Republican, and up to Nov. 4th, he was a Prohibition candidate; and now he is going on with the branch of our cause which he has studied, understands and has consistently advocated, before and since he entered public life. But he has permitted, if not by his actions invited us to vote for him; and he ought, at least, to thank us for our votes, and to say in print what he everywhere says in private and in letters, "I am in favor of conducting religion and politics by open, not by secret methods." And, as he believes in Christ, who "in secret said nothing," I have faith to believe he will give us his cordial Godspeed.

HIS CASE SUMMED UP.

1. He joined the lodge about twenty, and quit it seventeen years ago; and has given no grips since.

2. Distillers and brewers voted thousands of dollars to defeat him, their money was distributed throughout Kansas by and through secret lodges, and did defeat him; and, by Republican votes, elected an open secessionist, rebel, and Lecompton Democrat in his place; after they had nominated, and over-persuaded him to run for a third term, "Because," said they, "you can save prohibition and we cannot." And now the same Republicans, after politically assassinating him, accuse him of ingratitude; call him "Judas;" and suggest his literal assassination by lynch-pictures and paragraphs!

3. Meantime, St. John meets this tempest of lodge-treachery and wrath, as the light-house answers the storm, simply by calmly shining in its face.

HIS HOME RECORD.

Rev. Dr. W. W. McMillan, a non-voting Scotch Presbyterian and Covenanter, of no political party, has lived on the next street, a hundred rods from St. John, fifteen or twenty years more or less. He is revered and loved, so far as I learn, by every good and intelligent man in Olathe. He said to me, "I consider St. John a strictly honest man; and when I say this of a politician I mean a great deal."

True, when the Bible says, "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man," so as to withdraw his trust from God, I suppose the Bible includes St. John and all the rest of us. But though I may never live to see him again a candidate for any office, I here record for those to read who come after me, that, if he is not left to swerve from his integrity, as did some of the old reformer kings, there are possibilities of benefit to this country in John P. St. John beyond any other man who is now known in the arena of political life. He is now fifty-one years old, and his wife, who is several years younger, is declared by all whom I heard speak of her to be one of the excellent of the earth.

WELL, WHAT SHALL WE DO?

Prof. Bailey in a late American has told us, in transparent language; with ideas as transparent, exactly what the American party has now to do, viz., to divorce the secret lodges from God's cause of reform. "For what concord hath light with darkness, or he that believeth with an infidel?" 2 Cor. 6:15.

Secretary Stoddard has written Prof. Bailey to correspond with President Seelye, Gough, Miner, and Scovil, to see if they will co-operate in a convention to carry out this divorce, called for by vote of the National Board of Directors at their meeting Nov. 11th. Let us hear as speedily as possible. But we need to take to those gentlemen, at least ten thousand signers to the call for such a convention; to meet, perhaps, the last of May in Northampton, Mass. And let Senator Pomeroy go up there amid the hills, where he was born, and which heard his blast of defiance to the haughty and terrible slave-power; and by the last of June St. John may be prepared to meet us in Farwell Hall, Chicago, and turn the silver stream of his logic, starred with facts and softened with a loving philanthropy, on that dark system of lodges, by which mankind are "deceiving and being deceived." J. B.

—Pres. J. Blanchard returned from Kansas on Saturday last.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman reached the Cynosure office last week Wednesday, quite unexpectedly. He spent Thanksgiving day with friends in Wheaton and next day started on a lecture trip toward central Illincis. His address will be at this office.

—Rev. A. M. Milligan, D. D., left Pittsburgh with Mrs. Milligan, for Los Angeles in southern California, during the first week in November. He spent a week in Kansas and felt much improvement during his stay. Letters from California encourage his many friends with the report of continued improvement in his health.

—We do not wish to disturb the feelings of anyone needlessly, but our Republican friends must remember they are human along with the rest of us; and when they voted to make John A. Logan, a 33-degree Mason, possible Prcsident of the United States, it did not show any more wisdom than voting for St. John, or possibly Cleveland.

—Rev. J. T. Hobson, who some eight or ten years ago conducted ably a reform monthly in Hartsville, Ind., in which anti-lodgery was a prominent topic, is now preaching in Medora, in the same State, and has latcly joined to his pastoral labors the conduct of a small weekly devoted to local interests.

—The Blanchard, Iowa, Record, says that Elder D. P. Rathbun has been lecturing lately in Ringgold county, Iowa. It was at Kellerton, in this county, that Elder Rathbun endured his last and nearly fatal attack by the lodge minions. It is understood that he will visit Blanchard, College Springs and other points in the southwestern part of the State.

—The New Town, Canada, Register, commenting on the late revelation of Odd-fellowship in the Toronto courts in the suit brought by Kniver of Whitby for damages, says: "Is it necessary that the ceremony of initiation into a secret society that is, as is understood, simply a brotherhood of "mutual aid and comfort" should be made a terrible ordeal, attended by the infliction of physical pain, and even personal indignities, on the candidate? And after this do the members still expect to recruit their ranks among self-respecting men?

—One of our correspondents asks if the Sunday Mercury of Portland, Oregon, speaks truly when it says, without giving the writer's name, that when St. John was first before the State convention for nomination as governor "he was as drunk as a 'biled owl.' In fact. he was so drunk that when the announcement was made that he was defeated, he hung his hat up on a spittoon and staggering to the center of the room, said he 'didn't give a d—n for the result;' that he would 'stay with the racket until he got the office, and then he'd soft-soap the moral elemcnt until they sent him to the U. S. Senate.'" This was in 1876. A "Sunday" paper is a good place to originate such unqualified falsehood. It is untrue in whole and particular.

REV. H. H. HINMAN will devote a portion of his time to lecturing in Illinois this winter. His first route will be Lockport, Nov. 28, thence to Odell and Bloomington, thence to Mendota, then west to Galesburg and south to Quincy, stopping at all stations along the line where friends desire his services and will write me here in time to make the necessary arrangements. This will be especially favorable to those along this line, but if others in any part of the State want work they should notify us at this office at once. J. P. STODDARD, Sec'y N. C. A.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

—The Washington (D. C.) American reports a recent Masonic banquet at which five kinhs of wine wcre served.

—A writer says: "There were two Dukes of Richmond who were said to be Grand Masters, the first the son of Charles II., who died in 1723 or 1724; the other who is said to have assisted in revising the constitution of 1738."

—J. H. Drummond, of Maine, announces the number of Masons in the United States at 587,321, an increase of 7,495 over the preceding year. The number raised is given at 30,620, an increase of 2,246 over the preceding year.

—Last April the following appeared in the "religious news" of one of our Chicago papers: "The Rose Croix Chapter and Mt. Vernon Commandery of Knights Templar, attended High street church, (Columbus, O.,) in a body, Easter Sunday, to hear a sermon by Rev. Sir Knight Anderson."

—"Past Grand Commander and Supreme Prelate John S. King," of Toronto, Canada, says: "I am in a position to say that in all probability the Pythian parade in Toronto in July, 1886, will include not less than 5,000 to 6,000 uniformed knights, under the command of the Major General and a large staff, and that not less than 150 divisions of the Uniformed Rank, well drilled and disciplined, will parade; besides which there will be thousands of knights and their friends from all parts of the United States, and a large influx of Canadians as well."

— The Plenary Council of the Catholic church is in session in Baltimore. There is to be a great gathering of Methodists in the same city, when the centenary of Methodism will be celebrated with proper ceremonies. The Southern Christian Advocate says: "Our challenge and invitation to the Christian public—both Protestant and Romanist—is to look first on the one picture and then on the other; and to say honestly and candidly which best suits our century—our civilization—our country—our immediate times—the genius and spirit of our institutions—the demands of our social and public and personal life."

—Since the organization of what is known as the "Uniform Rank" (a kind of Knight Templar degrce) in the Knights of Pythias order, warrants have been issued to 277 divisions, of which Ohio has the greatest number, 44; California second, with 22. This degree is divided by regimental divisions in military style. Illinois, New Jersey, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, New York and Wisconsin have one regiment each; Indiana and California, two each; Pennsylvania three and Ohio four. There are five brigade divisions in the country. What mean all these warlike preparations, and to what authority are these armies responsible?

—Many persons who consider Freemasonry both wicked and expensive think well of Odd-fellowship as an insurance society. Past Grand Master Gardner gives the gross receipts of the New Hampshire Odd-fellow lodges from their commencement to the present time, $907,927.49; Total relief, $357,712.11. Rather poor insurance company where it takes almost two-thirds of the money to pay for doing the business. "Grand Patriarch" John Gillis gives total receipts of N. H. Grand Encampment for past year, $7,551.02; Total relief, $1,871.37. These "Grand Patriarchs" pay in $75 with the chance of getting back $18 in relief.

—"Grand Commander" Alexander McLean, at the late meeting of the Select Knights of the order of United Workmen, in Peoria, referred to the order as follows: "From a small band of fifteen hard-working mechanics, organized in 1868 in the city of Meadsville, Pa., we have now become a full-grown society, numbering about 150,000 strong, healthy men in the United States and Canadas—15,000 of whom are in this State. We have paid out nearly $10,000,000 since our organization, and in this State have disbursed nearly $1,000,000, every dollar of which has been paid to needy families, bringing comfort and help to the widows and orphans at the very time they most need it."

—The Inter Ocean of the 8th ult., gives the following brief account of a Masonic baptism of children in San Francisco, which may be placed alongside the similar performance in New York: "The seldom occurring ceremony, the Masonic baptism of children, took place lately in King Solomon's Hall, Masonic Temple, San Francisco, making twenty-four children wards of La Parfaite Union Lodge, No. 17, Free and Accepted Masons. The Worshipful Master, Daniel Levy, addressed the large and interested audience in French, which was followed by an explanation in English of the singular ceremony. Dr. Jules Simon, in his oration, gave a lucid description of the progress of Masonry." It would seem that this California lodge has baptised twenty-four children!

—Lodges are not chartered, we are told, but last June 27th Senator Mitchell introduced in the Senate a bill to incorporate the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic. The object of this association as stated in the bill are: 1. To preserve and strengthen the kind and fraternal feelings which bind together the soldiers, sailors, and marines who united to suppress the late rebellion, and to perpetuate the memory and history of the dead. 2. To assist such former comrades-in-arms as need help and protection, and to extend needful aid to the widows and orphans of those who have fallen. 3. To maintain true allegiance to the United States of America, based upon paramount respect for and fidelity to the National Constitution and law; to discountenance whatever tends to weaken loyalty, incites to insurrection, treason, or rebellion, or in any manner impairs the efficiency and permanency of our Constitution, and to encourage the spread of universal liberty, equal rights, and justice to all men.

—The "Nobles of the Mystic Shrine" is the startling cognomen of a Masonic offshoot which lately held a meeting in Indianapolis, of which the following was the announcement: "The ancient Arabic order, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. will meet Friday, Nov. 21, in the Scottish Rite Building, Indianapolis, Ind. The following history of the order is given, which will bc read with interest: The order was instituted by the Mohammedan, Kalif Alec, in the year of the Hegira 25 (A. D. 656), at Mekkah, in Arabia, as an inquisition or vigilance committee. Its object was to dispense justice and execute punishment upon criminal who escaped their just deserts through the tardiness or favoritism of the courts; and also to promote religious toleration among cultured men of all nations. The order embraces temples in different parts of the world, and is one of the most highly favored among the many secret societies that abound in oriental countries, and gathers about its shrines a select few of the best educated and cultured classes. Its secret or real purposes can only be known to those who have encircled the "Mystic Shrine" and subjected themselves to the Moslem test. The order, as introduced in the United States in 1871, is devoid of all Islamism, and in harmony with the Christian ideas and the laws of America. Its power promises to bc great, and its future brilliant. Although adhering to ancient ceremonies and rules, it devotes itself especially to the social welfare of its members; they practice charity and teach an enlightened doctrinc. Its ritual was confided to distinguished Masons of the ancient accepted Scottish Rite and Knights Templar, who, by the constitutional authority conferred upon them, organized the Temple of Mecca, in the city of New York, in 1871. An imperial grand council of the order for the United States of America was proclaimed June 6, 1876, when it was decided that only Masons of the thirty-second and thirty-third degrees and Knights Templar should be eligible to membership, in order that the purposes of the shrine might be fully carried out, and its interests enhanced. Temples of the order in prooperous condition exist in nearly all the principal cities of the Union, and initiation into the shrine entitles the faithful to a diploma admitting them to the temples at New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Rochester, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago, Clevelard, Detroit, Louisville, and San Francisco."

On January 1, 1884, Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, of London, had sold 100,000 copies of W. M. Thayer's life of Garfield, "From Log Cabin to the White House." In January they issued a cheap edition of 100,000 at a price equal to 37½ cents a copy. Up to that time no other English publisher had undertaken to print and sell the book. But when the aforesaid edition for 37½ cents appeared, Ward, Locke & Co. followed with a well illustrated edition for 25 cents; and this was followed by an issue from the press of Frederick Warne & Co. for 12½ cents. Ward, Locke & Co. also issued the work in a handsomely bound volume for 75 cents, to compete with Hodder & Stoughton's best edition for $1.25. This lively competition continued with unabated interest at last account.—The Lutheran.

BUSINESS.

PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT.

Again the auspicious time for securing Cynosure subscribers has come. The election excitement is passing away. Intelligent Republicans are sceing that the bitter feeling held and ostracism practiced toward papers which advocated the election of St. John, is really the Ku-Klux spirit of the South which they themselves have so hated. Hence, now is the time to push forward the reform in your neighborhood. Will you do it? So far as possible will you not see that every reader within five miles of your home is invited to subscribe for the Cynosure? The Home, Temperance, Religious and Secular News, Editorials, Farm Notes, Market Reports, Correspondence, Editorial Notes of Current Events, Children's Department, Literary Reviews, and last but not least the New Story, "Between Two Opinions" adapt it to almost every class of readers, while many who seek the purity of the church and improvement of politics consider it an aid that they must have.

Thos. Fraser, Galt, Ont., Canada, writes:—"Although seven papers come to my house, the Cynosure is the paper for me as it gives information that I can get no where else. I hope to get a few more subscribers for it."

SUBSCRIBE FOR EIGHT WEEKS.

One agent sent in 24 trial subscribers last week and this week 26 more; others have sent in less but to one and all we are thankful and are glad to be co-workers with you. Some of these trial subscribers are becoming yearly ones. If your neighbors will not take the Cynosure for a year are there not many of them to whom you can send it on trial,—eight weeks for twenty-five cents?

THE HOME.

IN PRAISE OF HOME.

BY JOEL SWARTZ, D. D.

Were there a tuneful note unsung,
A fitting word of love unspoken,
A long suspended harp unstrung,
Some alabaster box unbroken
Which might in praise an offering be
Of home, sweet home, I'd give it thee.

Home is the haven of the heart
From world-storms free, by God appointed;
A temple, rather, set apart
And by His special grace anointed,
Where free from conflict, storm and strife
We share the bliss and joys of life.

Wherever hence our feet may roam
O'er all the wide and peopled earth,
Still turns the heart to friends and home,
The cherished spot that gave us birth,
And there beneath its smiling sky
We ask to live and long to die.

And when we touch life's longest score
And tired feet refuse to roam,
We sigh once more for childhood's door
And ask for vanished friends and home,
And long, at last, our dust to rest
With those we earliest loved and best.

THE REDEMPTION OF THE BODY.

Pain shadows every thought of death. The kiss on the cold lips is a kiss of longing, and not of joy. We love the grave with hunger gnawing in the heart. We stand by it as the last house that the body occupies on earth. We festoon it, on the outside, with evergreens and flowers. In utter helplessness we sit on the sod by the closed door. This house is not a home that our presence can make bright. Our longings are impotent. Our efforts to help the dead are hopeless. The pain and hopelessness is not connected with the spirit that has been living in this body. We believe in immortality. We know that somewhere, as our Lord has told us, there is a "paradise" for the redeemed. Our hearts ache over the part that is dead.

We say that the body is clothing, tattered and unclean, worn out by the ravages of time and sin, and yet, all the while, the heart feels a band around it, and there is a choking sensation that can hardly be controlled. We love the dead body. We dread its dissolution. Much of the sorrow that blinds our eyes with tears is over the return of the body to dust. How much of this strong love for the dead is right, and how much is wrong, is hard to tell, but the fact that we have it is a fact that cannot lightly be put down. It is a fact, also, that this feeling is world-wide. In every nation respect is shown to "the dwelling-place of the Spirit."

Sometimes we who are Christians overlook the comfort that Christ brings into the valley of the shadow of death, and leaves there. Heaven lies on the other side of the valley. If the soul is only piloted through the shadows to the gates of the city, it seems as if we had no more to ask. We have so often taken for granted the thought that sin has triumphed over the body, and the grave is the mark of victory. Divine love provides better things for us than we expect. The despised dust, as well as the priceless soul, is dear to our Lord. He has planned for the redemption of even the body. The triumph over sin will be complete. In the grave it shall not have dominion. Its power over the body shall be broken in the very last stronghold, and Christ shall be supreme. His is a wonderful redemption, extending to all that he rightfully hold dear. He conquers death for the soul and the body. "The hour is coming in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth." "He shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." "And God hath both raised up the Lord and will also raise up us by his power. Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Christ?" It is the body that is "sown in dishonor" and "raised in glory." It is the "corruptible" that "puts on incorruption." The RESURRECTION calls forth St. Paul's brilliant song of triumph over death.

The Egyptians embalmed the body in spices and ointments and rare perfumes. The body of each one of our dear ones has been embalmed. It was laid in the grave, surrounded by the royal promises of our King. More pungent than spices, more powerful than costly ointment, more fragrant than rare perfumes, they hallow and preserve the precious clay. The redemption of the body is of the Lord, and is marvelous in our eyes.—Golden Rule.

UNCONVERTED MINISTERS.

There are, without doubt, many unconverted men in the ministry. It is not necessary to suppose they are hypocrites or deceivers. They may be well-intending men, men of good principles and religious inclinations; they may be honest as far as they know, and have no intention to deceive people; but still the fact remains that they have probably never been truly converted to God. They have heard the gospel, but they do not know the Saviour; they have been religiously educated, but they have never been soundly converted. Such persons can never truly preach the gospel. They are not sent of God, nor is their ministry sanctioned by him. They are not necessarily corrupt, nor hypocritical. They are simply ignorant of God's righteousness, and their fear of God is taught by the traditions of men, not by the commands of God nor the leadings of the Holy Spirit. What have such men to do with preaching the gospel of Christ? Their first business is to seek the Lord with all their hearts, and learn the way of life and salvation; and then if he shall send them into his vineyard they can proclaim to ruined men the grace and glory of that Saviour who has bought them with his blood, justified them by his grace anointed them by his Spirit, and who will keep them by his power through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time.—Armory.

WHAT IS WANTED.

The Holy Spirit is able to make the Word as successful now as in the days of the apostles. He can bring in by hundreds and thousands, as well as ones or twos. The reason why we are not more prosperous is, that we have not the Holy Spirit with us in might and power, as in early times. If we had the Spirit sealing our ministry with power, it would signify very little about our talent. Men might be poor and uneducated; their words might be broken and ungrammatical; there might be none of the polished periods of Hall, or glorious thunders of Chalmers; but if the might of the Spirit attended them, the humblest evangelist would be more successful than the most learned of divines, or the most eloquent of preachers. It is extraordinary grace, not talent, that wins the day. It is extraordinary spiritual power, not extraordinary mental power that we need. Mental power may fill a chapel, but spiritual power fills the church. Mental power may gather a congregation; spiritual power will save souls. We want spiritual power. Oh! we know some before whom we shrink into nothing as to talent, but who have no spiritual power, but when they speak, they have not the Holy Spirit with hem; but we know others, simple-hearted, worthy men, who speak their country dialect, and who stand up to preach in their country-place, and the Spirit of God clothes every word with power. Hearts are broken, souls are saved, and sinners are born again. O Spirit of the living God! we want THEE. Thou art the life, the soul, the source of thy people's success. Without thee, they can do nothing, with thee, they can do everything.—C. H. Spurgeon.

PUBLIC WORSHIP BY TELEPHONE.—The following are the impressions of an American invalid on following, through the telephone in his sick chamber, public worship at a distant place: "I first heard," he states, "the footsteps of people entering the church, then the rustling of dresses, afterwards the moving of fans and the taking of books from the boxes. On a sudden the organ pealed forth, and the sound, once so familiar, drew tears from my eyes as though it came down from heaven. When the hymn began I found it in my book, and without fear of disturbing anyone with my poor, worn voice, I sang it through with the greatest joy. In like manner I followed the lesson in my own Bible. Nobody can imagine the solemn effect of the Word of God coming thus on the wings of electricity. I seemed to be in the immediate presence of God. In the same way I followed the prayer, underlining each petition with a final amen, while, when the minister prayed for the sick, and the sorrowful, he seemed to be interceding for me."—Ex.

CORRECT.—In a contemporary we read the following: In New Haven, Conn., a number of newsboys were arrested and locked up for crying "Sunday" papers on the streets. A recently enacted ordinance gave the officers authority for doing so. There is need of the same kind of ordinance and official fidelity in hundreds of other places, for the traffic in the morning papers goes on as if it was entirely different from other kinds of business that the laws prohibit. It takes a judge of unusual stupidity to decide that selling papers, cigars, whisky and certain other "luxuries" is to be classed among works of necessity, but such decisions have been made, and under them the trade goes on. Better judges are first needed and then reform can be hoped for.

LOVING WORDS.

Loving words will cost but little,
Journeying up the hill of life;
But they make the weak and weary
Stronger, braver for the strife.
Do you count them only trifles?
What to earth are sun and rain?
Never was a kind word wasted,
Never one was said in vain.

When the cares of life are many,
And its burdens heavy grow
For the ones who walk beside you,
If you love them tell them so.
What you count of little value
Has an almost magic power,
And beneath their cheering sunshine
Hearts will blossom like a flower.

So, as up life's hill we journey,
Let us scatter, all the way,
Kindly words, to be as sunshine
In the dark and cloudy day.
Grudge no loving word, my brother,
As along through life you go,
To the ones who journey with you;
If you love them tell them so.

BIBLE READINGS FOR THE YOUNG.

SOLOMON'S TEMPLE. Read 1 Chron. 29.

Take heed now; for the Lord hath chosen thee to build an house for the sanctuary: be strong, and do it. 1 Chron. 28:10.

1. On what occasion did David thus charge Solomon, his son? 1 Chron. 28.

2. What was the sanctuary? Heb. 9:2 5; 1 Kings 8:3-11.

3. What do the words, "'Take heed now," signify? Exod. 25:40; Heb. 8:5.

4. Of whom was the temple a type? John 2:19-21.

5. What temple for God ought we to be constantly building? 2 Cor. 6:16; Eph. 2:20.

6 By what pattern must we frame this temple? 1 Pet. 2: 21; Col. 2: 6, 7.

HER OBEDIENCE.

Far out on a western prairie lived little Jane Austin with her father and mother. The place might have seemed lonely to some people, for there were no houses in sight of her home, not any neighbors within several miles, but the three who lived there were quite contented; and when, a few months before my story begins, a baby came to gladden the household with his presence, their happiness was complete.

The house itself was not much more than a cabin. It had been roughly put together at a time when skilled labor was not to be had; but it had served for a shelter, and now, when prosperity had rewarded years of toil and carefulness, it was to be replaced by a larger and better dwelling. The plans had been drawn, the estimates made, and one bright summer morning Mr. Austin set out for the nearest town to purchase the lumber for it.

His wife was not afraid to be left alone with the children. She was a courageous woman, calm and self-possessed at all times, and her little daughter had inherited the same traits. There was much to be done about the house, and the two were very busy. The time passed quickly. The second day was drawing to a close, when Mrs. Austin noticed signs of a change in the weather.

"We must fasten all the doors very securely to-night," she said to Jane, as they went together to the barn to feed the cattle. "I think there will be a storm before morning."

Dark clouds were gathering on the western horizon, and before they went to bed, the wind was blowing in fitful, violent gusts that rattled seriously against the timbers of the old house. Still no thought of great danger entered their minds, though Jane said to her mother, after she had laid down in bed beside her:

"I shall be glad when the new house is built, mamma, for the wind won't make such a noise then."

"Yes," said Mrs. Austin, "I think we shall enjoy it; but try to go to sleep now, dear, in spite of the noise."

Acting upon her own advice she laid her head upon the pillow and was soon unconscious of all around her. How long she slept she did not know, but she was awakened by the slamming of a door. She listened a moment, and then feeling sure that the wind had forced open the outer door of the kitchen, she arose, and slipping on her shoes, went down stairs to fasten it.

There she found she was quite right in her conjecture. The slight bolt had given way, and the door was swinging back and forth at the will of the wind.

But she was quite equal to the emergency. Lighting a lantern, and getting a hammer and some nails, she pushed the heavy tool-chest against the door, and standing on it, securely nailed a piece of wood across from one door-post to the other. Satisfied that all was safe, she turned to go up stairs, when with a roar like that of some wild beast the tempest smote the house. Then came a fearful crash that almost stunned her and made her heart stand still.

What had happened? Had the roof been carried away? Had the stone chimney fallen and crushed it in? The next moment, in a lull in the storm, she heard her child's voice:

"Mamma, where are you? What is the matter?

She rushed up stairs, calling, "I am here, my darling! I am coming?"

But when she reached the bed-room door she could go no further. She had left it open; it was now nearly closed and some obstruction prevented her from moving it. She held up the lantern and looked through the open space. What a scene met her gaze! The baby's crib in one corner stood untouched; but the chimney had fallen, and crashing through the roof, had made havoc of all else. Where her own head had lain on the pillow, a huge beam rested, and just beyond it she could see the white face and dilated eyes of her little girl.

"Janie," she gasped, "are you hurt? The roof has fallen in."

"No, mamma," said the child, "I am not hurt at all, but I can't get up; something is holding me down.

The mother looked again, and now could see that the stones and rafters had fallen in such a way as to imprison the child completely without injuring her. Oh, to be beside her! to rescue her from her perilous position! for who could tell but that some slight jar might loosen the whole mass, causing it to fall and crush the child?

But the door was immovable, and the poor woman clasped her hands in agony, realizing her own powerlessness.

"Janie," she said, presently, "listen to me, and try to be my own brave little girl. You must not move; if you do you may be hurt. If you will keep quite still, I hope you will be safe. I can do nothing to help you, my darling" (and here the mother almost broke down), "but I can go for help if you promise me not to stir while I am gone."

"Yes, mamma," said a quivering voice. "I will try not to be afraid, if you will leave me the light."

"No, dear," said the mother, "I cannot do that for fear of fire; you are much safer without it. You must believe that God will take care of you in the dark."

"Yes, said the child, gravely, "I know; but oh, mamma! if baby should cry?"

"Never mind baby, dear. He cannot get out of the crib. It will not hurt him to cry a little, and I will be as quick as I can. Now we will ask God to be with you."

The mother knelt down and said aloud, "O my Father, I pray thee to keep in safety my darling children"—

And the child's voice answered, "Amen!"

There was no more hesitation now. Mrs. Austin knew what she must do, and that there was no time to be lost. Throwing on some articles of clothing that hung in a closet on the landing, she hurried to the stable.

Her husband's saddle-horse was there, a creature as gentle as he was fleet of foot. She had him saddled and bridled and was on her way in a few moments. The storm was over, and in the western sky the waning moon shone with a feeble light. She urged the horse to his utmost speed, for she was a fearless rider, but it seemed to her that the three miles she had to go were a hundred at least. Midway she met with an obstacle. A huge tree had been blown down directly across the road. Dismounting, and devoutly thankful that the snake fence was one she could pull down, she tore the rails from their places, led her horse around, made another opening, and proceeded.

The village was reached at last. Stopping at the first house, where the blacksmith lived, she knocked loudly at the door.

In a few moments a voice asked, "Who is there?"

"Mrs. Austin. We have had a fearful accident. My husband is away. I have come for assistance."

In a moment more the door was opened but she would not go in.

"No, let me tell my story here. I must go back at once to my children."

In a few words she told her story. "You will need," she continued, three or four men to help you, and above all, a ladder long enough to reach the upper window; there is no other way of getting into the room. Now I will go back. I know I need not ask you to make all the haste you can, Mr. Green."

For answer the blacksmith turned to his sons with orders to rouse the neighbors, while he himself at once left the house to harness his team and get ready the necessary tools.

Back the mother hastened along the weary way, trying to still the agony at her heart with the hope that no injury had come to her children.

The day was beginning to dawn when she reached her own gate. What was it that fell upon her listening ear? A child's voice singing, actually singing—

"God shall charge his angel legions
Watch and ward o'er thee to keep."

For the first time Mrs. Austin burst into tears. She hastened up the stair. "Janie, my darling, are you still safe?"

"Yes, mamma; I am so glad you have come."

There was no tremor in the little voice now,

"Baby has not cried at all. I heard him move a little and I sang my last Sunday's hymn; and then it seemed so nice, I began to sing it over again. Did no one come with you, mamma?"

"I would not wait for them, dear, but they are coming soon. I think I hear them now," she added, as the sound of wheels in the distance reached her ears. The four fastest horses in the village were bringing strong arms and eager hearts to their assistance.

A few moments more and Mr. Green stood in the room followed by three other men, while Mrs. Austin ran down stairs and stood at the foot of the ladder.

"Take the baby first," said little Jane, and the infant was handed down safe and unhurt to its mother.

"Now, little missy, its your turn; we will have you out of that in a twinkling."

But as the blacksmith approached the bed he saw that it would be no easy task to extricate the child uninjured; for with one careless touch the overhanging mass might fall and crush her.

"Gently, gently," he said, waving back his eager assistants. Then taking a screw-driver from his pocket, he soon had the closet door off its hinges. With that and the mattress and pillows from the crib he built up a barricade over the little girl's head. "Now I think we can raise this broken beam."

The strong iron bars they had brought with them were placed under it.

"One moment," said Mr. Green. "Now, my little girl, as soon as I give the word, creep out just as quickly as you can. Ready! Lift!"

The child drew herself to the head. In an instant a pair of strong arms caught and drew her to the window and as the three other men sprang aside, stones and mortar, beams and rafters fell upon the bed with a fearful crash.

But at the same moment the mother saw the little white clad figure descending the ladder, and with a cry she caught the child in her arms and then fainted away. The first moments of intense excitement had scarcely passed away when one wagon after another began to arrive from the village, where the news of the disaster had rapidly spread. Little Jane was the heroine of the hour.

"It was touch and go with the little one, you may believe," said Mr. Green, with a shiver. "I don't know what ever held up that rafter, for a baby's hand could have shaken it down."

"And she lay there all that time without moving?" said one of his hearers.

"She did that. If she had kicked and struggled like any other child, the whole mass would have fallen and crushed her."

But amidst the general wonder and admiration the child herself was quite unconscious that she had done anything at all remarkable. When questioned she simply said, "Mamma said I must not move."

The good blacksmith took Mrs. Austin and the children to his own home until Mr. Austin's return, and when evening came and they lay down to rest once more, the little girl nestled close to her mother and whispered, "Don't you think God sent his angels last night to take care of us?"

"I am sure of it, my darling," her mother answered, fervently.

So am I; but I am equally sure that the means by which his messengers do their ministry of love are often in our own power: and in this instance they worked the Divine will partly, at least, through a little child's obedience.—Youth's Companion.

TEMPERANCE.

THE EFFECTS OF THE EXCESSIVE USE OF ALCOHOL ON THE MENTAL FUNCTIONS AND BRAIN.

Dr. Clouston, of the Edinburgh Asylum at Morningside, the noted author and specialist, in a recent lecture on this subject writes as follows:

The effects of a single dose of alcohol differ widely in different individuals, and this lies at the root of all scientific inquiries into the matter. The variety of the effects on the mental faculties of different brains is also extreme. This indicates such different qualities and susceptibilities in different brains as regards this agent, that it makes the whole question of the effects of alcohol a most complicated one, not to be explained by a few unqualified assertions. In reply to the question, What are the normal effects of alcohol on the mental forces of the brain? the scientific man must reply, What kind of brain do you mean? And it is only by a careful study of the qualities, the tendencies and potentialities of different brains, that we can answer the first question properly. We need to study the mental qualities of the brain at different periods of life, in the two sexes, in different temperaments and constitutions, in different races, in different states of health and vigor, and with reference to the hereditary tendencies of the organ; for all these things influence the effects of one single small dose of alcohol. So we find, looking from the point of view of the amount of the doses, the effect is very different. There is, I believe, no other agent known which differs so greatly in different instances in the dose needed to produce the same effect on the mental powers as a dose of alcohol, and herein again we find that there must be the greatest difference in the power of resisting the effects of alcohol in different brains. Taking the lower animals, that difference is exceedingly small; an ounce of alcohol given each to a dozen dogs of the same size will practically have the same effect on them all; but an ounce given each to a dozen men has not only the most different effect in the mental faculties it stimulates, as we have seen, but in the amount of the effect it causes. Some brains are exceedingly sensitive to very small quantities; other brains have the power of resisting or tolerating alcohol in a wondrous degree, this being an innate quality quite apart from the effect of the use and custom. These differences are so great as to compel us to conclude that there are enormous inherent disparities in human beings in this respect, and this is no doubt one of the very great dangers in the use of alcohol.

So we also find at the various periods of life, ordinary small doses of alcohol have very different effects. In a child the effect is extremely great; in a boy or girl it is also great, but it is not so great in a growing adolescent. In the two sexes there are also considerable differences, the female having less resisting power, her brain being usually much more susceptible to the influence of this agent. Looking at different races, the difference of effect of the same dose is also extremely great. There are some savage races that are so subject to its influence that a very small dose indeed—half an ounce—will have greater effect on them than two or three ounces will have on an ordinary European. The psychological, the mental, effects of small doses of alcohol are therefore exceedingly various, and we have not yet discovered the precise qualities of brain which caused these differences. We cannot tell beforehand which brain will be susceptible to its effects, and which will not. Looking at the matter next from a point of view of the effects of a much larger dose, these will be found much more uniform. The effect, instead of being stimulating, is then narcotic, and we have a deadening, paralyzing, and temporary arrestment of the mental functions of the brain in every individual if a sufficient quantity is taken. But here we find much variety in the way the result is arrived at, when carefully studied.

In one person we have this paralysis, this deadening, taking place first on the intellectual faculties, in another on the emotional, in another on the propensities, and in another on the power of motion. We see a certain kind of mental degeneration of a slight type, which results in those who habitually take an amount of alcohol that is to them excessive. This slow, but quite marked type of mental degeneration, a doctor of experience soon comes to observe in his patients; and others a certain change mentally, morally, and bodily, in the man who is taking more than is good for him. The expression of his face and eyes, those mirrors of the mind, you see has changed—and for the worse. The mental condition of the man is lowered all round, and especially one effect is noticed, that his higher power of control is lessened. I am safe in saying that no man indulges for ten years in more alcohol than is really good for him without this kind of degeneration being observed, and that although during these ten years he was never once drunk we find him psychologically changed for the worse in his independence of mind, in his spontaneity, After a man has passed forty, such changes are very apt to be faster, and more decided. We see such a man's work and his fortune suffering, but we dare not call him either a drunkard or dissipated, because, as a matter of fact, he has never been drunk, and never intends to be drunk. Whether this degeneration takes place soon or late depends upon inherent resistive capacities of his brain cells. In some individuals the resistive capacity against alcohol is so great that for years they may indulge in its excessive use without this degeneration taking place to any great extent, but in other instances we have it very rapidly developed indeed.

Some men pass into a premature old age and become old at fifty, when they ought to have lived on and been young men up to sixty, and this merely owing to the excessive use of alcohol. Memory and the power of thinking are affected, but you see the lowering most in the finer faculties, the tastes, the more delicate perceptions of things, and the force of character. This is an effect which, I believe, is especially to be observed in men who have used their intellectual powers constantly and vigorously. We often see this effect on the brains of men in our profession of medicine, at the bar, and even among the clerical profession, in a very marked degree, without their owners having been once drunk. In such persons, their mental powers having been greater to begin with, and with a finer edge on them, you notice in a more marked way this degeneration in its progress. This, I may say, is the least marked mental effect of alcohol taken, not so as to produce drunkenness, but taken in greater quantity than the physical constitution of the brain can stand over a long period. In some brains a very small quantity indeed, taken daily, will produce this degeneration.—Scientific American.

ABSTINENCE IN A NEW LIGHT.

On the question of moderate drinking, that eminent authority on physiology, Dr. Alfred Carpenter, writes to the London Times, under the date of October 18, a note which puts the argument for total abstinence in a new and forcible way. After saying that this is the age of precise methods and precise instruments, and that recent practice has made great advance in using medicines with precision and certainty, he goes on thus:—

"The most poisonous articles are thus rendered useful and safe. The most valuable medicines are among the most terrible poisons. Morphia is one of these. It is a sheet-anchor in some of the most severe and dangerous maladies; yet if the patient has been accustomed to use it daily the physician fails to find it answer in the manner in which he is accustomed to see it act upon those who are not, as it were, acclimatized to its use. I am of opinion that alcohol is a most virulent poison, and, under certain circumstances, is a most valuable medicine. The abstainer has the full benefit of its effects when it becomes necessary to use it in cases of illness; but the moderate drinker throws away the benefit which it might be as a medicine. No physician is able to use it as an instrument of precision in one who is accustomed to take it as a diet. The moderate drinker submits to the toxic effect of the dose every day, and his nervous system is already somewhat deadened to its direct influence, so that the dose which produces a decided result on the abstainer has scarcely any effect upon the moderate drinker. A larger and more poisonous dose has to be given, with the certainty of some evil resulting from its use, which will have to be removed before the system returns to its normal and healthy standard.

"It is an instrument of precision in the hands of a physician when he is treating an abstainer. It is no longer so to the moderate drinker; and, as a consequence, the latter suffers by having one precise remedy the less which may be used in his treatment when he requires it."—Independent.

THE CHURCHES.

—Rev. B. T. Roberts, superintendent of the Free Methodist churches, is now in Texas looking after the interests of the denomination in that State.

—There was an attendance at the Chicago Avenue Sunday-school Nov. 23d of 1,437, and only sixty teachers, or an average of twenty-four to a class.

—The clergy and members in this city of the Evangelical church held last week a farewell meeting to Bishop Esher and his wife, who are about to make an extended trip around the world, sailing from San Francisco for Japan Dec. 6. Thence they will go via Hong Kong, Bombay, Calcutta, through India to the Holy Land, whence the Bishop goes direct to Germany, and from there return to Chicago. The object of the trip is to visit the foreign missions of the Evangelical church, of which Bishop Esher is the senior Bishop. The meeting was presided over by Bishop Bowman, of Allentown, Pa. Bishop Esher left Chicago Thursday noon.

—The annual meeting of the Children's Aid Society was held at New York last Tuesday. William A. Booth was elected President, George S. Coe Treasurer, and Charles L. Brace Secretary. Reports showed the receipts and expenditures of the society were the largest in its history. Its receipts for the past year, $283,000; total expenditures, $280,000. The cost of maintaining twenty-one industrial and fourteen night schools for the year was $91,000. During the year 12,835 boys and girls were fed, sheltered, and clothed. The total number placed out by the society, mainly in Western homes, was 3,459, and the number of those who enjoyed the benefits of a "summer home" was 4,512. Rev. James Mathews is engaged with this society in placing these children in homes.

—Dr. A. G. Haygood, President of Emory College, at Oxford, Ga., resigned last Thursday at a called meeting of the Board of Trustees. Dr. Hopkins, Vice President, was elected President. Dr. Haygood will give his entire time to the agency of the "John F. Slater" fund. He announced that a Northern gentleman interested in the Slater work had given $25,000 to Emory College. Dr. Haygood was made President of the Board of Trustees.

—Bishop Isaac W. Wiley, of the Methodist Episcopal church, died very suddenly week before last in Fuh Chau, China. He was making an Episcopal tour of the Asiatic Missions of his church, in which he felt a great interest, particularly in China, where he had served as a missionary. He was elected Bishop in 1872 at the age of 47, and was very active and efficient in the Episcopal office.

—At Streator, Ill., the church of a peculiar people was recently dedicated. Among the miners in that neighborhood are also a number of Slovakians, a member of the Hungarian family. They have been settled there for a number of years, but never could have services in their own language, as there was apparently no preacher of their tongue in this country. Some months ago these people succeeded in having a pastor of their own nationality, the Rev. Mr. Droppa, of Hungary, to come over and supply their spiritual wants. He succeeded in organizing a congregation, and building a church, and recently dedicated the new structure to its sacred purpose, probably the first Protestant Slovakian church on the Western Continent. They, like all the Protestants of Hungary, are adherents of the Augsburg Confession, by which name, and not as Lutherans, they are known in their native country.—Independent.

—It is said that private information has been received in this city regarding the proposed removal to Washington of Dr. C. L. Goodell, of the Pilgrim Congregational church of St. Louis, which indicates that Dr. Goodell will probably remain with his St. Louis pastorate.

—The Congregational church building at Evanston was totally destroyed by fire Nov. 23. It was built in 1869, at a cost of nearly $20,000; was damaged by a hurricane May, 1883, and repaired at a cost of $5,000. It was insured for about $18,000. The Rev. A. J. Scott is pastor. The trustees of the Presbyterian and Baptist churches offer the homeless congregation the use of their houses.

—The grave of Richard Baxter in the chancel of Christ Church, London, has no slab or tablet to mark it, and the Vicar of that church asks for £100 with which to remedy the omission.

—Rev. Professor Weidner, of the Augustina Theological Seminary, Moline, Illinois, delivered an address upon the "Religious Condition of Sweden," before the late meeting of the American Evangelical Alliance, in New York. He said the people of that country were, as a whole, moral and upright in character, and earnest seekers after truth. When they adopted the forms of the Reformed church, church and state became inseparable Every citizen is, by law, a member of the church, whether he believe in the creed or not. In no country is the education of the young watched with more zealous care. Previous to 1858 no other denomination could gain a foothold among the Swedes. Certain laws were then repealed, and now Baptists, Methodist, and others flourish.

—The incorporation of the Missionary Institute, a Chicago society without capital stock, is certified to by the Illinois Secretary of State. The incorporators and first Board of Directors are Elbridge G. Keith, John V. Farwell, E W. Blatchford, David C. Schofield, and Matthew M. Parkhurst, and their purpose is to train young ladies for missionary work by educating them in medical, theological and other non-sectarian studies.

PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY.

From notices in the daily press of Chicago, the philanthropic work of the Moody church on Chicago and La Salle Aves., is the best evidence of a living faith we have seen among the churches of the city of late.

Of the Thanksgiving day work of this church the Tribune next day said: "The Thanksgiving services at the Chicago Avenue church, corner of La Salle and Chicago avenues, took a practical turn yesterday, six or seven large wagon-loads of provisions being distributed among the deserving poor. The supplies consisted of sugar, coffee, bread, tea, rice, hominy, mutton, turkey, chicken, and the like. The groceries were accumulated at a pound party held the night before in the church, the price of admittance to which was a pound package of something in the line of groceries. The meats, turkey, and chicken were contributed by the wealthy friends of the church, Mr. Phil Armour being one of the largest donors. The provisions were distributed voluntarily by the church without applications. During the year the names of 5,000 people in needy circumstances have been accumulated by the members of the church through the Medical Mission, which has been treating them free. Their names and addresses having become known in this way, the provender was delivered at their homes without warning, taking most of them by surprise. The Sunday-school room of the church looked very much like a grocery store in the morning, and when the food had all been distributed it bore the appearance of an abandoned storage-house; and if it had not been closed up in that condition it would have taken the remainder of the day to get rid of the boxes and barrels, bread-crumbs, and crackers. After the distribution of these things a thanksgiving service was held in the large hall in the basement, at which the Rev. C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton College officiated."

The church has also a free Medical Mission, which the Inter Ocean notices as follows: "A pamphlet has just been issued by the Chicago avenue church which gives an account of the work of the Free Medical Mission during its first year. The object of the mission is to administer medical aid to the worthy poor. The doors of the mission were first opened July 23, 1883. Suitable rooms were found in the vicinity of the church for the dispensary and put in proper shape. A number of instances are given in the pamphlet as extracts from the diary, showing the practical working of the mission. In regard to the expenses it is stated that a total expense of only $1,000 covers the expenditures for the year, over 6,000 treatments having been given. The mission is dependent for support on the voluntary contributions of those who are in sympathy with its purpose. Nurses are employed as occasion may demand to assist in the work. There is a mission board connected with the organization whose direct work is the visitation of those who have received treatment, the object of such visitation being 'to commend the Christ whose restraining love prompts this service from himself.'"

BUDDHISM.

In all recent tables of the religious statistics of the world, the number of votaries assigned to Buddhism, though varying greatly, has been very large. The estimates vary from 245,000,000 to 450,000,000, and Mr. Edwin Arnold, in the preface to "The Light of Asia," puts the number as high as 470,000,000. It is not an uncommon thing to hear them spoken of as embracing one-third of the human family.

This notion is combated by the Rev. A. P. Hopper, D. D., of Canton, China, a missionary of the Presbyterian church and editor of the Chinese Recorder, in a very carefully prepared and worded article. He shows that while in some countries in which Buddhism prevails "it is the State religion, and is followed by all the people, as in Siam, Burmah and Thibet," and, therefore, the whole population of those countries may be set down to it, yet in other countries in which by far the larger number of its adherents have been supposed to be found—notably in the case of China—this is not true. "In Annam, China, Corea, and Japan it exists in connection with other religions." The national religion of China, he claims, is Confucianism, while but a small portion, comparatively of its immense population can with propriety be called Buddhists. Confucianism is also the State religion of Annam and Corea, and its principles and teachings have been fully accepted. In Japan the population is about equally divided between Shintoism, a sort of nature-worship, and Buddhism. The number of Buddhists he thus tabulates;

Siam, 6,000,000; Thibet, 6,000,000; Burmah, 4,000,000; Ceylon, 2,000,000; India, 4,342,407; Mongolia, 2,000,000; Manchuria, 10,000,000; China, 20,000,000; Japan, 18,000,000 – a total of 72,342,407.

The effect of these considerations, if accepted, will be, as Dr. Hopper justly remarks, to cause Confucianism to be enumerated as one of the religions of the world. "The number of Confucianists will vary, as stated by different persons, because of the different estimates of the population of China. These range from 255,000,000 to 369,000,000. If we estimate the population of China, Corea, and Annam to be 300,000,000 and deduct 20,000,000 for Buddhists and 15,000,000 for Mohammedans, it will leave the number of Confucianists to be 265,000,000."

A REMARKABLE MISSIONARY.

There is a remarkable man working for Christ about 250 miles from Pretoria in Africa. Sixteen years ago he went to Natal, seeking employment. There he met the Rev. Mr. Allison, who took him into his schools and instructed him in Christian truth. After his conversion he felt a call to return to his home and friends, in their darkness, and tell them what great things the Lord had done for him, and started on foot a journey of 700 miles to carry the Gospel to his tribe and people. His chief forbade his preaching, but more than four years he taught from house to house, reading and expounding the Scriptures, and was greatly blessed. After the death of the chief, Samuel obtained permission to hold public services and open a school. A building was erected that would hold 600 persons, a school was established, and the work prospered. Churches were afterward built in two other places and two good men sent away for two years' study. After their return they took up the work, great good was done, and many turned to the Lord. Rev. Mr. Watkins, of Pretoria, invited Samuel to visit him, and describes him as a very little man, with the courage of the apostle Paul, and tenderness of the apostle John. He told his story all unconscious of the sublime heroism it contained. He had labored nine years in the dark wilds of Africa, unknown, unpaid, unvisited, unrecognized by any church. —Golden Censer.

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

OBITUARY.

Many who attended the National Convention of our Anti-masonic reform at Syracuse in 1874 will remember Samuel Irwin, a seceded Mason, who came to the convention with Rev. James Matthews. His earnest manner in addressing the convention will not soon be forgotten. This brother died at Cincinnati, October 28, of heart disease. The following from Joseph Mackey to the Free Methodist is part of an interesting sketch of his life:

Samuel Irwin was born in Ballymena, Antrim county, Ireland. in the year 1827. His mother was a member of the Covenanter church, the first Presbyterians of Ireland. She was noted for her piety and Biblical knowledge, and diligently taught the subject of this sketch the sacred Scriptures when a child. He early, however, manifested a restless, uncomfortable spirit from associating with bad boys, and disrespect of the Lord's day. At an early age he began to associate with fighting men, gamblers, dog fighters, and all other forms of vice, and generally met where such assembled. This kept up until the middle of the year 1859, when he was struck under conviction by the spirit of God while at the gambling table, at which he had spent the previous three days and nights. "Awful" (or Orville) Gardner, a notorious prize-fighter of New York, who had been converted about that time, hearing of Irwin's awakening, induced him to visit a Methodist camp-meeting at Newport, L. I., in charge of Rev. Wm. P. Corbett, and after listening to the sermon, he went forward to the altar, where he met his Saviour, who pardoned all his sin. After his conversion, he went directly home and erected a family altar, which is standing to this day. Shortly after this, meetings were held at his house, at which numbers of the present Free Methodist church, ministers and laymen, (some have fallen asleep) were converted. Bro. Irwin was a consistent Christian man. The writer of this knew him intimately for nearly twenty years, and his like for a Christian spirit he has never seen. His labors in the Free Methodist church, at the Colored Home, New York City, at camp-meetings and other places, were very much blessed. About a year ago he was invited by Elliott H. Pendleton, Esq., of Cincinnati, to open a mission in that city, similar to that of Jerry McAuley, in New York. After much prayer, he consented to accept, and the mission, which was called after him the "Irwin Mission," became a success. His godly life while in Cincinnati attracted attention, and very many of the leading divines and laymen of that city visited him regularly for the purpose of consultation and prayer.

ALDEN'S LITERARY REVOLUTION.

John B. Alden's Literary Revolution, though, possibly, not making so large a "noise" in the world as three or four years ago when its remarkable work was new to the public, is really making more substantial progress than ever before. A noticeable item is the improved quality of the books issued. Guizot's famous "History of France," not sold, till recently, for much less than $50.00 is put forth in eight small octavo volumes, ranking with the handsomest ever issued from American printing presses, including the 426 full-page original illustrations and is sold for $7.00. Rawlinson's "Seven Great Monarchies of the Ancient Eastern World," is produced in elegant form, with all the maps and illustrations, reduced in price from $18.00 to $2.75. These are but representative of an immense list of standard works, ranging in price from two cents to nearly $20.00, which are set forth in a descriptive catalogue of 100 pages, and which is sent free to every applicant. It certainly is worth the cost of a postal card to the publisher, JOHN B. ALDEN, 393 Pearl Street, New York.

EARLY NEWSPAPERS.—The first illustrated newspaper was the London Intelligencer, which came out in 1643, with a variety of rude woodcuts. On the 13th of November, 1665, was issued the first recognized court organ, the Oxford Gazette. The first literary paper was called Mercurius Librarius, or a "Faithful Account of all Books and Pamphlets," No. 1, April 9 to 16, 1680. The first sporting paper was published in 1683, and called the Jockey's Intelligencer; and the first medical paper came out in 1686. The first professedly comic paper, in all probability, was the Merry Mercury, or a Farce of Fools, No. 1, Nov. 29, 1700. The first daily paper was the Daily Courant, published March 11, 1702. In 1778 appeared the first Sunday newspaper, called Johnson's Sunday Monitor, and the first daily evening paper was called the Star, published in the year 1788. The first newspaper in America was the Boston News-Letter, issued on Monday, April 24, 1704. It was a half sheet, about 12 by 8 inches, in two pages folio, with two columns on each page. The title is in Roman letters of the size printers call "French canon," and under it, in Old English, are the words, "printed by authority." The imprint is "Boston: printed by B. Green; sold by Nicholas Boone, at his shop near the old meeting house."—Ex.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS,

OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by E. E. FLAGG, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. In cloth, $1; per doz., $9. Paper, 50c; per doz., $4.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

"Our Anti-secret society friends are certainly entitled to great credit for their persistence in their efforts to expose and root out secretism. The object of the writer of this story is to present in its true light the crafty, unscrupulous and exceedingly hurtful influence of Masonry, the parent of all the orders."—Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter.

HOME HINTS.

THE WINDOW GARDEN IN DECEMBER.

A sudden cold snap, or "cold wave," as it is now termed, is liable to come at any time during the winter, and must be guarded against, in the green-house by attention to the fire, and in the dwelling by moving the plants away from the windows, to the middle of the room. . . .Dryness of the air is the chief obstacle to successful window gardening. Plants succeed much better in the kitchen than in the parlors, as the air is charged with moisture from the cooking, etc. If the house is heated by a furnace, there should be a pan for evaporating water in the furnace, kept well supplied. If stoves are used, keep vessels of water on them. . . . Dust is injurious to plants. Much may be prevented from settling on the leaves by covering the plant with a light fabric whenever the rooms are swept. All smooth-leaved plants, like the ivy, camellias, etc., should have a weekly washing with a damp sponge. The others may be placed in a sink or bath tub, and given a thorough showering. . . .Water should be given as needed, whether daily or weekly. Do not water until the soil is somewhat dry. Keeping the earth constantly wet, soon makes unhealthy plants. Let the water be of the same temperature as the room. Hanging plants dry out rapidly. Plunge the pots or baskets in a pail or tub of water, and after they have ceased to drip, return them to their places. —Dr. Thurber in American Agriculturist for Dec.

SPRAINS.

The following new remedies for sprains are said to have proved very efficacious. Dr. Thomas L. Shearer recommends and practices the use of clay, such as is used for making bricks, free from gravel, dried and finely powdered in a mortar. This powdered clay is mixed with mortar into a thick and moist consistence. This is then spread on muslin to the depth of a quarter of an inch, and applied entirely around the part. Over this is placed a rubber roller bandage, just lightly enough to keep the dressing from shifting and retain the moisture. This application should be renewed every twenty-four. It appears, by this method of treatment, the most severe sprains are cured much more rapidly and satisfactorily than by the old system.

The same authority states that powdered dry earth sprinkled on the surface of an ulcer, and kept in position by adhesive straps, is a capital dressing for cases which are so weak that even the weakest ointment tends to break down the granulations.

Professor Brinton, another celebrated practitioner, says that the best thing for a sprain is to put the limb into a vessel of very hot water immediately, then add boiling water as it can be borne. Keep the part immersed for twenty minutes, or until the pain subsides; then apply a light bandage and order rest. Sometimes the joint can be used in twelves hours. If necessary, use a silicate of sodium dressing.—Scientific American.

DIVIDE THE IRONING.—When one person does the ironing, unless for a very small family, it should not all be done in one day. It is work that is exhausting, although clean and pleasant. Many a severe sickness has resulted from cooling off to suddenly after a day at the ironing table. Much fatigue is avoided by sitting down while ironing the smaller pieces. Tall stools, such as are used in stores, are convenient for this purpose.

WHOLESOME BEDS.—A board of health is established in each of our cities and towns to examine our dwellings, to condemn improper food, to inspect fish, to examine drinking water, to declare and abate all kinds of nuisances, to remove garbage, to protect us against contagious diseases, and, generally, to do everything to protect health, except to examine our beds. Yet right in them are more seeds of disease than in many other "declared nuisances." The importance of sleeping on a clean, wholesome bed can not be overestimated, even in vigorous health, and it becomes a much more serious question to those in feeble health and to the sick. To those it is increased suffering, and perhaps death.—S. L. Loomis, M. D.

THE OLD-FASHIONED SORT.—On many sides I see evidences that the old-fashioned flowers are coming into fresh favor. A bright lady writer gives it as her experience and observation that there is a decided restoration of the flowers of our grandmothers' gardens, such as the peonies, poppies, hollyhocks, sweet williams, clove pinks, yellow lilies, columbines, blue bells, fleur de lis, monk's hood, phloxes, lychnis, sweet sultan and the like. They are not only for the most part beautiful in color and form, but a great advantage of their cultivation is that when once planted they will delight the senses for years if a little attention is only given to them in the spring by digging about the roots, and applying a plentiful supply of rich compost, and dividing the roots in the autumn if found too crowded. They bloom at a season when flowers are most welcome.—Lancaster (Pa.) Intelligencer.

Dr. G. Johnson lately told the British Medical Association of a patient of his, 55 years old, who had lived upon milk diet for five years. He took a gallon of milk a day, but not a particle of any other food. This treatment cured him of Bright's disease.

"SCRIP and STAFF."

BY H. M. HUGUNIN.

This new and attractive volume is now ready. It is composed of thirty-nine chapters on nearly as many topics. Neatly bound in cloth with gilt stamp. Price 60 cents.

The Chicago Evening Journal of May 3, says:

The author of this little volume, for many years a working editor of the EVENING JOURNAL, has here presented us with a variety of topics of a religious character. Among the number we note "The Evils of the Sunday Newspaper," "The Divine Sanction of Church Organizations," "The Good Work and Government of Sunday-Schools," "The Bible in our Public Schools," "Fallacies of the 'Evolution Theory,'" "Chronology—The Age of the World," and "Labor and Laborers." Mr. Hugunin writes as an independent thinker, untrammeled by denominational alignments. His style, however, is marked by the vigor of earnestness and sincerity, and with these characteristics, and with a close adherence to Bible Christianity, his book becomes a suggestive aid to evangelical workers. In discussing the topics above named, as in others, he deals consistently with questions of public interest and great importance in the reform of individual and social evils.

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

'The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.' "—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

IN BRIEF.

The director of the United States Mint has statistics from thirty-nine countries showing that the world's circulation of gold has decreased $52,000 during the last year.

At Charlotte, N. C., there is a fountain which sends a stream 268 feet high, icy cold and clear as crystal. It has its source in the adjacent mountains, and is said to be the highest in the world.

Fifty thousand tons of soot are taken from London chimneys every year, and it is subsequently put to good use as manure—about 1,000 pounds to an acre—the value being set at £41,000.

Since he has attained his majority, in 1868, the Duke of Norfolk has, in one way or another, given more than $2,500,000 to the Roman Catholic church, besides princely sums devoted to private charities.

Some close observers in France say the probable result of the China trouble will be the overthrow of the Ferry government. Dissatisfaction with the Chinese policy ot the government is growing daily.

A deaf family in New Hampshire has been traced back to the fourteenth century in England, and in all that time has regularly shown a succession of deaf mutes. In Maine there is a family in which there are ninety-five deaf mutes, all of them connected by blood or marriage.

The reported drowning of 70,000 persons by a recent flood in China recalls the flood caused by the breaking of the dikes in Holland in 1530, which swept away 400,000 persons, and the one before in the same country, from the same cause, in 1421, when over 100,000 people perished.

A very queer accident which might, if it had proved serious, have been construed into a suicide, happened last Sunday at Tuskegee, Ala. Mr. Barney Du Bose, while ringing the church bell, was caught around the neck by the rope and jerked up about seven feet, and the life very nearly choked out of him before he could extricate himself.

The people of England and Scotland are, remarks the Spectator, multiplying so fast that pessimists may well be excused for feeling some anxiety for the future. The population of the kingdom, which in 1815 was 15,000,000, is now 36,000,000; that is to say, it has grown more in the last seventy years than in all the untold ages of the previous past.

STATISTICS OF SUICIDE.—Of all European countries Germany is the one where suicide is most frequent, and in Germany again, Saxony takes the lead. In 1872 the number of suicides in Saxony was 687 (265 to every 1,000,000 inhabitants); five years later it rose to 1,114, and after five years more to 1,872. Last year 2,004 persons thus ended their lives, 1,081 of whom were of the male sex and 923 female. In England in 1882 the suicides were 1,446 men and only 519 women.

"NEAR ENOUGH."—The First Regiment of California had been camping out during the watermelon season, and the consequence was that between the bar-rooms of Santa Rosa and the watermelon farm there were a large number of unauthorized absences. One evening the guard observed a private approaching who was staggering along under the combined load of much conviviality and an enormous watermelon under each arm. "Who goes there?" "Er—hic—er fren," responded the truant. "Advance, friend, and give the countersign." "Hain't got no—hic—countersign," amiably replied the private; "but I'll er—hic—give yer er warmellin." Pretty soon the officer of the day came round, and said to the sentinel who was engaged in munching a huge piece of watermelon stuck on the end of his bayonet. Did Perkins pass you just now?" "Yes, sir." "Did he give the countersign?" inquired the lieutenant, taking a bite himself as the man presented arms. "Well, no, sir," said the sentinel confidentially; "the pass-word was 'cholera,' but he said watermelon,' so I passed him and put the other half in your tent." "Did, eh?" mused the officer, "Hum! Watermelon, eh? Well, I guess that was near enough." —Boston Journal.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE.

Unanimous Approval of Medical Staff.

Dr. T. G. COMSTOCK, Physician at Good Samaritan Hospital, St. Louis, Mo., says: "For years we have used it in this hospital, in dyspepsia and nervous diseases, and as a drink during the decline and in the convalescence of lingering fevers. It has the unanimous approval of our medical staff."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

COUNTRY.

—In the Court of Claims at Washington, the case of the government vs. the Union Pacific road has been begun. The government demands reach $1,700,000, while the offset claims of the road amount to $1,500,000.

—A tax voted in a certain ward of Salt Lake by Mormons, for school purposes, is being contested by the Gentiles, who contend that the school is conducted in the interest solely of the Mormon church.

—The sons of Friend C. Hall, a wealthy farmer of Rockford, Ill., have petitioned that a conservator be appointed for his estate, the claim being that he spends a great portion of his income in drink.

—Officers Grant and Divine, while on duty in New York, Sunday night, were drunk and attacked and robbed a man, and fired at him when he endeavored to escape. They await trial on the charge of highway robbery.

—A Democratic celebration was held at Lloydsville, O., at which three persons were killed and two dangerously wounded by the explosion of a box of powder, ignited by a boy with a Roman candle.

—The family of James Carr, the man who was killed at the burning of the Culver block on the north side in this city, has received $367 collected as the result of an election bet. The loser of the bet turned a hand organ four hours on a prominent corner, and the winner held a tin-cup for the money.

—Beliefs are expressed that the "long strike" of coal miners in Hocking Valley will soon end. Some twenty of the persons indicted for outrages have been arrested and will be tried for conspiracy. The railway bridges burned have been replaced and traffic resumed. The output from the mines, it is expected, will soon reach its normal proportions.

—The 101st anniversary of the evacuation of New York by the British was celebrated, Tuesday, by hoisting the flag on the old fort in Central Park, and the dining together of a number of the veterans of the war of 1812.

—There has arrived at San Francisco, from China, fifty-six cases of exhibits for the New Orleans Exposition.

—At Huntington, Or., Tuesday afternoon, connection was made between the Oregon Railway and Navigation system and the Oregon Short Line, thus completing the fourth line of railroad across the continent.

—A report reaches Billings, M. T., that Indian agent Armstrong, Col. Blake, and others, have been endeavoring to secure from the Crow Indians for a land syndicate a lease of 3,000,000 acres of their reservation for ten years at 1 cent per acre per annum. This scheme will, if perfected, it is alleged, rob thousands of their homes.

—"The Old Red Mill," at Adrian, Mich., built in 1829, was destroyed by fire Tuesday morning, the loss being $10,000.

—Near Gambier, Ohio, lately, Mrs. Welka, a spiritualist, grew ill, refused to see a physician, but submitted to treatment by a "medium" named Burrows, who alleged that the woman was afflicted with devils, to expel which he beat her cruelly with a stick, resulting in her death. He then said the demons had entered his wife and thrashed her severely. Burrows' sanity will be tested, and if found of sound mind he will be tried for homicide.

—Dr. John Maxwell, of Springfield, O., gave his four children a mixture of aconite and chloroform, wrapped their faces in cloths saturated with the poison, and placed them on a bed. Then he took a similar dose, and made the same preparations for his own death. When Mrs. Maxwell returned she found one of the little ones dead and the others unconscious, two of them dying during Wednesday night. The doctor recovered and has been imprisoned. He says he was tired of living and wanted the children to go with him.

FOREIGN.

—In the House of Commons Gladstone gave notice he hoped to introduce the redistribution bill Monday and move its second reading Thursday of this week.

—A national bank, know as the Government Bank of China, has been established at Pekin. Its capital is half Chinese and half foreign, and the board of management is half Chinese and half foreigners.

—In the German Reichstag Wednesday a resolution was adopted in favor of the payment of the members for their services as legislators. The scheme was opposed by Bismarck, and the result is considered a signal defeat for the Chancellor.

—There were five severe earthquake shocks in Styria, Austrian Hungary, Wednesday.

—Paris has resumed its usual appearance. It is estimated that the total number of deaths by the recent inroad of cholera will reach 866. There are still a few cases of cholera in the dirtier quarters of the city. It is estimated that 100,000 persons left the city during the epidemic. The people are now returning in great numbers.

—An epidemic of hydrophobia is raging in the city of Vienna, Austria. Eighty cases are reported, eleven of them fatal.

—A report comes of a tragedy at the Canonea copper camps in Sonora, Mexico, which resulted in the death of six men and wounding a number of others. Mexicans stoned an American teamster, and the other Americans armed themselves. An attempt by Mexican police to disarm them caused the affray. As a result of the affray fifteen Americans surrendered to a detachment of troops and were lodged in jail at Santa Cruz. Two men escaped, but other particulars are missing.

—The conflict between the authorities and the students of the university, at Madrid, Spain, grows daily more serious. Hundreds of arrests have been made, in effecting which large numbers of people have been wounded, including several members of the police force. The government has appointed a new Ultramontane rector to succeed the Segastion rector who resigned. The military precautions that have been adopted cause the streets to resemble a city in a state of siege. The press retaliates with extreme violence upon the prosecution of Liberal and Republican papers

A Wonderful Woman,

A Wonderful Life,

AND

A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Elizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

Her book is neither fiction nor founded on fiction, but is an interesting narration of facts of a most thrilling character, as every one will find and testify who will get and read her book, now on sale at the Cynosure office, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill. Price, cloth, $1,75; half Russia, $2.25.

FREEMASONRY AND FREE GOVERNMENT.

This twelve-page pamphlet is now issued in a new and attractive style, with a neat cover. The orders for it which more than exhausted the first edition testify to its popularity.

ONLY 15 CTS. for 3 FRENCH DOLLS
WITH AN ELEGANT WARDROBE OF 32 PIECES.

Consisting of Reception Dresses, Evening Dresses, Street Costumes, Morning Dresses, Cloaks, Hats and Bonnets, Hand Satchels, Sun Umbrellas, Music Portfolios, Overcoats, Sailor Suits, Military Suits and Drums, Street Jackets and Dress Suits, Watering Place Suits, Traveling Costumes, etc. These dresses and suits in this elegant wardrobe represent Nine Different Colors, and they are lovely beyond description, several of them being from designs by Worth, of Paris. There is one little Boy and two Girl dolls in each set, with pretty faces and life-like beautiful features, and their wardrobe being so extensive that it takes hours to dress and undress them in their different suits. Every child, and in fact every mother that has seen them go into ecstasies over them. Children will get more real enjoyment out of a set of these French Dolls than out of articles that cost $10. Every person that buys them sends immediately for more. A lady writes us that her little boy and girl played for five hours with a set of these French Dolls, and they felt very bad indeed to think that they must stop and eat their supper, and if mothers only knew how much amusement there is in these dolls they would not only give 15 cents but 50 cents for them rather than not have them. Sample set, consisting of three dolls with their wardrobe of 32 pieces by mail, postpaid, for 15 cents; two sets, 6 dolls, 64 pieces, for 25 cts. Ten sets for $1. If you send for one or two sets we will send our Secret Method and Full Directions how you can make more than One Hundred Dollars a month out of these dolls. The Supreme Court has given another decision which is in the nature of a reflection of their judgment upon the Civil Rights bill. Mrs. W. B. Astor, wife of the New York millionaire, brought suit for the recovery of a large amount of rich clothing which custom-house officers seized as an unnecessary amount of wearing apparel. The Supreme Court gives up to Mrs. Astor, and says that apparel ready to be worn and suited to the owner's means and habits of life must pass free of duty. The inspectors being thus made the judges of the quantity and quality of a lady's wardrobe are in trouble as to what they shall do in case they do not know what the means and habits of life of a passenger may be. Thus from one steamer landed Mrs. J. C. Ayer and daughter with $35,000 worth of stuff, including 150 dresses and a quantity of furs, and a strange lady with apparel worth $1,000. Mrs. Ayer passed free, the stranger paid duty. If this is the kind of tariff the Republican party supports, who would not favor free trade? Perhaps the Pope was not so far wrong after all, when he decided that America had a privileged class to whom such exceptions may be shown as to the titled grandees of monarchy.

Hon. B. K. Bruce, Register of the Treasury has charge of a department in the New Orleans Exposition which will show the development of the colored race in the South. He has a delicate mission, for a proper exhibition of this progress will begin with the overseer's lash, the slave dealer's fetters, the auction block, the iron collars, and various horrid machinery of American slavery. Such a display would not be agreeable in New Orleans; but from such surroundings has the black man come into his present estate of honor and citizenship. Mr. Bruce has been traveling in the interest of his exhibit and expresses himself surprised at the evidences of material advancement which he finds among the blacks. The applications for space from colored men engaged in manufacturing reapers, mowers, thrashing machines and other machinery, who conduct mills, and who are engaged as artists is much in excess of the portion allowed. Such facts encourage the hope that some day the men who show such evidence of ability may be allowed peaceably to vote. Another token is a resolution adopted by the Alabama Senate Friday in favor of the largest possible appropriations for public schools, closing: "And especially and solemnly do we express the obligation and fixed purposes of the white people of Alabama to aid in the education of colored children in our midst."

Evidently the Federal court of Arizona is encouraged by the recent successes in Salt Lake City. Three Mormons were convicted at Prescott last week and two Mormon elders plead guilty. Arizona does not propose to follow Utah. These convictions are arousing the torpid sentiment in the States. Kate Field, the well known correspondent and lecturer, after several months careful study in Utah of the Mormon system, has taken the platform and is arousing much enthusiasm in the Eastern cities with her eloquent invective against the church of organized lust. The St. Louis Globe Democrat says that an investigation is now being made of some old manuscripts claimed by the "Latter Day Saints" to be the original copy of the Book of Mormon, written out at the dictation of Joe Smith, who translated from brass plates given him by an angel. The non-polygamous Mormons believe most implicitly in the genuine character of the manuscript. Clark Braden, the assailant of Robert Ingersoll, is leading in this inquiry, and it is to be hoped that its result will be more profitable than his efforts against the infidel.

President Arthur refers to the Mormon question briefly in his message, noticing the report of the Utah Commission and renewing his recommendation of last year that "Congress assume absolute political control of the Territory of Utah and provide for the appointment of a commission with governmental powers." The Commissioners' report is not a hopeful document. "After more than two years labor and experience here," they say, "it becomes our duty to advise the government and the country, that, although the law has been successfully administered in respect to the disfranchisement of polygamists, the effect of the same upon the preaching and practice of polygamy has not been to improve the tone of the former or materially diminish the latter." The Commissioners have not only failure in Utah to report, but the Mormons have become so numerous in Idaho Territory that they have elected a delegate to Congress. Perhaps his admission to the House can be prevented as was that of Cannon two years ago. But every year the case becomes more serious, and their political affiliation with the Democratic party seems to give the Mormons hope of several years longer immunity.

The Congo Conference at Berlin is a committee of the whole of the civilized nations upon the uplifting of a continent. What geological upheaval among the rocky layers of our groaning globe can compare with this elevation of a cluster of nations—this unveiling of the "Dark Continent" to the light of the nineteenth century. What evidence more do we need of the potency of Christianity, when the nations in which its influence prevails sit down to peacefully bring about this grand result, and provide that it shall be continued by peaceful measures and not by the red arm of war. It is fitting, too, that America, whose introduction to the then civilized world was the occasion of rapine and blood all along from the equator to the Arctic circle, should be so influential in this council of nations. Through the influence of our representative, Mr. Kasson, Henry M. Stanley, the American explorer of Africa, was admitted and the remarkable clearness and force with which he presented his views of the African question carried almost a unanimous vote. He insisted that the Congo basin should be considered in its commercial and not its geographical relations; that the affluents of the Congo and the basins of several great rivers and lakes should be regarded as forming the Congo basin, which would comprise a great stretch of the western coast, all the center and even a portion of the eastern coast of Africa. Herr Bastian, another African traveler, assisted this view by urging that the claim of Portugal to the Congo river was impracticable and that the River Longa, 300 miles south, was the northern limit of Portugal's territory. This commercial basin has been adopted as neutral territory, but as it includes the River Niger, over which England and France have some jurisdiction, these governments have formally declared that their authority shall not interfere with the peaceful relations adopted for the rest of the region. This conference and its measures mark an era in the onward march of Christian principles.

THE POLITICAL OUTLOOK.

BY REV. DAVID M'FALL.

The long agony is now over; and Stephen Grover Cleveland, a third-class lawyer and first-class profligate, becomes the next President of our country. The Democrats are happy, their path to the public crib being now open. They mean to breakfast after a forced abstinence of a quarter of a century. The Independents are independent. They have strained at the gnat and swallowed the camel. They have vented their spleen; and preserved a conscience void of offence, like Israel of old, by forsaking a leader and turning aside to worship a calf. The Prohibitionists are thoughtful, having accomplished more than they intended. The "rascals" are turned out, and a more rascally set let in, and as the result of the whole the country is doomed for a season, to turn the grind-stone for a booby.

The election marks an era in our political history. It is more than the defeat of a party. The handwriting of destiny is as visible in it as on Belshazzar's palace wall. New York is the Republican Waterloo. When God works he uses weak things to confound the mighty. The "fingers of a man's hand" tracing a few words on a wall are sufficient to upset an empire. It is said that Napoleon lost Waterloo by a shower of rain the night before; and James G. Blaine was defeated in New York by a shower on election day. Dr. Burchard's three R's, a dinner at Delmonico's, a shower, any one of these lost Blaine more votes than would have covered Cleveland's plurality. When such trifling causes produce such important results we instinctively recognize the hand of God in the arrangement.

These, however, are only surface indications; but they are all the average politician can see. The margin was very narrow, and men say, "It was only that:" and, "Such a defeat betokens a glorious victory in the next engagement." But underneath these, more serious causes were at work which politicians do not see, and the effects of which they cannot measure. The Republican party did not fall by a shower of rain, or the rhythmical remark of a venerable clergyman: it fell through its own moral infirmity. Had it been morally as strong as it should have been, it would have brushed all these causes aside as the vessel does the ocean spray when her canvas is full of the breath of heaven, and made as gallantly into port. But the "grand old party" had been shorn of the locks of her moral strength by several corrupting Delilahs, and must now grind in the prison house of the uncircumcised.

The Republican party was essentially a moral party. It was brought forth to execute a moral purpose, and for fidelity to that received a crown. Its record is as enviable as that of the now dominant party is unenviable. It freed the slaves, preserved the Union, maintained the nation's credit, and by its wise and patriotic management brought peace and plenty to every man's door.

Assuredly it deserved well of the country and assuredly it has been living for the last decade on the country's generosity. It has had its day and did not profit by it, and need not now complain if the end has come. Had its fidelity to moral questions grown with its years it would have still been in the zenith of its power. But it turned aside from these to bid for votes, and has just now failed to receive them.

WHEATON COLLEGE LIBRARY
Wheaton, Illinois

It is the old story over again, the birthright sold for a mess of pottage; but this time the pottage was not delivered. Had it persevered in the path of virtue its future would have been as glorious as its past. No party had ever a richer field before it in which to gather honors. The Indian question offered a problem for Christian statesmanship to solve. So did the Chinese. Mormonism, the twin sister of slavery in rottenness, despotism and antagonism to American institutions, called loudly for repressive legislation. So did Freemasonry with its multitudinous spawn of secret orders. The divine institution of the family demanded protection. A uniform, national and Scriptural law of marriage and divorce has been a pressing necessity for the last quarter of a century. Our educational system needed, and still needs defence against the encroachments of infidelity and Romanism; our Christian institutions, preservation and perfecting; and the rum traffic, absolute overthrow.

All these were ripe fruit on the tree of life which the Republican party had only to pluck, and eat, and live forever. Had it met the demands of the hour on each of these questions, in a fine, statesmanlike manner, it would have stood peerless and alone in popular affection. There would have been no Prohibition party, no American party, no National Reform party, nothing but the devil's half acre of a Democratic party. But it failed in its duty. It took counsel with its fears, instead of its faith, and harkened to saloons and hoodlums, instead of the pulpit. It butchered, cheated and starved the Indians; disgraced itself with the Chinese; nibbled the Mormons; petted secret orders; cared nothing for the family; threw the weight of its influence against our Christian institutions; harnessed rum to its car, and bade the Prohibitionists wait for a more convenient season. The result is before us. The dry-rot consumed its vitals and an unintentional popular puff blew it over. For the present we must bid it farewell. In the slightly altered language of Brutus concerning Cæsar: "There are tears for its love, joy for its fortune, honor for its valor, and defeat for its moral imbecility."

But are the Democrats better qualified to handle moral issues than the Republicans? No, in no wise. It is true they entered upon the campaign with high-sounding pretensions. The canvass was to be made on purely moral grounds; but as if in mockery of such claims, from such a quarter, the head of their ticket was proved a libertine. Then they preached the doctrine of a double character, the one pure, the other abominable. But though the abominable was very abominable, there was nothing contagious about it, and the pure would certainly remain pure notwithstanding! As if "public virtue was ever found where private was not." A few pulpits converted the profligate into a prodigal and brought him home "on a higher moral plane." Of these the Rev. James Freeman Clarke was the chiefest apostle. But the Plymouth pastor alone was equal to the occasion. With characteristic boldness he converted his candidate's weakness into his strong point, and declared that if all the men in the State "who had broken the Seventh Commandment would vote for Cleveland we would elect him." Well done, Mr. Beecher. "We would elect him." The reverend gentleman knows where he belongs, and has a right to choose his company; but without express permission, we seriously object to his right to put any other man in that crowd. He might have shrived his own soul at a more respectable altar. Such is the man, and such are some of the recent influences by which he was raised to power. It is useless to speak of fraud and ruin; these are the inalienable rights of the party. The Democratic papers North are indignant when the Republican papers call Southern frauds in question. To speak of these is only to mention the Jachin and Boaz of the party. It is prodigious to think of such a party coming into power for reform purposes. As well expect the Ethiopian to change his skin, or the leopard his spots. In the expressive phrase of Amos, it is "as if a man did flee from a lion and a bear met him, or went into the house and leaned his head on the wall and a serpent bit him." The skepticism of the lord of Samaria "on whose hand the king leaned" was unpardonable when he doubted the word of the prophet concerning a phenominal plenty; but we rather guess the stern old prophet would forgive any man who doubted moral reform from the Democratic party.

What then is the present outlook? Dark all round, with here and there a gray spot out of which light may rise. The most prominent of these are, the present Republican defeat and the Prohibition party. Not that either in itself is very encouraging; but the causes behind both promise something. We need reform all round. The truth is, our entire governmental system needs to be born again. It is infidel, it is corrupt, and decaying fast, and the salt of Christianity must be thrown in, or the whole affair will become "rank and smell to heaven." Deliverance and salvation can come from no other quarter.

Where is the hope of this purifying agency being called in by the Democratic party? Echo answers, Where! Where is the hope of it from the Republican party? It is here:—the Republican party was once a moral party. Although all through this recent campaign the "clank of coin" was the only thing that was heard, yet the time was when it could turn a deaf ear to that, for the sake of a moral idea. It may do so again; if it profits by the lesson of its present defeat, it will; and if it does, it will be stronger and better than ever before. But if it does not, God will raise up in its stead another that will. This may be the Prohibition party; but if so, it must become broader, manlier, and more statesmanlike than it is at present. Like Moses, the Republican party brought us up out of Egypt; but if, like him, it fails to carry us over into the Promised Land, Joshua will be forthcoming. This season of defeat will decide that question. In the meantime Pharaoh bears sway again—a circumstance, we regret to say, that God would not have permitted had not his wrath been hot against this people.

THE WRATH OF THE DEFEATED.

"Prohibition wrought a blunder,"
Some are saying, "yea, a crime,
For it rent our ranks assunder
In the late election time.

It has followed its own master
For its narrow, selfish ends,
Thus it wrought us dire disaster
And betrayed the best of friends."

But, bethink you, ye defeated,
How you turned our prayers away,
When our pleading voice entreated
On the nomination day.

Full two hundred thousand prayed you,
All in vain, for one brave word
When you framed your party platform,
But you passed their prayer unheard.

Much you wrote of home protection,
Chinamen and wool, ye wrote,
And you looked in this direction
And in that to catch a vote.

But for Home and Prohibition,
For the right against the wrong,
For the rum-enslaved's petition
Ye were neither brave nor strong.

Why with treachery then upbraid us,
That we chose apart to fight?
Why with scorn and contempt lade us
For our loyal love of right?

But ye say, "While us you cheated
Your own hopes were sadly crossed;"
Brothers, we are not defeated
Nor the cause we love is lost.

On no arm of flesh depending
We again the fight begin;
With no thought of truce or ending
Till the battle we shall win.

ROUNDTOP.

Gettysburg, Pa.

PROHIBITION A NATIONAL AS WELL AS A LOCAL QUESTION.

BY GEO. W. CLARK.

Mr. Blaine's position on this subject was taken up and reaffirmed by the Buffalo Courier, Rochester Herald, and other papers; and the Herald, after saying the "general government had nothing to do with the question," and that it was out of place in a national election," refused to publish a reply. So much for free discussion and the fairness of these papers. They are very like the old parties, under the fear and control of the liquor power, and scarcely anything on the side of temperance and prohibition can be got into their columns.

Intemperance and its concomitant and constantly recurring horrors is not only a social and moral, but a civil and political evil; not only a local but a general, wide-spread and all-prevailing evil. Like the plagues of Egypt, it enters almost every household throughout this broad land, and its ghastly crimes and intolerable miseries are served up before us morning, noon and night! Scarcely a family that has not felt, either immediately or remotely, the bitter fangs of this fascinating and destroying serpent. Not a town, county, city or State but has experienced the demoralizing effects of this deadly evil—the burdens it imposes, the rowdy fights and brawls, the Sabbath desecrations, the stabbings and the shootings, the wife-beatings and the brutal wife murders, as well as the ghastly wretchedness of drunkard's homes all over the land; and the outrageous orgies of the national capital reflect abroad the complicity, the responsibility, the shame and disgrace in which this crime and curse has involved our national government.

Prohibition, therefore, is not only or merely a local or State, but a national question, and is not by any means out of place in a national canvass, as I shall show; nor is it second in importance to any other issue now before the American people.

Not only towns, cities, counties and States, but the general government itself licenses, and thus legalizes and sustains, this destructive business within their several jurisdictions; and must, therefore, be held responsible for its terrible consequences. It would be both illogical and absurd to say these same powers which legalize and sustain this traffic cannot prohibit it! that the same power which fosters this great crime within its domain by law cannot shut it out of by law! that the same power which creates cannot destroy! "It is a poor rule that won't work both ways," and a worse one that won't work the right way—that won't work for good instead of evil.

The general government has control over all the seaports of the United States, and if it can admit the importation of intoxicating poisons into the country and take a bribe therefor under the plea of "revenue," it would be absurd to say it cannot prohibit such importation and thereby save the people millions more every year than all the wicked revenue amounts to—say nothing of the vice and crime and suffering that is caused by it. This wicked and mercenary plea of revenue in excuse for license, and especially when our national coffers are running over, is a shame and disgrace to the American people.

The grand old premier of England, Gladstone, said, "Give me thirty millions sober people and I am not afraid of the revenues," and the Queen of Madagascar prohibited the liquor traffic throughout her realm and nobly said, "I refuse to take a revenue from anything that will injure or degrade my people!" Such action by a people lately heathen should put us with our boasted Christian civilization to the blush. Our own Chief Justice Grier wisely and justly said, "The authority of the government is competent to prohibit this traffic, and should loss of revenue accrue, the commonwealth would be the gainer a thousand fold in the health, wealth and happiness of the people." So we see not only the power and right but a high motive, imposing, in fact, a solemn duty upon the government to prohibit this traffic.

Again, the general government has control over the territories and the inter-State traffic, where it now legalizes the business and partakes of a bribe from the dealer under the euphonious and deceptive name of "revenue." Is not the general government, therefore, responsible, and can it not prohibit the traffic here?

Again, if the general government can prohibit the sale of liquors to red men, can it not to white men, provided the latter are as well worth preserving as the savages? And if it can protect cattle, sheep, etc., can it not protect women and children from their greatest enemy in this country, the liquor saloons? How much better are our women and children than sheep!

Again, if the general government can quarantine against the introduction of small pox, yellow fever, cholera, "foreign paupers," "heathen Chinee," etc., can it not quarantine and protect the people against the introduction of alcoholic poisons, which kill more victims every year in the United States than all the above named diseases put together; which make more paupers, madmen and murderers at home than come to us from all the foreign ports of the world; and which cost the people more than a thousand millions of dollars every year? And has the general government no responsibility here?

Again, the general government has many official positions, both at home and abroad, within its gift. These can, and should, be filled with competent, trustworthy temperance men who will do credit to the country. They should not be filled with "wine bibbers," drunkards and gluttons to disgrace the service and bring reproach upon the nation. Who cannot, therefore, see the importance and necessity of making this a national issue and having a temperance President?

Again, the general government can appoint a national committee with power to investigate the effect of the liquor business upon the manhood, the morals, the material interests and welfare of the people, and report the results to the country; and it can submit a constitutional amendment to the people abolishing the traffic—measures of the most vital importance to the country, and which it only needs a temperance administration to accomplish.

Again, the general government has exclusive jurisdiction over the District of Columbia, where it now licenses and thus gives its moral support and legal sanction to the murderous business, not only throughout the District but in the very Capitol of the country. Now, it would be not only irrational and illogical, but ridiculous, to say that the government is not responsible and cannot prohibit these drunk and murder shops in the District and thus place its ban of condemnation upon the business and give its moral and political sanction to temperance and sobriety, so essential to the industry, the enterprise and the prosperity and happiness of the country, instead of giving such sanction as it now does to rioting, drunkenness and murder.

So we see this is not only a local or State, but a national question, and it is easy for an intelligent and candid mind to see in how many ways the general government can wield its influence and exert its power for the destruction of this great evil. Believing we are right in the views we hold and the position we take on this subject, and that the great and good "God has no attributes that can take sides with" the liquor power or its supporters in this conflict, we will work on and up. The Prohibitionists will work socially, morally, religiously and politically; they will work through the home, the school, the church, the ward, the town, the county, the State and the national government; they will work to educate, organize, concentrate and use all these forces to save the country from the revolting crimes, the blighting curse, the bitter woes and the burning shame inflicted upon our country by the drink traffic. And we hope ere long to have a St. John, or some other Prohibition saint, elected to the Presidency, who will purify the White House, fill the offices within his gift with able and honorable temperance men, and conserve the influence and powers of the government to the extent of his authority and ability for these righteous and humane purposes, thus securing to the people what our organic law declares to be the object of the Constitution: "Justice," "domestic tranquility," "the general welfare," and "the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity."

SECRECY IN GOVERNMENT.

In the recent speech in London by James Russel Lowell, our minister to England, on "Democracy," the speaker gave as one of the characteristics of a democratic form of government its openness. The people must all know what is going on. There can be no secrets in such a government. This point has received great attention from the English press. The Evening Star of Washington city comments as follows:

It is flattering to national pride to be thus held up as a model for imitation, but it must be confessed that there is much room for improvement as respects secrecy, in the administration of our government. It is indeed of the most commanding importance that the people should know, and that too in season, what their agents are doing in their name. Office under our form of government is a trust, and while a certain discretion is given to a trustee, it is essential that his work lie open to the inspection of the interested parties. The people cannot be too jealous of their rights in this respect. We want no secret archives, no state secrets.—The American.

PARTNERSHIP IN SIN.

Boys at school do wrong in company which no one of them would commit if alone responsible for the act. Young men at college sin as they would not at home, simply because "all the fellows do." Churches make the house of prayer a house of merchandize and play, because "all the churches do." Christians gamble because the church approves of it.

Politicians buy votes and slander their opponents because "all the rest do." The followers of him who said: "Swear not at all," multiply horrid oaths in secret lodge because "we have all taken the same obligation." So-called Christian nations break every command in the Decalogue and no person in particular feels guilty. The robbery of Mexico enlarges our republic; the killing of Indians opens the land for white settlers, negro slavery made cheap sugar and cotton; forcing opium upon the unwilling Chinese fills English coffers; plundering Chinese and Madagascar villages adds to the prestige of France; and so justice falls in the street, and a false show of patriotism hides the blush of shame. It is for our readers to do right as individuals, and not to think the consent of a church or a lodge can annul the moral law. "Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil; neither shalt thou speak in a cause to decline after many to wrest judgment." Ex. 18: 2.

A man's virtues should be measured, not by his occasional exertions, but by the doings of his ordinary life.

HOW WE LOOK AT SECRET SOCIETIES.

The extreme sensitiveness of secret societies to all discussions of their character arises from conscious weakness. They evidently feel that their claims cannot bear a fair and candid discussion. The advancing light of the gospel drives them into secrecy and seclusion. Their position before the public is much like that of the slave-holders thirty years ago. Discussion is likely to reveal the real character of secret societies and expose them to the ridicule and reproach of all reflecting and reasonable people. These associations are not needed in church or state and are a source of distrust in society. They will not bear close inspection or candid criticism. In fact they need but a jostle to send them headlong. They are relics of a dark and benighted age that still survive by the forbearance of the people, a memento in the midst of the progress, civilization and Christianity of this last half of the nineteenth century, of the ignorance, darkness and delusion of the "dark ages." Just as some of the Cananites were permitted to live in the land of Israel after Canaan was conquered by Joshua and proven thorns in the sides of the Israelites, always developing their heathen depravity and leading the people into sin and consequent sufferings, secret societies have ever proved a bane and a curse in every age and country where, through the forbearance of the government, they have been permitted to prolong their existence and imperil the peace of the church of Christ.

Trace the history candidly of all these dark, designing and dangerous associations of men bound together by horrible oaths and unlawful obligations, and, wherever found, they have been proven the same bitter fountains sending forth their bitter waters. Such has been our deliberate conviction of secret oath-bound societies for more than twenty years. In fact, there never was a time when we saw any good in them or that could come out of them. They are clannish, sectarian, selfish, and as a general thing, so full of egotism and self-conceit of their superior merits, that reason and religion seem to be thrown away when brought to bear on their members to convince them of either the folly or absurdity of their claims or the dangerous character of all such associations. The more we see of their doings, the more we read the record of their history, the more we witness their influence on their members, the more we are convinced of the sin and danger of having anything to do with them. Nay, the more have we been confirmed that it is the duty of every Christian, and every Christian church to lift up a voice of testimony against them. The more we are brought to believe in the profound wisdom of that Scripture which they all ignore, but which comes thundering down the ages since the days of Paul, Peter and John, saying "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness but rather reprove them." "Men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil" was what John said more than eighteen hundred years ago, and the truth of this inspired utterance has been verified during all those centuries both by the observations of men and the history of all secret associations.

When you sit down, Bible in hand, to investigate the arguments by which secret associations are attempted to be defended, there is not found a real, solid, Scriptural argument for them. There is not one of them that will stand the test of Scripture truth—not one. There is not one Scriptural reason why they should not be abandoned or abolished. They accomplish no good that could not be accomplished much more cheaply and efficiently in their absence. So that if, by some royal mandate, they were all swept out of existence, in a moment, the world would not only be no loser but a great gainer by their annihilation. God has given the family, the church, and the state as three divine associations for the good of man his divine sanction, but never has and never will employ as his agents in blessing society any association that necessarily must cloak its doings in darkness and carry on its work in secrecy.

It is sad to think so many well-intentioned people cannot see the absurdity and blasphemy of secret societies which, usurping the place of those which have divine appointment, and approval, and blessing, assume to monopolize the work and wisdom of divine institutions. they usurp the place of church and state, squander the resources needed by both in vain shows, costly regalia, and a spurious species of so-called charity that deceives and misleads thousands, as to the duties they owe, the support they should give, and the respect they should show to both church and state.

So far, therefore, from trying to placate these dark lantern frauds on a confiding public, by complimenting them with fulsome and false praise, it becomes the duty of all God-favoring people to lift up a timely testimony against secret societies as the enemies of the peace of society and the purity of religion. Those who have so done, and in so doing have sacrificed time, money, reputation and in some cases imperiled life itself, deserve the praise of the very persons whom they are striving to lead back to the path of light but who are ever ready to vilify these benefactors of their race. We are of those who believe the time is not remote when such heroes of our day will be canonized just as all martyrs for truth in the past have been. Then the majority will be with those who now dare to do and die for the truth of God on this vexed question. Then, those who now deceive the people by their defenses of these plants which our heavenly Father has not planted but will pluck up in his over-ruling righteous providence, will receive that just condemnation their patronage of evil richly merits.—Sandy Lake News.

THE HINDU SACRED BOOKS.

The skeptics of the day are fond of comparing the Bible, which they will not read, with the sacred books of the heathens which they cannot read; and as they know very little of the contents of either, they can of course speak with their usual impartiality on this subject.

It is, however, worth noticing that while the Bible has won its chief victories in, and has been most widely diffused from the lands most noted for liberal culture, scientific research, and human progress, the books our skeptical friends so innocently praise, have had their existence where superstition, idolatry, despotism, cruelty, and misery have brooded like a nightmare over the degraded millions, who have lived without joy and died without hope; and, moreover, when once the light of science beaming from Christian institutions, shines into their dark abodes, immediately these ancient superstitions vanish like bats and owls before the rising of the sun.—Armory.

WE SHALL TRIUMPH AT LAST.

The ultimate triumph and righteousness is assured. The great God cares for the interests of truth, and in the end will make right victorious. At times, error and falsehood may prevail, and every indication may point to the triumph of iniquity and of wrong; but how suddenly all things change; how speedily the fallen banner of truth is uplifted; and how quickly the proud crest of falsehood and error is laid in the dust. That which ought to stand shall stand, and everything that ought to fall shall fall at last.

God lives, though men may die; God rules, though Satan may seem to triumph; and in his own good time he gives the victory to the right. Let no man be moved by these afflictions. Let no heart fail for fear when dangers thicken and furious foes assail. God lives; and they who live in him now, shall live with him forevermore; and "God shall bruise Satan under your feet, shortly."—Safeguard.

A VOUDOO FUNERAL.—The Voudoos of Louisiana —those negroes who still make the eve of St. John an orgy of wierd incantation—were recently viewed at the funeral of a negress, one of the queens of Voudoo. In a shanty she lay in fantastic garb. On her head was a garland of hay leaves, while about her neck a dead snake was twined. The fitful light from a bunch of resinous pine cast a smoky glare over a hundred negroes, who, with joined hands, sat on the ground and swayed their bodies back and forth to the rhythm of a monotonous, droning song, ever and anon letting out an unearthly scream. Then came a march by torchlight to the grave. The torches were dashed to the ground, and the dance above described was repeated with such vigor that before it ended many of the dancers had fallen to the earth from sheer exhaustion. Then the clothes of the dead woman were thrown into the grave, one garment at a time, some of them being first torn in two.

The martyrs to vice far exceed the martyrs to virtue, both in endurance and in number; so blinded are we by our passions that we suffer more to be damned than to be saved.—Colton.

The decision of the Ohio Supreme Court declaring the Scott Law unconstitutional is making great commotion in the Buckeye State. If the people of that commonwealth will band themselves together in Law and Order Leagues, and ascertain just what laws have been restored by this decision, and then proceed to bring about a rigid enforcement, order will soon come out of the chaos. The opinion prevails that all laws repealed by the Scott Law are restored by the decision of the court. Let them be obeyed, and in due season the voters of Ohio will decide whether they are suitable or not. We earnestly hope that no friend of temperance will advocate waiting for other laws to be enacted, but that all will take whatever law they can find, and make it mean every word it says, —Law and Order.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS:

OR

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR.

BY E. E. FLAGG, AUTHOR OF "HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

CHAPTER V.—Concluded.

"But there is another side of the question. How can temperance workers admit into their ranks as co-laborers men who are bound by oath to protect every saloonist who can give the Masonic sign of distress? Will not their best efforts be constantly checkmated, and their plans betrayed when Masonic interests come in collision with the temperance cause? For my part I am not surprised that prohibition makes such slow progress considering how many politicians have to be accommodated with office every year—like Gen. Putney, for instance."

"But they say the Grand Army Posts put him in."

"And who originated the Grand Army? Who are its leaders? Poor, simple, private soldiers with no political aspirations, or Masonic ex-generals who want their votes? I desire no clearer proof than Gen. Putney's nomination that the Grand Army is a mere political machine manipulated by men without a single patriotic impulse in their bosoms; with whom self is first, party next, and country last of all. It is worse than folly to let corrupt secret rings control the elections and then clamor for reform."

"All I can say about it is that the people are to blame," returned Nelson. "If every temperance man would go to the polls resolved to drop all party interests and vote for none but out and out prohibitionists, without any regard whatever to party leaders, the tide would soon turn. But why have you never told me before how opposed you were to secret societies?"

"Because I was really not aware of it myself. I joined the Good Templars without the least suspicion of any harm in the organization. The worthiness of the professed object blinded me to all the folly and sin; but now the beam is cast out of my own eye, perhaps I can see clearly to pull the mote out of my brother's eye."

"I know what is coming, Martha," answered Nelson, with a comical look of resignation in which there mingled, to a critical observer, the slightest shade of vexed annoyance. "I am ready for the operation, however, if you will engage not to hurt more than is necessary."

"Well, now, Nelson, as a laboring woman who intends to marry a laboring man, I ought to be interested in all that concerns the working classes—secret trade unions like the Knights of Labor included."

"Oh, come, Martha! what do you know about the Knights of Labor? Capitalists can and do combine, and why shouldn't workingmen? I have no high opinion of the Masons or the Odd-fellows either, though I don't know much about them; but a harmless trade union is quite another thing. And besides, I hardly ever attend the meetings. I just pay my dues, and that is about all."

Martha held her peace. She was a prudent woman, and did not always speak the thought that lay uppermost.

"You see all the other workmen were joining," continued Nelson, after a moment's silence; "and they urged me a good deal. It is all very well to talk about independence, but a man must be fair to himself and fair to his fellows. The labor problem presents entirely different conditions from what it did fifty or even twenty years ago. Now I feel perfectly able to stand alone and fight my battles with the capitalist on my own hook, but that isn't the case with one in a hundred. How can an ignorant, unskilled workman with a large family protect himself against the greed and injustice of employers? He will just as surely be driven to the wall as he attempts it. The class increases every day, and if it were not for these protective unions he would be in a condition little better than white slavery. Shall the strong, just because they are strong, stand off selfishly each by himself and let his weaker brother stumble along as he can? That isn't the way I read my Bible, and I am sure, Martha, it isn't the way you read yours. As for the secrecy part of it, as I said before, it don't amount to much—only enough to prevent imposition."

"Insurance companies are imposed upon sometimes. Why don't they need the protection of secrecy just as much?" queried Martha.

"Oh, that is a different thing. Business is guarded by red tape, which is something plain workingmen don't know much about. Some secret signs are necessary to enable those who actually belong to make themselves known when they are traveling from place to place, and at the same time keep out bogus members."

"I think it is a great deal more important to keep out unscrupulous leaders," returned Martha, dryly; "for among the other uses of secrecy you forget to mention that it is a most convenient cover under which such men can do pretty much as they like."

"Oh, well," said Nelson, as, with a half laugh and hasty glance at the little French clock on the mantle, he got up to go; "we might talk on this subject from now till next week, and then stand about where we did when we begun. I can't afford to spend time and strength fighting secret societies when there are so many worse evils in the world. I want to see this rum business put down, and I am willing to give up all I have, even life itself, to do it. But still, I agree with you in thinking that these societies have not done as much for the temperance cause as they pretend. And as to the Knights of Labor, if I become a farmer that will sever my connection with them, and leave us nothing to quarrel about unless I join the Grange. But now, Martha," he added, dropping his half-jesting tone, "try to put this dreadful thing that has happened out of your mind. You couldn't have helped it or prevented it. It is only a specimen of what is continually going on, and will keep going on till the people rise in their might and refuse to bear it any longer. When the liquor traffic finally does go down, I believe it will be in such a whirlwind of popular wrath that the whole cursed thing will be destroyed root and branch, and swept as completely from the land as ever slavery was."

"God hasten the day," ejaculated Martha, solemnly. "Amen," returned Nelson, as solemnly. And so they parted, one in their hatred of the dark, destroying saloon power, yet divided by that subtle spirit of evil which stands at its right hand—the spirit of the secret lodge.

CHAPTER VI.

LOAVES AND FISHES.

Colonel Gail Hicks, the nominee of the Prohibition party, was a man the intensity of whose moral convictions was only equaled by the unsullied purity of his public an private life. He was pre-eminently a man of the people, and chosen by the people with that divine instinct which generally shows itself when any great question opens the way for independent political action. The Republican nominee was first and last a demagogue, whose military career had been chiefly remarkable for disastrous blunders, unredeemed by any personal bravery, and whose large fortune, it was more than suspected, had been filched from the government in its hour of deepest distress. The choice of the Democratic side was a man who, when the war broke out, openly aided the Confederate cause, and who now sympathized with the rum interest exactly as he had once sympathized with slavery. This being the character of the two leading candidates, they, with the factions that supported them, found the saloon vote a necessity, and thus the liquor power was placed in the embarrassing position of having two suitors, either one too powerful to offend; but it was fully equal to playing a double game in which both parties were made to truckle to it, and vie with each other in their general subserviency.

The prohibition wave in Jacksonville was one of those phenomenal tidal movements which occur as often and with as startling an effect in the social and political as in the natural world. The saloonists, rendered careless by long security, had scarcely made a pretense of keeping within the strict letter of the law, and this sudden turn in popular feeling surprised them too completely for any attempt at organized resistance.

"We must have a grand rally at the polls," said Mr. Basset, who dropped in one morning to talk over the situation with Stephen Howland. "The ballot is the only argument the liquor party can understand. There's nothing like keeping people's minds stirred up on this subject. A little temporary excitement won't. We mustn't stop rowing till we've fairly touched shore."

"Jacksonville seems to be stirred up pretty well now," returned Stephen. "Such a case as that McLean woman burning her own child to death ought to be enough to wake up any community that calls itself Christian."

"That was an awful thing," responded Mr. Basset feelingly. "Now we've had two saloon murders in Jacksonville in less than a year, to say nothing of the terrible profanity and Sabbath breaking. Iniquity runs down our streets like a river. It is really dreadful to contemplate such a state of things."

"Well, now, Mr. Basset," said Stephen, candidly, "I have not been altogether satisfied with the method pursued thus far. For my part I'm tired hunting down small vermin. What is the use of arresting such men as Snyder and shutting up their drinking holes while all the restaurants and hotels have their open or secret bar? It is neither justice nor policy. I am glad they have planned a descent on Parker of the Phœnix House, for it is safe to say that two-thirds of his profits come from the liquor he sells, and not from his legitimate business."

"Ah! I hadn't heard they were going to arrest Parker. But of course," added Mr. Basset, quickly recovering the self-possession which this information had seemed for some reason to momentarily disturb, "it is always best to be thorough in the work and give no quarter to respectable offenders."

"I appreciate as much as anybody," resumed Stephen, "the necessity of making a good show at the polls. The Prohibitionists must let all the numerical strength they have got be felt, but I don't think it reasonable to expect to carry the State this year. We are working for principles, and principles triumph slowly. Prohibition is surely coming, but it must come through an increasing aggregate of local successes. Every neighborhood thoroughly stirred up on this question, provided the interest is not allowed to abate, makes a kind of nucleus for reform; and when we get a sufficient number of them they will carry the State. Now I believe if temperance people will only work together we can carry Jacksonville for no license this year."

"Now that's exactly my idea," cheerfully responded Mr. Basset, as he took his departure. "Reform, like charity, must begin at home."

KEEP IT BEFORE THE PEOPLE.

1. That secret societies are organized and maintained for the special purpose of securing privileges and immunities that cannot be shared by those who are not of their number.

2. That it is because of these unreasonable and unjust advantages that the members of such societies always resist discussion.

3. It is for this reason and because of the natural desire of selfish men to get benefits without giving an equivalent that these orders have had such a continuous growth and are so hard to overcome.

4. For these reasons the worst and most intensely selfish members of society strive to become members of such orders, and if in any case they are prevented it is to save the good name of the order.

5. Fair minded Christian people who despise partiality mainly abstain from them and largely oppose them.

6. That just in proportion as true religion declines these orders increase in power and the reverse is true.

7. That their tendency is to support and destroy the principles of Republican equality and Christian brotherhood.

LITERATURE.

The Century for December has for its frontispiece a profile portrait of General Grant, engraved from a recently found photograph taken in 1862. It accompanies the second of the papers on the Civil War, "The Capture of Fort Donelson," which is contributed by General Lew Wallace, who commanded the Third Division of Grant's army during the seige. A score of illustrations present views on the field, portraits of officers, maps, and (not the least interesting) an autograph copy, recently made by General Grant, of his famous "Unconditional Surrender" dispatch to General Buckner. Other illustrated papers are "Dublin City," of which Mr. Joseph Pennell has made sketches to accompany a humorous and instructive paper by Prof. Edward Dowden, the Shakespeare commentator; "Hunting the Rocky Mountain Goat," a narrative of personal experience, by William A. Baillie-Grohman, with illustrations by George Inness, Jr.; a third paper in "The New Astronomy" series by Prof. S. P. Langley, in which he endeavors to give the reader some conception of "The Sun's Energy," and a critical paper on "American Painters in Pastel," with an example of pastel work by Robert Blum. George E. Waring, Jr., the sanitary engineer, sets forth in detail by diagrams a subject of pressing importance in a paper on "The Practical Aspects of House-drainage." "Topics of the Time" contain editorials entitled "One Way to Prevent Divorce," "Was the Chinese Traveler Right?" "Economic Mistakes of the Poor," and "A Ready-made Foreign Market for American Goods"—the last referring to the need of an international copyright.

A prominent feature of the current number of St. Nicholas is the wood engraving of a painting by the Spanish painter Valasquez. It is a portrait of the Infanta Marguerita Maria, daughter of King Philip of Spain. Other charming child portraits are those of Lord Tennyson's grandchildren and the two boys of Sir Lambton Loraine, captain of the British ship "Niobe," which rendered such illustrious service to our country in 1873. Frank R. Stockton's European tour goes from Nimes in France and its old Roman bridge to Genoa and its white palaces; and the story of a Senate page continues to entertain with humorous and entertaining sketches of life about the Capitol.

A CAMPAIGN STORY.

Among the humors of the campaign which will be appreciated by the readers of the Cynosure is the following from the Pittsburgh Leader, which shows how the editor of the Commercial Gazette of that city lost his opportunity of making Mr. Blaine President. That is, he might have done so had all the statements below been facts. They are not so altogether, as, for instance, the denominational standing of the Cynosure; the action of the editor of the Cynosure in the Pittsburgh convention, St. John's letters, the Anti-masonic and Good Templar vote of New York, etc., etc.; but in spite of these numerous imperfections it is a good story:

"Do you know that Nelse Reed, of the Com. Gaz., had it in his power to make Blaine President?" said a well-known Republican politician to a leader reporter.

"No," replied the reporter, "I thought the old Com. Gaz. got in about as good work in the campaign as any paper I knew about. It certainly never looked to me like a 'dead-head in the enterprise.'"

"I know that," said the gentleman, "but if Mr. Reed had grasped the opportunity which presented itself to him, Mr. Blaine would to-day be President of the United States. The story is a long one. You remember that early last June there was a convention of the American party held in Chicago, at which a pronounced temperance platform was adopted. That platform contained a radical anti-secret society plank, which pledged itself to annul all charters to secret societies now existing, and making it a penal offense for any person to administer the oath of a secret society. Upon this platform ex-Senator Dorsey [Pomeroy], of Kansas, was nominated for President, and Conant, of Connecticut, for Vice-President. In July the Prohibition Home Protection party held their national convention here in Pittsburgh. Among those who gathered at that convention were Dr. Blanchard, President of Wheaton College, and editor of the Christian Cynosure, a Congregational weekly, and his son, Charles A. Blanchard. They came as fraternal delegates from the American party convention. The elder Blanchard, eight years previous, was a candidate for President on the national ticket for the American party, and this year the delegates of Illinois (his own State), were instructed to support him for the same position. The nomination was offered him, but he declined, but was considerably disappointed by not being pressed to take it, I am told. At any rate, he immediately put in operation a scheme for the coalition of the American and Prohibition parties. Dr. Blanchard, if you remember, rose in the Prohibition convention and offered a resolution to the effect that the anti-secret-society plank in the platform of the American party be incorporated in the Prohibition platform. Of course it raised a decided tumult. The president of the national lodge of Good Templars, the venerable John Russell, of Michigan, and other prominent Freemasons in the convention, all having the floor together and all declaring that they and their States had been insulted by the resolution. The doctor was not even allowed to speak upon the subject. In his report of the convention in his paper, the Christian Cynosure, Dr. Blanchard was very mild and said the tumult was raised by a few Freemasons who were in the convention. One of the most prominent Anti-masons of Pittsburgh wrote to Dr. Blanchard, criticising his report and accusing him of basely selling out the American party to the Prohibition party. Mr. Blanchard, in reply, wrote a letter excusing himself by saying that St. John had written him to the effect that he (St. John) stood upon the platform of the American party, every plank of which he indorsed, including that against secret societies. Dr. Blanchard wrote a similar letter to the Michigan State convention of the American party, in which he claimed he had a letter from St. John, in which that candidate announced himself as standing upon every plank of the American party platform, including the name. The fact is known that Messrs. Dorsey [Pomeroy] and Conant of the American party withdrew in favor of St. John and Daniel, and these two candidates were indorsed by the American party. In his letter of acceptance, however, St. John adroitly failed to mention either the American party or his own standing upon the anti-secret society question, although he did withdraw from the order of Freemasons, to which he belonged, though assigning no reason for the move. When this letter came out the Anti-mason I mentioned before thought he saw something crooked in Mr. St. John's canvass, and went to Mr. Reed of the Commercial Gazette, and placing the matter before him, suggested that he have Mr. St. John interviewed on this question and define his position fairly and squarely. The Anti-mason represented to Mr. Reed that whichever side of the question Mr. St. John took, it would lose him many votes. If he declared himself in full accord with the American party platform and its plank providing for the annulling of all secret society charters, he would lose the votes of all in his party who were members of secret societies, including the whole body of Good Templars, which would amount to not less than 50,000 in the five States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan and Illinois. If Mr. St. John declined to indorse the American party platform and the anti-secrecy plank, he would lose the entire Anti-masonic vote of the five States mentioned, which would not be less than 30,000. In New York State alone it would have lost him 5,000 votes. Northwestern New York was the birthplace of Anti-masonry. Here it was that Morgan was murdered in 1828 for the alleged betrayal of Masonic secrets. The fight was so bitter in that State that it decided the elections for years, divided brother against brother, and was the foundation for feuds not yet healed. It occasioned the split in the M. E. church which gave rise to the Free Methodist denomination, every member of which is an Anti-mason. Nearly all of these people voted the Prohibition ticket this fall, and it is safe to say that 5,000 of the Prohibition votes polled in New York State were cast by the Free Methodist Anti-masons of Western New York. That, I think, is a low estimate for the stronghold of Free Methodism in Western and Northern New York, and the election figures for the counties of that portion of the State will show you that a larger proportion of the Republican vote went for St. John than in any other part of the State. Nearly all this would have been lost, then, if Mr. St. John had gone back on the anti-secret-society plank, for these people regard the question as of far more moment than that of temperance, and almost paramount to the plan of salvation. Had he endorsed that he would have lost the six thousand Good Templars of New York, not including the other Prohibitionists who were members of other secret societies. The Anti-mason alluded to put these facts before Mr. Reed ten days before the Ohio election and the latter said that he would act upon the suggestion. The Commercial Gazette, I believe, did publish a short editorial asking the question: 'Is St. John in favor of repealing the charters of secret societies?' but did not push the matter and make St. John define his position. It was a great mistake, and so much was my Anti-masonic friend interested in the matter that he again went to Mr. Reed, two weeks before the national election and almost insisted that St. John should be interviewed and his position defined. Reed said that he would do it, but neglected his one great opportunity, and I think to-day did more to defeat Blaine by his neglect than did Dr. Burchard with his alliterative remark of 'Rum, Romanism and Rebellion.'"

The Republican organs couldn't be more bitter against the Prohibitionists if the business of the Republican party was keeping a saloon.—Chicago Herald.

THE FREEDOM OF THE BALLOT.

MENOMONIE, WIS.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—A correspondent of the Christian Nation says that Mr. Blaine, in response to a serenade given him at his home in Augusta, made an address in which he gave the key-note of the Republican campaign for the future. It is to break up the "solid South," and secure what he insisted does not exist there now, viz.: Freedom of the ballot. Mr. Blaine said, among other things:

"The course of affairs at the South has crushed out the political power of more than six million American citizens and has transferred it by violence to others. Forty-two Presidential electors are assigned to the South on account of the colored population and yet the colored population with more than 1,100,000 legal votes, have been unable to choose a single elector. Even in those States where they have a majority of more than 100,000, they are deprived of free suffrage, and their rights as free citizens are scornfully trodden under foot. The eleven states that comprised the rebel confederacy had, by the census af 1880, seven and a half millions white population, and five millions, three hundred thousand colored population. The colored population, almost to a man, desire to support the Republican party, but by a system of cruel intimidation and by violence and murder, whenever violence and murder are thought necessary, they are absolutely deprived of all political power."

Now, we can all hold up both hands along with Mr. Blaine in holy horror at the mention of such a state of affairs. But the "dear old Republican party" has claimed to be running this government for the last twenty-four years, and has pleaded long and loud to be left to run it yet for an indefinite length of time. We had supposed that the general government had given its solemn pledge of protection to all the citizens of the country, "without regard to color, race or previous condition of servitude." Nothing has been done by the Republican party for many a day towards changing this state of affairs for the better. Not a word was in the last Republican platform hinting at a purpose to insure a peaceful vote to the colored people of the South. The word of God declares that the nation and kingdom that will not serve God shall perish. If God requires anything of a government it is the protection of its subjects from oppression and violence. The Republican party has long utterly refused this protection to the poor blacks at the South. The Republican party has perished and it is hard to refrain from saying a loud amen. Talk about the States each regulating their own affairs! They have this right when, and only when, they do not violate the federal Constitution. Now let the conscientious but prudent Republicans who threw away their votes on Mr. Blaine take the stool of repentance for a while, and be sorry that they did not vote for Prohibition and help to secure an administration that would not only banish the liquor business, a consummation never to be reasonably hoped for under the Republican party, but which we have the strongest reasons to believe would secure to the black people the peaceful exercise of their rights as citizens of this boasted free country.

While on the one hand we are told that the colored people are terribly alarmed at the Democratic success, on the other we are assured that the white people of the South are exceedingly anxious to allay any such fears. Says the American, "It is not pleasant to think of what might happen if a whole race, once enslaved, but now free, intelligent and armed, should become convinced that they must fight for their liberty." Surely the Lord knows how to make the wrath of man to praise him, and to restrain the remainder thereof. W. W. AMES.

AGE SPEAKS GOOD CHEER.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—My interest is not abated, but increased; nor am I discouraged. Do you ask why? Because the occasion does not abate, nor furnish grounds for discouragement. Look whichever way I may in the field of vision, I see no reason wanting that should create interest in this momentous work that has been thrown upon our hands, whose eyes, by the providence of God, have been opened to see the ruin threatened our religions and civil institutions by rum and secretism. Never did their imps and minions put forth such herculean efforts and devise such unscrupulous measures, and teach such debasing doctrines as now. Nor did slavery give stronger emphasis to blasphemy when its advocates claimed for it the divine sanction than these twin devils have done in putting forth the doctrine that debauchery, drunkenness, and licentiousness should not disqualify a man for being put at the head of this Christian nation. O perdition! O Prince of Darkness! What will ye not dare say next?

It is full time for every pulpit in the land to thunder God's testimony against such heaven-insulting effrontery; and for every Christian, and every man and woman whose mind and heart have not become reprobate, to speak, act and vote God's stern and efficient negation to such teaching and practice.

Should my interest abate? Is it liable to, while I see these evils and indicate my disapproval, as above? No, far otherwise. And it may be understood that as I see gathering and concentrating the army of the haters of God against his truth and righteousness, and his church, and this Christian nation, marshaled by rum and secretism, that my interest must and will increase. Nor am I discouraged. For when I remember what God has said of just such blind characters as make up this dual army of rumies and secretists, that "there is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof is death;" and the good man Job asks, in accord with the divine purpose, this significant question, "Who hath hardened himself against him and hath prospered?" Remember, also, that it is against God this war is waged, who never lost a battle and never can. I know this cause is safe, and, therefore, when seeing these things, I cannot be discouraged.

We need none of us be discouraged, "for the Lord he is God." Look into the heavens and see what he has done—made the countless millions of worlds and suns, and furnished his own material, and took no counsel of any; "spread out the heavens abroad," "laid the foundations of the earth" and "formed the spirit of man within him;" cast Satan and all his angels out of heaven, and will cast these twin destroyers out of earth. It would be sin to tremble for this cause with such a leader. It would be cruel and cowardly distrust. God is an almighty Prohibitionist and anti-secretist. Not an attribute of his whole being but is opposed to drunkenness and oath-bound secretism. Let us move on then with joyful hope and confidence. We know how Senachrib's army, which came up against God's Jerusalem melted away before the blast of God's angel; and how the king of Syria and his great army, who sought the prophet Elisha, were smitten with blindness and were led captive into the city they expected to capture; and how the hosts of the Philistines, when only Jonathan and his armor-bearer, with God, bore down upon them, were discomfitted. Remember God is an almighty factor in every good enterprise. And let us not forget the scene in the Garden, when a soldier went backward and fell to the ground by the force of the potent, "I am he." Let us not trust, then, to any human wisdom or policy, but act under the force of the divine will and direction of divine wisdom. Seek for these by prayer and careful study of God's word and providence.

Now a word of apology for such prolonged silence. There are so many and so much abler pens that I have not deemed myself needed in this department; though it is not to be disguised that often my feelings have prompted me to wish to have my say. Yet now I fear had not some zealous brother called out my name, with others, I should have remained silent. If I am needed in any work I can do for my Lord, call for me. I am here.

THE ANCIENT DRUIDS.

It appears from the American Cyclopedia the ancient Druids were an order of priests having their rise in certain branches of the Celtic race. Their name and origin are uncertain. They did not allow their tenents and history to be written, hence the vagueness of history. They believed in the immortality of the soul, in future rewards and punishments; adored one supreme being, a kind of ideal such as Freemasons worship, they were sun worshipers in the form of fire, while Masons worship the sun under the likeness of Hiram Abiff. It took them twenty years to become bright Druids, while a man can become a bright Mason in a few months if he has the aptness of a parrot to repeat words. Their places of worship were quite similar to the Masons, either in dense forests or dark caverns, while the latter worship only when and where the light of the sun is excluded

The Druids also mingled human blood with their other sacrifices. Here again is another striking resemblance to Masonry. How many husbands and fathers have gone out from home never more to return, who fell a sacrifice to Masonic vengeance. The Druids professed to "reform morals, to secure peace, and to encourage goodness," yet followed "pernicious superstitions and pretences to a magical knowledge." Here, again, we see an exact type of Masonry, high pretensions to morality, goodness, truth, etc., yet practice lying to conceal the worst of crimes. When a Druid refused to submit to their intolerant requirements, he was "rendered an outcast and an outlaw." So if a Mason kicks and refuses to submit to Masonic rule, he is made an outcast as unworthy of confidence, and if his body is not killed, his character will be murdered by the foul tongue of slander.

More might be said, but this will suffice to call your attention to the history of the Druids as given in the American Cyclopedia. Yours for the unvailing of the secret abominations of Masonry.

D. VAN DEVENTER.

[If the modern secret society known as the "Ancient Order of Druids" resembles the description above, it deserves suppression by a strong hand; if not, it should at least be ashamed of its heathen name and relations.]

HELP THE POOR TO HELP THEMSELVES.

"The House of Rest," Charleston, S. C., was founded in 1874, for all women, girls, and young children who cannot be received and surrounded by good influences elsewhere. It receives orphan babies, and the orphans of strangers (both classes being inadmissible at the "Charleston Orphan House"), the children of bread-winning mothers and of sick parents, little girls rescued from degraded homes, the convalescent, the stranger seeking employment, the aged needing a peaceful home; and also the sinner, of whom it is a very successful and the only reformatory in the South (unless there be one recently opened at Washington). It receives applicants from other places if there is room, and the friends of each one thus admitted pay one hundred dollars a year toward their support. At present there are twenty-nine inmates, including twenty-four children under fourteen years of age.

Each inmate is required to do whatever she can. The children receive training in household work and sewing, a common school education, and are expected to be fitted for household positions.

The founders of the House are devoted to its work. One of them has made it her home from choice, so as to give all her time to it. Another one regularly leaves her home to spend the greater part of each day at the House engaged in its work. And the other one, as the writer of the "Cot Letters," for seven years has kindled and cherished an interest in the little "Cot" of the House, which is being slowly endowed with two thousand dollars that it may be always occupied by a friendless child during the first three years of its life. These ladies impart to the House a refinement unexpected in a home for the unfortunate; and show in their daily lives the ruling principles which have truly made it the House of Rest. Would that the work would "come home to men's business and bosoms." It only needs to be known to be appreciated. It was founded in the belief that because it was a work meeting pressing wants in the daily lives of the poor it would be supported by the people.

During the past year fifty worthy applicants were refused admittance from want of means. Seventeen hundred and eighty-two dollars ($1,782) are needed for the introduction of the steam machinery manufactured by B. Eastwood, of Patterson, N. J , into its laundry, which could then, the work being done by the inmates, have its capacity for work increased at reduced prices, so as to enlarge the work as designed and demanded, and contribute largely toward making it self-supporting. The inmates would thus be taught to maintain themselves by the labor of their hands, and, if unskilled workers, be trained until they become successful in laundry work. Can a more practical way be devised of helping the destitute to help themselves? In the faith that there is "much in little," and to enable all to contribute to this noble work, a two-cent postage stamp for the Laundry Fund of the House of Rest will be gladly received from each reader of the Christian Cynosure.

References in Charleston concerning the work can be made, by permission, to Rt. Rev. W. B. W. Howe, D.D.; Rev. C. S. Vedder, D.D., pastor of the Huguenot church; Rev. F. W. Junkin, D.D., pastor of the Westminster Presbyterian church; Rev. M. E. T. Horn, pastor of St. John's Lutheran church.

All necessary inquiries about the work may be made, and all visitors in sympathy with it will be welcome to the founders of the House, who are also the Executive Committee, Mrs. J. Bellinger, Miss E. J. Wagner, Miss Celia Campbell. Contributions to the Laundry Fund must be so specified, and may be addressed, House of Rest (corner of Ashley and Spring streets), Charleston, S. C. MARY VAN B. STEVENSON.

PITH AND POINT.

THE CYNOSURE IN WEST AFRICA.

Thanks for your gift of the Cynosure to September, '85, when I will renew. I brought my mind to part with it with no little reluctance, I can assure you. When I read it now, and then send it to my school, and to the most interior settlement of Liberia, it will be with more pleasure and profit than ever. The entire letter and spirit of the Cynosure is my own, and for this reason I can truly say, "Thanks." I am quite sure you will read the enclosed circular with pleasure. The next vessel will take both the cotton gin and loom to my Liberia school, and this time next year the kings and chiefs of the Niger Valley and Soudan will walk to "Morris man's school" to see what is not on the Continent of Africa to-day. So much, my kind friend, for faith andworks, blended with patience. You would help my single-handed school work in the "Dark Continent" if you will review my circular in your good and influential Cynosure Your brother in Christ for Africa.—EDWARD S. MORRIS.

MASONRY IN THE CABINET.

I think if you would send the Cynosure to our worthy P. M. it would be to the interest of your paper, as he has already commenced borrowing of the new subscribers, for he must have a copy for the lodge, and I am not so sure that it will not yet convert one or more of their number. Just as I have found out that Gresham is not a Mason, presto! he is gone, and another is in his place. Do you know if the new P. M. General is a Mason or uot? —EDWARD ETTER, Minden, La.

[Frank Hatton, the successor of Judge Gresham, is a Freemason and has taken the degrees at least to the Knight Templar.]

THE FIFTY LECTURERS.

The plan to have fifty lecturers in the field is a good one. It is a work much needed. There are two lecturers who are doing some good work in Mississippi, but there is little to be found to remunerate them. Let the anti-lodge reformers and the prohibitionists unite and help each other, and wonders will be seen in a short time.—E. TAPLEY, Columbus, Miss.

THE CYNOSURE IN THE SOUTH.

I wish most heartily to thank the unknown friend who has been sending me the Cynosure for some weeks. We all read it with much interest, and think it is steadily improving from what I had known of it years ago. Such a paper as this is greatly needed among our colored friends, so many of whom are bewitched with secret societies. My copy goes to some of them. We discussed the influence of secret societies among them at our last association at Montgomery. Many of the pastors took very strong economic ground against them. We polled eleven votes for St. John that were counted. Am glad you are pushing the campaign for temperance steadily on.—A. W. CURTIS, Marion, Ala., (pastor Congregational church).

A FIVE MINUTE EXERCISE FOR THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

The inability of many people to turn readily to the different books of the Bible suggests the propriety of having their names taught in the Sunday-school. One plan adopted is this: The superintendent or any teacher with a clear voice calls out five of the names, say from the Old Testament. Then have all the school repeat with him. So also with five books of the New Testament; and to give interest to the children some short allusion can be made to Cain and Abel, or Joseph and his brethren, or Moses, and also to Christ's first home in the stable, and the wonderful day of Pentecost. Five minutes regularly every Sabbath would give the school familiarity with this great mine which every Christian appreciates above the gold of California.—T. H.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON XII.—Dec. 21, 1884.—The Creator Remembered.—Eccles. 12: 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth.—Eccles. 12: 1.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Remembrance of our Creator in youth the preparation for a happy old age. Vs. 1-7. We should remember that we are not our own, that we belong to God, who created us and rightfully claims our service. We are to serve him with our all (Mark 12: 30) and with our best days (Jer. 3: 4), before our mental and bodily senses fail and incapacitate us from profitable service. The picture which follows may seem gloomy, for it is not natural to regard with pleasure the gradual decay and breaking up of these active physical frames of ours; but we must remember that it is only a godless old age to which that term "evil days" can truly apply. So far from saying bitterly, "I have no pleasure in them," the aged Christian counts his last days his happiest. Religion grows more and more delightful as we go down the vale of years. Feeble age shares the same sweet promise with helpless infancy:

> "And then, when grey hairs shall their temples adorn,
> Like lambs they will still in my bosom be borne."

2. The wise preacher. Vs. 8–12. The sadly solemn words of the royal preacher, "Vanity of vanities! all is vanity," has been echoed by many a devotee of the world, never by the sincere Christian. Without the high motives with which religion presents us, the round of working, eating and sleeping, which makes up life for the average of the human race, seems indeed vain and profitless enough; but let us take for our own the motto of Paul: "Whether we eat and drink, do all for the glory of God," and our humblest tasks have a grand use and a deep significance, which might make them envied by angels. We think of religion too much as a preparation for the other world, forgetting that it is as important to be prepared to live as it is to be prepared to die. We should not hear so much to-day about the decay of pulpit power if all ministers would copy the example of the wise preacher. It is not enough that they "find out acceptable words." Those words must be as "goads and as nails fastened by the masters of assemblies"; they must have the strong clench of a practical application to sin, whether national or individual. A pulpit which for fear of giving offense is silent on great moral issues like the lodge and the saloon, will be silent for the same reason on questions of daily duty. They must be "given from one shepherd", Christ himself, and not from any human teacher or system. If the pulpit is waning it is because it has lost this grand secret of all true ministerial power.

3. The conclusion of the whole matter. Vs. 13, 14. Duty is really a very simple thing or it could never be defined in a compass so sublimely brief. God requires of us no hard service. Every secret thing shall be brought into judgment. The secrecy of a guarded lodge-room is no bar to the all-seeing eye, and no oath "always to conceal and never reveal" will avail anything in the day when the secrets of all hearts shall be revealed.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What graphic description of old age in 2 Sam. 19: 35? What was the example of earth's greatest Preacher? Mark 12: 37; Math. 13: 34; Math. 23. What did he say regarding the futility of secrecy? Luke 12: 2.

NOTES FROM PELOUBET.

"Remember now thy Creator." Acknowledge his Word by consulting it; his Providence, by observing it; his Wisdom, by admiring it; his Sovereignty, by acquiescing in it; his Faithfulness, by relying on it; his Kindness, by being thankful for it.—Quoted by Bridges.

"In the days of thy youth." Let youth's days be choice days, choosing days. Here, however, the great enemy meets us with the ungodly adage, "Youth for pleasure, age for business, old age for religion." "Let the devil have the prime, and God the dregs. Time enough to think of religion when we are old, when we can serve the world no longer. Now is the time for pleasure, to see as much of life as we can. Religion will come in course." Frightful delusion! the delusion of him who is a liar, and the father of it.—Bridges.

"Nor the clouds return after the rain." In youth there may be a shower, but it soon passes away with a cloudless sky. In Judea and other countries they have their rainy seasons, and when the rain seems to be ceasing, it gathers again and again for another and yet another shower. The clouds returning after the rain represen s the winter season of life. One mental infirmity follows another in quick succession.—Young.

OLD AGE COMPARED TO AN OLD DECAYING HOUSE, OR HOUSEHOLD ESTABLISHMENT (vers. 3–6). This is one of the most beautiful allegories ever penned. The image is that of a decaying and unprotected house which represents the body in old age. The value of an Eastern house consisted much in the following things. It should be built in a sunny place, with bright skies overhead and beautiful scenery around. It should be guarded by bold and watchful keepers, having strong laborers to obtain provisions. It should have its latticed windows and its folding doors. Trees should grow around the dwelling, in whose branches the birds should sing melodiously. Music should resound through the halls. Its apartments should be lighted up at night with golden lamps suspended with silver cords. A cooling fountain standing in its outer court, with a costly pitcher by which to draw the water, should complete its comforts. Such a house represents the vigor of the human body in youth or in manhood's prime. In perfect contrast to this is the house to which Solomon introduces us in this allegory.—Young.

V. 3. This verse is best understood as referring to the change which old age brings to four parts of the body: the arms, the legs, the teeth and the eyes.—Cook.

"He shall rise up at the voice of the bird." He sleeps so lightly that even the voice of the hird wakes him early in the morning. An allusion to the sleeplessness of old men.—Lange. Tayler Lewis translates, "though it rise (attain to) the sparrow's note." The real sound, shrill as a sparrow's voice, is put in contrast with the dull droning sound that reaches the old man's ears.—Peloubet.

"All the daughters of music shall be brought low." By these defects we are instructed in the days of our youth to open all the doors of our heart to let Christ in, that in old age he may be with us, and when our appetite faileth he may sup with us (Rev. 3: 20); and when our sleep faileth he may give us rest; and when all other delights are worn out, a good conscience may be a continual feast, and may "give songs in the night."—Bp. Reynolds.

"And the almond tree shall flourish." This translation is supported by the ancient versions. Dr. Thomson ("The Land and the Book," p. 319) says of the almond tree, "It is the type of old age whose hair is white,.... the white blossoms completely cover the whole tree; the green leaves do not appear till some time after." Many modern critics translate, "the almond shall be despised," i. e., pleasant food shall be no longer relished.—Cook.

"And the mourners go about the streets." They were there anxious to have employment. The preparations for a great funeral were often made by the heirs of a mortally sick old man, even before his decease.—Lange.

"Or ever the silver cord be loosed." "The silver cord" denotes the thread of life. "The golden bowl" has reference to the body as a vessel containing the life blood. The "shattered pitcher" suggests in particular the destruction of the organs of respiration; and "the wheel broken at the cistern" implies the cessation of that cyclic action by which the life while it endures is maintained. —A. Roberts, D.D., Old Testament Revision.

"Of making many books there is no end," i. e., one might keep on writing books without limit. and yet not make all men wise. There are enough books now for their instruction. He that will not be wise with what is already written, would not be wise though the world were filled with books.—Peloubet.

"Weariness of the flesh." Vaihinger correctly says, "There is a passion for reading, which weakens mind and body, whilst fruitful reflection strengthens both. —Lange. The writer would teach all other ages as well as his own, that the "words of truth" are the only books of real value, all others producing weariness. The Bible is the book of books.—Young.

"Fear God and keep his commandments." The fear of God denotes internal piety, and the keeping of the commandments of God denotes the expression of it by external obedience. This religion of heart and life is said to be the whole duty of man, or rather the whole of man.

"The whole duty of man." Rather, the whole man. So the Septuagint, Vulgate, Ewald, Herzfeld, and others. To fear God and obey him is the whole man, constitutes man's whole being; that only is conceded to man; all other things, as this book again and again teaches, are dependent upon a higher incomprehensible being.—Herzfeld. That is, this is your part of life; God will take care of the rest. He that has true religious life within, and in his daily conduct, has all the essentials of life. He has found what shall profit a man, the way to true happiness.—Peloubet.

"For God shall bring every work into judgment." Knobel argues fairly from the expressions "every work" and "every secret thing" (comp. Rom. 2:16; 1 Cor. 4: 5) that the preacher here means an appointed judgment which shall take place in another world, as distinct from that retribution which frequently follows man's actions in the course of this world, and which is too imperfect (comp. 2: 15; 4: 1; 7: 15; 9: 2; etc.) to be described by these expressions.—Cook.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1884.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up aud prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.

4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.

5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.

7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents aud inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.

8. We hold to and will vote for womau suffrage.

9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.

10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.

11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business intcrests will allow.

14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.

15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1884.

The suggestion for national political convention to meet next June in Chicago, in connection with the N. C. A. annual meeting, first came in a letter from F. W. Capwell, chairman of the National Committee of the American party. It was endorsed and resuggested back to his committee by the Directors, Nov. 11. It has been our custom from the first to hold such joint meetings, to save travel; the N. C. A. always adjourning to allow the American party to meet separate and distinct, and open to all voters. The American party is not "party-politics," but national and eternal politics; like law, "Commanding what is right and forbidding what is wrong."

THE WAIL OF THE WOLF.—The Champion, Paul Schuster editor, is the National Liquor Organ, established in 1878. It goes weekly to the brewers and liquor-dealers of nearly 600 cities and towns in twenty-two States. Immediately after the election it utters these editorial wailings: "The vote for St. John, over 200,000, throws into the shade the irrepressible Benj. F. Butler." "This is exactly to the liquor-trade what the first cannon on Fort Sumpter, on the 12th of April 1861, was to the U. S. government, viz., a solemn, forcible, defiant declaration of war." "There is no backing down now for either side." "The Prohibition flood is now sweeping over every State in the Union." "The party which voted for St. John means business." "There can be in this war no middle ground," and "parties must adapt themselves to the situation," with much more to the like effect. Read the whole article in the temperance department.

We shall be glad to receive suggestions from correspondents about the future efforts of the American party. Shall we favor a convention of prohibitionists opposed to nominating members of secret orders to office?—The American.

As Prof. Bailey is not a member of the Prohibition, but of the American party; and as all of our people who voted for St. John and Daniel, voted for them as "Americans," as was distinctly avowed at the Washington (Iowa) convention, we, of course, cannot call, or without their previous action, "favor a call" of "a convention of Prohibitionists," whether secretists or anti-secretists. But it is entirely competent and courteous for us to invite all anti-secret Prohibitionists to join us in convention; and this is what we understand chairman Capwell of New York, and Prof. Kimball of New Hampshire, to suggest.

Mr. Capwell, in a letter to us, says he favors a general convention of the American party in Chicago, next June, following the annual meeting of the N. C. A., to save travel and expense.

The six conventions in New England, originally suggested to Secretary Stoddard by Prof. Kimball, were, we believe, intended by him to be N. C. A. meetings with recess for an American meeting if desired. Will these brethren please rise and explain?

The entrenchments of sin are not to be taken by sappers and miners; they can only be won by open and hard fighting. The lodges and saloons are the strongest of the "strongholds," of Satan; and those prohibitionists who hope to destroy the saloon by avoiding open, direct collision with the lodges, vainly hope to outwit the devil. It is no part of Masonic secrecy that Masons are sworn to stand by one another. All do not do so, but all are sworn to. If, then, Mason-prohibitionists do not stand by Mason distillers and saloonists, they are perjured to the lodge. If they do, they are perjured to prohibition. Christ taught "politics," or he did not teach the whole duty of man; and his politics are not "fickle." New Testament politics are what Geo. Bush called, "The earthly triumphs of Christianity." They are these: That men are of "One blood," and so equal in natural rights. Acts 17: 26. That rulers are servants, not masters of the people. Matt. 20: 27, etc. That there are in Christ no national or color lines (Col. 3: 11), or civil distinctions against women (Gal. 3: 28), and that church and state, or things sacred and things civil must not be mixed. Matt. 22: 21. These, and others like them, are God's ideas of human politics. As to taxes, tariff, revenue, etc., the woman's two mites which made a farthing, and the fish with money in his mouth were Christ's sanction of government support.

The editors of the Cynosure are not members of the national Board of Directors of the N. C. A.

CONVENTIONS—CONVENTIONS!

It seems to the Cynosure that there is "a sound of going in the tops of the mulberry trees." (2 Sam. 5: 24.) David had smitten the Philistines at Baal Perazime and burned their lodge gods ,which had polluted the Jewish worship; as in our late war our boys were initiated by the very lodges which organized the secession hand brought on the war. David knew that Moses was not mistaken when he denounced and punished all appliances of false worships as "cursed things," and though but a handful against a host the power of God was in every blow he struck.

Prohibition has triumphed. It has forced itself into the arena of American politics and a coach and horses cannot take it out. Chairman Capwell has suggested a general political convention at Chicago next June. Prof. Kimball calls for six State conventions in New England, and promises co-operation. Secretary Stoddard responds, "Write me down for six conventions." Letters from Rev. R. Loggan in Kansas, tell us he enters the field as agent of the N. C. A. If president Richards and secretary McMillan of the Kansas auxiliary call a convention in Olathe before January 1st, Gov. St. John has promised to address it on prohibition; and Prest. C. A. Blanchard will speak for the N. C. A. against the lodge. Perhaps Dr. Cordley of Lawrence can be seen and invited to attend. President Seelye of Amherst College, has been writted to in behalf of the Northampton convention, and Gough and Dr. Miner of Boston will be. Dr. Miner went to Washington and spoke for us powerfully last winter, and Gough told the editor of the Cynosure in his intense, histrionic style:

"At Baltimore, the Good Templars got up a grand procession and insisted I should wear their regalia. I yielded, and rode along tricked out with their blazonry, till I looked on myself and saw how supremely ridiculous I appeared. I took off my horse-collar regalia and rammed it under the seat, and I have not seen or worn the thing since."

And while these notes of preparation are seen and heard in the North, Prof. Bailey was the first to adumbrate the duty of the American party. Some weeks since the American declared the immediate duty of the American party to be, to disintegrate the Prohibition party and divorce its darkness from its light. Not that he would drive off the Good Templars, and Templars of Honor from prohibition. He invites them to abandon their lodges and join us in one solid phalanx of light; and the American is calling for and concentering the opinions of the good and wise on the best form of the movement. In the words of Secretary Stoddard, let there be a "forward movement all along the line." All national candidates and disagreements about them are positively out of the way for three years. That is as long as Christ preached. Let us meekly follow his footsteps, copy his example, and prepare his way.

KANSAS MATTERS.

May we without impertinence suggest to General Agent Kinney and the Syracuse brethren that Wesleyan interests in Kansas need immediate attention and aid. The Wesleyan churches at Olathe and Fort Scott were openly committed against the lodge, while all the other churches in those interesting cities except Scotch Presbyterians, were silent, and their silence counted as votes for the lodge. The lodges have given their profoundest attention to these churches. In the words of Bro. Richards, they have "greased and swallowed" some weak ministers, and have run the congregations down from hundreds to almost nothing. But worst of all, the "powers of darkness," which confounded and confused Christ's little church when they drew near Jerusalem, has troubled these churches. Bro. Richards, who bought a fine foundation which had been mortgaged for $1,000, for $150, and built a good stone church there, is just now gone to that work, where a church of eighty members is sunk to half a dozen! And there is now a debt of some $700 on the building. So far as I can judge, his measures are wise, and he certainly has the respect of the people. His wife is a woman of sound sense and piety, and the few that adhere to the church, especially the family of Bro. Cook, are "called and chosen and faithful." The beautiful city of Fort Scott is rapidly building up, and there is probably no other post in Kansas so important to the Wesleyan denomination. I will be one of ten to pay $100 to help Bro. Richards through this year. Will Bro. Kinney publish this appeal and write me what he thinks. I also will consult Pres. Stratton. J. B.

Ex-Governor St. John should and must be paid a rational and just compensation sufficient to cover his ever -increasing clerk-hire, car-fare, etc., unless it is the intention to kill him off. Who sees to it? "On the side of the oppressors there is power," and an endless amount of money. Let not St. John lack bread.

—Bro. Hinman, now laboring for the N. C. A. in Illinois, is this week in Lexington, McLean county.

—Bro. W. B. Lloyd, employed by the Executive Committee of the Illinois Association spoke on the Sabbath at Brush Point Wesleyan church and Kingston M. E. church. These places are near Sycamore in De Kalb county.

—The Blanchard (Iowa) Record says that an appointment for Elder Rathbun in that place drew out a good congregation; but there was much disappointment in the non-appearance of the lecturer who was detained at a protracted meeting in Beaconsfield, Iowa.

—The Chicago Association, which cares for the interests of our reform in this city, met at the house of E. A. Cook on Washington Boulevard, Monday evening, to consider what can be done by way of lectures or other meetings to increase the number of friends of anti-lodgery during the present season.

—Ebenezer Kent, one of the most steadfast and earnest supporters of our work, died in his 91st year at the home of his daughter, Mrs. O. W. Brown in Wethersfield, Ill. His last contribution of $20.00 paid for sending the Cynosure to a number of colored ministers whose names were furnished by Dr. J. E. Roy of the Am. Missionary Association. An obituary notice will appear next week.

—The last issue of the India Methodist Watchman, edited by Rev. C. B. Ward of Secunderabad, Deccan, India, comes in folio and not magazine form, and will be hereafter published fortnightly instead of monthly. These indications of success in an interesting mission work are cheering. Any readers of the Cynosure who wish to subscribe for a good missionary paper devoted to the work in India can receive it by sending $1.25 to this office or to Mrs. A. R. Kean, 100 Washington St., Chicago.

— The Cynosure has lately welcomed numerous visitors, among whom we recall the names of Rev. C. C. Foote, of Detroit; Rev. B. T. Roberts, Superintendent of the Free Methodist church; Rev. George Warrington, President of the Iowa State Association; and Elder Henry Cogswell, formerly of Wadsworth and Mansfield, O., whose testimony as a seceded Mason gave a great impetus to the work in that State. Brethren Fowler, of Iowa, and Greene, Smith, Cox and Corning of this State, have also called. These brief visits have cheered us who labor in the Cynosure office, as an expression of sympathy and co-operation.

— The friends at Birmingham, Iowa, have purchased their type and presses and will soon issue their new reform paper, which will represent the Anti-masonic temperance and national reform issues in that Congressional district. Rev. Geo. Warrington of the United Presbyterian church and Dr. J. N. Norris will contribute ably with pen and wise counsel to the success of the enterprise. We pray for the day when such papers shall be established in every county in the land.

—Among the recent ventures in journalism we have forborne to speak heretofore of the Christian Nation of New York, a weekly of beautiful proportions and able management lately begun by John W. Pritchard of the Reformed Presbyterian church, Brooklyn, and once connected with the Christian Statesman of Philadelphia as managing editor, Associated with Mr. Pritchard is Rev. S. J. Crowe, late pastor of the same church, whose ill-health compelled him to rest entirely from pulpit labors. Mr. Joseph Bowes, of Washington City, whom we once engaged as Washington correspondent of the Cynosure, conducts with marked ability a Sabbath-school department. Thus ably manned the Christian Nation is a worthy addition to the ranks of journalism and deserves a noble support.

—W. M. Collins, the Methodist preacher and Knight Templar Mason, who was reported drowned at Cleveland last fall, has been got out of his hiding place. He has returned to Galesburg and will soon be on trial before his presiding elder for his scandalous life. Had the church authorities begun to discipline him years ago when he joined the lodge, it might have saved him fro m a course of iniquity that may be his eternal undoing.

REV. ROBERT LOGGAN, who was appointed lecturer and agent for Kansas by the State Christian Association at Lawrence, October 1, will enter upon his work on the 13th inst. The N. C. A. will co-operate with the State executive committee and use their best endeavors to push on the work. Let the friends rally to the support of Bro. Loggan and write him at Clifton, Washington county, Kansas. Shall we hear from the executive committee very soon on this matter? J. P. STODDARD.

HASTEN SLOWLY.

A few of the oldest and truest friends of the anti-secrecy reform have ordered the discontinuance of the Cynosure; some giving reasons and others not. Nearly all express regret at parting with an old and honored visitor and their firm adherence to the anti-lodge principles it has so long and ably championed. I wish to say to these friends that we are grateful for their patronage, co-operation and prayers in the past, and ask a suspension of adverse action until we all have time to "right up" after the political cyclone of 1884 has swept by. It would be strange indeed if any one who entered the arena with heart and soul had passed the ordeal without mistake in word or deed, and we do not claim divine inspiration for the pages of the Cynosure. But could you have known the labors of its editors as I have, and listened to their pleading for the guidance of the Holy Spirit, insincerity or personal ambition would have been the last inference you would have drawn from their course.

Brethren, you need the Cynosure. Be sure you don't make a mistake in this matter. Read Proverbs 19:2 and ask yourself the question, "Is there any other way in which I can obtain so thorough a 'knowledge' of the character and workings of the secret orders as by reading the Christian Cynosure? Allow it, in your judgment, to furnish some illustrations of human frailties, and help on the good work by urging your neighbors to read it. The advocates of other reforms are wisely and vigorously pushing the circulation of their literature, and especially their organs, and every friend of the anti-lodge movement should sieze upon this opportune time when the waters are troubled to secure a list of readers and double the subscription roll before the harvest time is past. Will you make the effort? J. P. STODDARD.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW YORK STATE AGENT.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Dec. 2, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—As you see, I am working eastward. I spent parts of Friday and Saturday in Batavia, and was welcomed as usual by friends. Found the Morgan monument as beautiful as ever, bearing its silent but lasting testimony against a society which hesitates not to take human life whenever it seems necessary to the advancement of its devilish schemes.

Taking an afternoon train, an hour's ride brought me to the Flower City of the East. Here, again, we meet old and new friends. Some since our last call have crossed the river to "the land from whose bourne no traveler returns." Found Gen. Riley, although nearly 90 years of age, as actively engaged in reform work as ever. He was the only man in his church who voted the temperance ticket, and, of course, receives his share of the billingsgate heaped upon those who voted for conscience" sake. Bro. Owen, pastor of the Free Methodist church, requested me to speak in his church Sabbath evening. I did so. The attendance was good and the Lord was with us.

Take the train at 2:40 p. m. for Canandaigua, where I hope to push the work forward.

NOTICE.

All parties indebted to the New York State Association Opposed to Secret Societies, or to myself, will confer a great favor by forwarding the amounts due before the 1st of January. We desire at that time to cancel all accounts and begin anew.

As we expect to hold meetings, county conventions, etc., this winter, and will necessarily incur considerable expense, we ask all who can assist us to forward their pledges or subscriptions to State President, F. W. Capwell, Dale, Wyoming county, N. Y., and they will be duly accredited. All amounts over one dollar should be sent by registered letter. W. B. STODDARD, Ag't.

THE WISCONSIN WORK.

I find I have traveled 245 miles, given eleven lectures or sermons and have scattered several books and many pages of tracts by gift or sale in 465 different families. I have also conversed with a goodly number of persons on the subject of secret societies.

I had a fall the Saturday before election; was tipped out of a buggy and injured my right shoulder. I have not got over it yet, but it is getting better. I cannot put on my overcoat yet alone.

I arrived here at Milton Junction this evening, Dec. 3rd, have got the refusal of the Grange Hall for our State meeting, and the friends here say they think there will be no doubt of their entertaining the delegates free; one mile from the Junction is Milton, where is a college of Seventh day Baptists with over one hundred students. I think we could reach many of them. These villages are within one mile of each other. I. BANCROFT.

BIRMINGHAM, IOWA, SETS A GOOD EXAMPLE.

A GRAND SUGGESTION FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE IOWA CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Birmingham has a Christian Association that is alive and active. Secret societies and their relation to the church, the state and the family are considered at every meeting, and other reform questions are not slighted. These meetings are held once a month, and are often occasions of deep interest to the community. The endeavor is made to develop latent talent by suitable literary exercises, to keep fresh in the memory of all persons the arguments against all forms of secrecy, and to create a feeling of friendship among all those who favor this reform work. For two years the meetings have been held regularly except in June and July.

We have not done all that might have been accomplished. A greater energy in getting new members, a readiness to do what is asked by the committee on programme, and a more lenient over-looking the imperfections of those who try to do their part to give interest and value to the meetings, would improve us.

This continuous and persistent work has not been without good results in cheering the faint-hearted, in strengthening the weak and in gaining over the wavering. So many influences are brought to bear upon the young and thoughtless, and at the impressible age of life so many are in danger of being led astray that we can not too frequently or forcibly present the facts in regard to the follies, dangers and deceptions of Freemasonry and kindred societies.

It would be well if every community, where this matter has been sufficiently agitated, would sustain a local association. Not necessarily a weekly meeting nor even a monthly, but let the meetings be so arranged and advertised that all interested would be reasonably certain to attend and take an interest in the proceedings. Could not Washington, Morning Sun, Crawfordsville, Salem, and other communities where this burning question has been agitated, have good, live, energetic meetings?

A few essential conditions of success it may not be amiss to state. They are: three or four energetic individuals who will not be afraid to go forward and who will not shirk responsibility, a genuine interest in the work, a tolerant spirit toward those who differ on other matters and towards those who have not yet become warm and enthusiastic, and a faithful and judicious committee on programme.

Birmingham feels the need of sister associations in these other places to cheer and strengthen her. And if we could form associations in all the localities where the lecturer goes, even if half of them died, it would give a great impetus to this reform. And when we have something good in one place we could send it around to the other associations and let them enjoy it, too. Brethren, let us all work together in this and see if we cannot make greater inroads on this vast secret empire.

Now that we may bring this matter into practical shape, Birmingham offers to send one or two persons to any of these near places to organize and start an association. Let the brethren consult and fix upon a time and send us word long enough beforehand and get up a good meeting. And when one place is aided, let that look out to the field beyond. If the enemy organizes lodges, let us organize associations. If they draw in the unwary, let us educate and enlighten the uninitiated.

GEORGE WARRINGTON,
Pres. of Birmingham Christian Association.

EVENT EXTRAORDINARY.

On our recent Thanksgiving day there was a grand convocation at Charles L. Clark's, 353 Third street, Detroit, to celebrate the golden wedding of Prof. Geo. W. Clark and Louisa Elliot Clark. There were present of the family four sons, three daughters, two sons-in-law, and four grandchildren. Canada furnished her quota of friends and relatives. New York, Minnesota and Illinois were not backward in furnishing guests. Michigan brought up the rear with a full representation. The elder and youngest sons of the late lamented Lieut. Kislingbury of the Greely expedition were also present, the first in full uniform; and last, not least, was Capt. Geo. W. Clark, Jr., whose regiment captured old Jeff Davis.

The greetings and congratulations were with an overflow of gladness. A speech and narrative from Prof. Geo. W. Clark and others, with personal history, anecdotes, reminiscences, music and songs made the hours fly. Prof. Clark's early and wonderful experience as a pioneer temperance and anti-slavery reformer would fill a volume. Periods in Mrs. Clark's life are wondrous as romance, and would eclipse many a modern love tale or thrilling novel. "Her children rise up to bless her," and they never weary of listening to the strange adventures of their father.

Letters of congratulation came like leaves of autumn from near and far, among them one from William and Laura Goble, where the lovers were married in 1834.

There are many yet living who remember the amazing power of Geo. W. Clark's songs over those great conventions when for a third of a century he was the "national reform singer," and the almost uncontrollable enthusiasm he was wont to inspire by that power, and which he still retains to a wonderful degree.

Presents there were on this occasion, ranging from "golden love-apples," up through precious things to "golden eagles;" and, with an interesting letter from his old friend, Hon. Frederick Douglass, came a beautiful gold pen. And such luxuries at the table! After all these came the crowning event—the acting domine calls the bride and groom to the center of the crowd to enter the mystical union of the "golden wedding." The ceremony began with the usual ritual service left handed.

"Does any one know reason why these persons should now plight their fidelity to each other? If they do, let them never keep silence!"

"Is this your first or second golden wedding?"

"Yes, sir!"

By this time such a tidal wave of mirth swept over the assembly that all further questions were drowned in the shouts of merriment. The first we knew the work was done by the minister's stealing the first salutation from the lips of the happy bride. Mutual congratulations followed, when Mr. Clark, turning to his bride, said:

"Now fifty years have sped, dear wife,
Since we began our wedded life;
There are maxims old and maxims new,
Often pertinent and as often true,
And so with us, I need not prove
The "course of true love was not smooth!"
For when my sweet-heart first I spied,
Another "feller" before me vied;
What made it worse for poor me—though hard I tried—
The old folks all were on the other "fellers" side.
And when at last I won—why, then the other feller up and cried.
Alas! the tender youth—I had no heart to blame—
For had I failed, I believe my soul I should have done the same!
But now six hundred moons, my golden bride,
As we to-night sit side by side,
Have waxed and waned
Since we our joyous honeymoon attained;
And more than eighteen thousand days and nights
Since then have shed on us their shades and lights.
Mid all these years of toil and strife,
The ups and downs of married life,
We've borne the burdens, worn the thorns,
And now await the promised crowns.
Our family "jars"—as came and went the fleeting years—
Were sometimes filled with "tarts" so sharp as brought the briney tears;
But mostly they were filled with lucious fruits and fair,
Such as the rich and purple peach and yellow golden pear.
Our children all, both short and tall
(Although hut seven, instead of eleven— Wish 'twere more to make the number even)
But each and all still greet us here this side of heaven.
And may we all, so long and well preserved
To God accord the meed of praise deserved;
And may we each so heed His gracious call,
Who came to save us from the fatal fall,
That when our fleeting days on earth are past,
We all may find a safe retreat in heaven at last.
And now to these kind friends who greet us here,
And those who so kindly write from far and near
On this our golden wedding year,
We give our hearty golden cheer,
And pray that when the pleasant golden meetings
And joyous earthly golden greetings
On this our mundane sphere are over,
We all in heaven may meet, ne'er to sever;
And there each other know and greet,
And together range that golden street
And sing and praise the God of golden days
FOR EVER—AND—FOR EVER!"

Congratulations were renewed and the assistant clergyman came to the front with an appropriate address and loving words for all, closing with thanksgiving for the pleasant occasion and the blessings of the bountiful year, and intercession for their continuance. Very tender will be the remembrance of those glad hours for years to come. When all was over, the entire group of three generations repaired to Randall's art gallery for a photograph sitting of a group, never in all probability to meet again on earth. C. C. F.

SENTENCED MORMONS.

A dispatch from Prescott, Arizona Territory, Dec. 5, says: Judge Howard to-day sentenced the convicted polygamists. Ammon M. Tenny, Bishop P. J. Christofferson and C. I. Kemp are each to pay $500 and be imprisoned three and a half years in the United States House of Correction at Detroit, Mich. Much sympathy is expressed for Kemp. He leaves two wives and twelve children in destitute circumstances. He desired to plead guilty, but was prevented under pain of excommunication from the Mormon church. The sentences of Bishop Wm. J. Flake and Jas. F. Skonsen, who pleaded guilty, were each $500 fine and six months' imprisonment in Yuma penitentiary

THE HOME.

THE TWO ANCHORS.

It was a gallant sailor man
  Had just come home from sea,
And as I passed him in the town
  He sang, "Ahoy!" to me.
I stopped, and saw I knew the man—
  Had known him from a boy;
And so I answered, sailor-like,
  "Avast!" to his "Ahoy!"
I made a song for him one day—
  His ship was then in sight—
"The little anchor on the left,
  The great one on the right."

I gave his hand a hearty grip.
  "So you are back again?
They say you have been pirating
  Upon the Spanish main;
Or was it some rich Indiaman
  You robbed of all her pearls?
Of course you have been breaking hearts
  Of poor Kanaka girls!"
"Wherever I have been," he said,
  "I kept my ship in sight—
'The little anchor on the left,
  The great one on the right.'"

"I heard last night that you were in;
  I walked the wharves to-day,
But saw no ship that looked like yours,
  Where does the good ship lay?
I want to go on board of her."
  "And so you shall," said he;
"But there are many things to do
  When one comes home from sea.
You know the song you made for me?
  I sing it morn and night—
'The little anchor on the left,
  The great one on the right.'"

"But how's your wife and little one?"
  "Come home with me," he said.
"Go on, go on; I follow you."
  I followed where he led.
He had a pleasant little house;
  The door was open wide,
And at the door the dearest face—
  A dearer one inside!
He hugged his wife and child; he sung—
  His spirits were so light—
"The little anchor on the left,
  The great one on the right."

'Twas supper-time, and we sat down—
  The sailor's wife and child,
And he and I: he looked at them,
  And looked at me, and smiled.
"I think of this when I am tossed
  Upon the stormy foam,
And though a thousand leagues away,
  Am anchored here at home."
Then, giving each a kiss, he said,
  "I see in dreams at night
This little anchor on my left,
  This great one on my right!"

SUNDAY AT ELDER JONES'.

BY AN OLD FOGY.

I went over to Mason, last week, to see about selling my wheat, and Elder Jones, who is in the commission business, asked me to spend the Sabbath with him, and hear their new preacher. Maybe he remembered what the Bible says about entertaining strangers, and maybe he wanted to make sure of getting my wheat. But thinking it would be a great privilege to visit at the house of so good a man, and that I could learn something about the best way of making the Sabbath pleasant and profitable at home, I very gladly accepted the invitation.

Now, Mason is a railroad town on the Great Western, and trains are running through it all the time, day and night, and Sundays, too. It is what we call down here a very smart town, and, of course, it must have a smart preacher. I will, perhaps, tell you about the sermons I heard some other time. But now I want to write about the Sabbath at Elder Jones'.

We sat talking pretty late Saturday night, for the elder seemed to want to tell me a great deal about the crops in Europe; how much better they are than usual, and to prove that it was wiser to sell wheat at the present low figures than to hold it; that the price was more likely to go down than to go up. Seeing that I looked a little sleepy, he said, "We don't go to bed very early Saturday nights, for Sunday is a day of rest, and we breakfast late. You needn't get up, deacon, until you hear the rising bell. We have it rung half an hour before breakfast.

I went to bed and slept well. When I woke up in the morning, the sun was more than an hour high. Thinks I, that rising bell must have rung. So I got up, dressed myself, and went down stairs. But the house was as still as the grave. There was no smoke coming out of the kitchen chimney. I didn't want to go back to bed, so I went out and took a long walk. I was busy reading the inscriptions in the graveyard when I heard the town clock strike eight. I thought, surely I shall be late for breakfast, so I hurried back. As I went into the yard I saw the hired man come out, rubbing his eyes, to feed the horses. I sat on the steps half an hour, and then heard the rising bell and knew, by the sounds in the kitchen, that somebody was getting breakfast. At half-past nine the breakfast bell rang and the elder and his wife came. A blessing was asked and we began to eat. The young folks came in one by one, until nearly ten o'clock. Breakfast over, there was a great hurry and bustle about getting ready for church. We started as the last bell was ringing, and got in just as they were singing the first hymn. The elder said that he never could get his women folks to church in time, but that a good many were later than they were, and that was some consolation. I couldn't see why, but said nothing.

After church, the elder said, "Let us go around by the post-office. The Chicago mail gets in at 11:20." Well, we found that nearly all the congregation knew about the Chicago mail. They formed a procession from the church to the post-office and the clerks who had been distributing the letters while we were listening to Dr. X's sermon, had a lively time for half an hour giving out letters. The elder had a lock-box, so he did not have to wait. He got half a dozen letters and several papers, one a Sunday morning daily from Chicago. We went home. He handed me some of the papers while he just glanced over his letters, as he said, "There might be something very important you know." The letters having been "glanced over" pretty carefully, the elder took up the papers, and read them and commented on their contents till dinner-time.

The dinner was not such a lunch of cold meat, pie and cheese as we used to get between the meetings when I was a boy, but consisted of roast beef, broiled chickens, vegetables of four or five kinds, a hot pudding, a variety of pastry and hot coffee. Mrs. Jones remarked that her husband was so hurried week days he could not enjoy his dinner and so she tried to have a good one on Sunday, when he had plenty of time to eat it. She went on to discuss the theme of unfailing interest to housekeepers, "help." She had tried all sorts, and had come back to the Irish Catholics as the best on the whole. Protestant girls wanted to go to church just when the family went, and just when the dinner ought to be attended to. But the Catholics would run over and hear a morning mass, while the family were at breakfast, and then come home and get the dinner. And she wound up with the general remark that it was not best for mistresses and servants to belong to the same church. It made the servants too forward and familiar. "I don't object," she said, "to priests making pastoral visits in the kitchen, but it would be embarrassing to have Dr. X do so, or to have to invite my help into the parlor to see him."

Dinner over at last,—and it lasted a full hour,—we went into the parlor. Soon the door-bell rang, and Elder Jenkins was shown in. He was introduced to me, and remarked that he didn't believe in Sunday visiting, but dropped in sometimes to talk over church matters with his brother elders. The church matters that they talked over were not spiritual, but financial. They did not ask each other, What can we do to make the prayer-meeting more interesting, to get more people to come to church, to secure a revival of religion, but how can we raise Dr. X's salary, and pay our organist and soprano, and other expenses of a first-class church without putting our hands deeper into our own pockets. The ability of A, B, and C to pay more pew rent was discussed. "What do you know about that new business that A is engaged in? Is it going to pay?" said Elder Jenkins, at length.

"I don't know," was the reply. "He has been to me several times to get me to invest in it, and I hesitate to do so. I don't feel quite sure about it. How does it strike you?"

On this tangent they went off from the church and its affairs, and spent an hour in canvassing the propriety of taking stock in Mr. A's factory. With pencil and paper they made elaborate calculations, and finally, near tea time, Elder Jenkins arose and said, "I must go now, but I am glad that we have talked this matter over. I begin to think that it may be best for us to help brother A. I will see you early to-morrow morning," and turning to me, he added, "You see, deacon, if we help one of our members to succeed in business, we enable him to pay a larger pew rent, and so we help the church.

After tea as the bell rang for evening meeting, the elder said, "I don't go out much Sunday evenings. Dr. X don't care about having us old folks at the second service, as he gets up his discourse expressly for the young. But as I want you to see how he draws them, I will go with you, and finish reading my newspapers when I come back." So we went to church, heard a solo from a woman who gets ten dollars a Sunday for singing in the choir, heard a sermon on "The Transit of Venus." The young folks brought company with them from church, and I heard the piano jingling in the parlor long after I went to bed. Somehow I did not enjoy this Sunday at Elder Jones', and don't think that I learned much from him as to the best way of sanctifying and enjoying the Sabbath. —Interior.

CHRISTIANITY AND ECONOMIC LAWS.

Overcrowded dwellings, it is said, like all other unfavorable conditions of life among the very poor, are the result of the laws of economical science; and with these the church can no more interfere than she can with the law of gravitation. A wealthy philanthropist may here and there divert his spare thousands to build fancy cottages instead of greenhouses, and let them at nominal rents. But that is not business, it is his fad. It will no harm to get information provided you don't attempt to act upon it. It is all ultimately a question of business—of the "cash nexus" if you will. If it paid to provide better dwellings, they would be provided according to the law of demand and supply. If it does not pay, you must leave it alone, lest haply you be found to fight against the "cash nexus."

And my reply is, that the very raison d' etre and genius of Christianity is, by the implanting in men of a new motive and spirit, to fight such economic and social laws as act against the highest interests of society. It was not by "obeying laws of political economy" that Christianity worked its great social reforms; it was by an heroic enthusiasm for brotherhood in Christ that blindly defied and overcame the ordinary laws of economics. People talk about these laws as if they were an inexorable destiny. The laws simply tell us what will happen if we don't prevent it. There is a tendency towards degradation in a society left to itself, whose religion is in brief the "cash nexus" in this world, and heaven or hell in the next. The very raison d' etre of Christianity is to fight this tendency by implanting divine impulses in us towards real brotherhood in this world.—James Maurice Wilson, Head Master of Clifton College.

LOOK OVER IT.

It is said that John Wesley was once walking with a brother, who related to him his troubles, saying he did not know what he should do. They were at that moment passing a stone fence to a meadow, over which a cow was looking. "Do you know," asked Wesley, "why the cow looks over that wall?" "No," replied the one in trouble. "I will tell you," said Wesley, "because she cannot look through it; and that is what you must do with your troubles: look over and above them."

Depend upon it, in the midst of all the science about the world and its ways, and all the ignorance of God and his greatness, the man or woman who can say, "Thy will be done," with the true heart of giving up, is nearer the secret of things than the geologist and theologist.—George McDonald.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

LIVES OF CELEBRATED MEN.

THE MARTYR ADALBERT IN PRUSSIA.

Adalbert was born of a noble family in Prague, in the year 956. He was educated in Madgeburg, and thence returned to his native land. In the year 983 he was elected bishop of his native city. Much heathen barbarism then prevailed amongst his countrymen; and Adalbert, who could not tolerate a heathen life, as united to an outward confession of Christ, had on this account to endure many a hard conflict. He did not lack glowing zeal and steadfastness; but perhaps he did sometimes fail in discretion and that unwearying patience, which indeed must have been exposed to hard trials amongst these wild tribes, who would submit to no yoke.

He, therefore, more than once excommunicated this flock, who would not follow him as their shepherd, nor give up their lawless ways. He wished to take refuge in a monastic life, and visited the venerable Nilus in Italy—a man who shone as a light in the darkness, whose life and labors we will look at more closely by-and-by. But he was again constrained to return to his wild flock, to be driven from it a second time.

When he took leave of his people for the third time,—impelled by a fervent zeal to labor for the propagation of Christianity,—he repaired to Hungary, where the seed of faith had recently begun to germinate.

He was very gladly received by the king Geisa, who, influenced by his wife, suffered himself to be baptized; but Adalbert could get little attention to his exhortations from either of them. Meantime, it may have been the impression of his words and conduct which produced so great an effect on the heart of their son, the boy Stephen, who afterwards accomplished so much towards the foundation of the Christian church in Hungary.

His impatience, however, soon drove him away from Hungary. He resolved to go where no missionary had yet penetrated—to the heathens in Prussia. Duke Boleslad I., of Poland, to whom he applied, gave him a ship, and thirty soldiers for an escort.

So he proceeded to Dantzig, then the frontier town of Prussia, towards Poland. Here he commenced his labors and succeeded in baptizing many. Then he left that neighborhood in order to proceed to the opposite shore. Having landed there, he sent back the ship and the men. He wished to commit himself wholly to the protection of his God,—as a messenger of peace, not to come under the guardianship of human might—and also to avoid anything which might excite suspicion amongst the heathen.

He only retained with him the priest Benedict, and his pupil Guadentius. They landed at the Frische Haff, and proceeded in a small skiff to an island formed by the Pregel at its mouth. But the inhabitants came with cudgels to drive them away, and one of them gave Adalbert such a violent blow with the rudder, as to knock the Psalter from which he was singing out of his hand, and to throw him on the ground. When he recovered himself, his first words were, "Lord, I thank thee, that thou hast counted me worthy to suffer at least one blow for my crucified Saviour." On Saturday, they crossed to the opposite bank of the Pregel, to the coast of Samland. The owner of the land, whom they found there, led them to his village, and a great crowd of people collected around them. When Adalbert was asked who he was, and with what object he came, after telling them who he was, and whence he came, he declared to them in gentle tone: "For the sake of your salvation I am come hither, that ye may abandon your deaf and dumb idols, and acknowledge your Creator, beside whom there is no God, that, believing in His name, ye may receive everlasting life, and be made partakers, in an imperishable existence, of heavenly joy." The heathens gnashed their teeth with fury as they heard these words, and striking their staves on the ground, threatened him with their clubs He might esteem it a great thing, they told him, that he had reached so far unhurt, and that only by a speedy departure he could save his life. They saw that all in that kingdom had one law and one way of life; and that as subject to another and an unknown law, if they did not depart that night, they would be beheaded the next day. They were placed in a ship, were compelled immediately to push off from the coast, and remained five days in a village to which they came. When they awoke on the last day, Guadentius related to his spiritual father a dream which he had in the night. "I saw," he said, "in the midst of the altar, a golden chalice half full of wine. No one watched beside it. As I was about to drink of the wine, the minister of the altar forbade me, saying, that he could not permit me nor any other man to do so, for the wine was to be kept for the spiritual refreshment of the bishop on the morrow."

"My son," said Adalbert, who believed that he saw in this a token of the martyr's crown destined for him, "God bless this vision; yet we may not trust to a dream which may delude us." At daybreak they set forth on their journey, and they went joyfully through thick forests singing and calling on the Lord Christ. Song shortened the way. Towards midday they came to a place cleared for fields. Here Guadentius consecrated the elements and Adalbert partook of the holy supper; then they sat down on the turf, and refreshed themselves with some of the provisions which they had brought with them. After Adalbert had concluded the meal by repeating a verse from the Bible, and chanting a psalm, he arose, and when he had gone a little way he sat down again. Weary with walking, he and his companions fell into a deep sleep; but they were awakened in a terrible way. It was the raging of a wild band of heathen that aroused them. They were all thrown into chains. Adalbert continued in unruffled peace of soul, and said to his companions: "My brethren, be not troubled; ye know that we suffer this for the name of the Lord, whose might is above all might, whose beauty surpasses all beauty, whose grace is unspeakable. What is there more beautiful than to yield up sweet life for our sweetest Jesus?" Thereupon a priest stepped forth from the furious crowd, and with all his force cast his spear into the breast of the man of God, then all the rest let loose their fury on him. Dying, he lifted up his hands to heaven, and prayed to the Lord for his own and his persecutors' salvation: this happened on the 23d of April, in the year 995.—Neander: Light in Dark Places.

BIBLE READINGS FOR THE YOUNG.

THE VEIL OF THE TEMPLE. Read Matt. 27: 35–54.

Behold, the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom; and the earth did quake: and the rocks rent. Matt. 27: 5.

1. Where was the veil of the temple? Exod. 26: 31–33; 2 Chron. 3: 14.

2. How many of the evangelists record the rending of this veil? Mark 15: 38; Luke 23: 45.

3. Who alone ever entered within this veil? Heb. 9: 7, 8.

4. Why was this veil rent when Jesus died? Heb. 6: 19, 20; Eph. 13, 14.

Who are now permitted to enter into the holy place? Heb. 4: 16; 10: 19, 20.

HUMBLE GREATNESS.

Two years ago a colored girl from Detroit graduated fron the State University at Ann Arbor, Mich. Her mother was a washerwoman. They lived together in one room. The mother bent over her tubs and irons. The daughter helped her when she could, and together they supported themselves. In spite of her poverty and toil, this girl was one of the best scholars in her class. She has now gone to Africa as a missionary, and her mother with her. God bless them both!

There are, no doubt, a good many interesting things to be seen in Detroit and Ann Arbor. But as the Lord looked down on those two cities, is it likely that he saw anywhere a more precious sight or a higher ideal of life, than was shown in that quiet, secluded home, where these two women loved and prayed? It was in order to go and preach Christ's Gospel to the heathen that this poor girl struggled through her education. It was in order that she might go that her mother did her humble, faithful work.

Their ideal was as the Star in the East which the wise men followed; it had to do with Jesus Christ, the Saviour of the world. But the suds, and the heat, and the big bundles of clothes! These were common-place enough. When for themselves only, they are simple drudgery. When they are steps toward the accomplishment of some great end, or when done for Christ's sake, even such things as these become glorified. You remember those beautiful words of George Herbert:

"A servant with this clause
Makes drudgery divine;
Who sweeps a room as for thy laws,
Makes that and the action fine."

A SHARP VOICE.

There is no power of love so hard to get and keep as a kind voice. A kind hand is deaf and dumb. It may be rough in flesh and blood, yet do the work of a soft heart and do it with a soft touch. But there is no one thing that love so much needs as a sweet voice to tell what it means and feels; and it is hard to get and keep it in the right tone. One must start in youth, and be on the watch night and day, at work and play, to get and keep a voice that shall speak at all times the thoughts of a kind heart. But this is the time when a sharp voice is apt to be got. You often hear boys and girls say words at play with a sharp, quick tone, as if it were the snap of a whip. When one of them gets vexed, you will hear a voice that sounds as if it were made up of a snarl, a whine and a bark. It is often in mirth that one gets a voice or a tone that is sharp, and sticks to him through life, and stirs up ill-will and grief, and falls like a drop of gall on the sweet joys of home. I would say to all boys and girls: "Use your guest voice at home. Watch it day by day, as a pearl of great price, for it will be worth more to you in days to come than the best pearl hid in the sea. A kind voice is a joy like a lark's song to a hearth and home. It is to the heart what light is to the eye. It is a light that sings as well as shines. Train it to sweet tones now, and it will keep in tone through life."—Elihu Burritt.

TEMPERANCE.

LIQUOR-DEALERS AND PROHIBITIONISTS.

The following article is taken from the Champion, the Chicago liquor-dealers' organ:

WARNING TO THE LIQUOR TRADE.

Although the complete returns of the election are not yet at hand, this much we know, that in every State of the Union the Prohibition candidates have received thousands of votes, and with one or two exceptions—due allowance being made—the vote for the cranky St. John throws into the shade the self-styled workingmen's or people's candidate, the irrepressible Benjamin F. Butler. It reaches a total of over 200,000 votes. Similar strength of the prohibition element was developed by the votes cast for Congressional, State, executive and legislative candidates. What of it? What is that to the liquor trade? It is exactly what the firing of the first cannon of Fort Sumpter, on the 12th of April, 1861, was to the U. S. government—a solemn, forcible, defiant declaration of war by the simultaneous opening of hostilities. There is no backing out now for either side. The Prohibitionists have shown at this election that they are now enlisted for the war to its bitter end. They propose to crush the liquor traffic out of existence, by fair means or foul, and they have good reason for being sanguine of success. Look at their sweeping victories in Kansas and Iowa; at their progress in Missouri, Georgia, Tennessee, Kentucky and Illinois, where local option and high license prevail, and at their steadily growing strength in a dozen other States, such as Indiana, Ohio, Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota, and others. Are you blind? Are you deaf? Are you the fools of whom the Latin poet said: Quen Deus perdere volait, prius dementat. Whom God wants to punish he first makes mad (crazy)? It would seem so, indeed.

The Prohibition flood is now sweeping over every State in the Union, threatening some of them, ruining others. It undermines the very foundations of every distillery and brewery, and shakes like an earthquake every liquor warehouse and every saloon in the land. Do you not hear and feel the Prohibition waves beating against the very walls of your stores, your business places, your family dwellings?

When the Ohio or the Missouri rivers rise and overflow their banks and cover the lands on both sides with debris and ruins, do the riparian inhabitants stand stupidly by to witness the falling down of their houses, barns, and stables, the carrying off by the flood of their hens, cattle and grain? Do they smile, stick their hands in their breeches pockets, and say to one another: "Well, if my neighbors can stand it, I can?"

Yet this is exactly the condition of the liquor-dealers and saloon-keepers of almost every State of the Union to-day—this is exactly how they act, how they speak. They can't help seeing the wave of Prohibition rolling onto them, they can't help foreseeing the destruction and ruin which will follow, and yet they quietly look on with their hands in their pockets, a cigar or pipe between their lips, placidly saying, "Well, all we can do won't help us any. What's the use throwing our money away for protective associations? If others can stand it, I can." And the like.

Once more we call your attention to your danger: There was mirth, rejoicing, carousing and revelry in the dining-hall of the Babylonian monarch Belshazzar, where the mysterious hand traced on the wall, in fiery characters, the ominous words: "Mene, Tekel, Upharsin." Neither the King nor the guests took notice of the warning, and before moving they were slaughtered, the royal palaces plundered and given a prey to the flames, and the Babylonian or Assyrian empire obliterated from the face of the earth.

Saloon-keepers, liquor-dealers, brewers, distillers, beware! The muster of the Prohibition hosts at the late election is your "Mene, Tekel, Upharsin." Rouse yourselves from your lethargy; form your protective phalanxes, fight for your rights, for your business, for your homes; but remember that while a child can easily break a single twig or small stick, the most powerful man can not break a bunch of rods tied together. In union there is strength. United we stand, divided we fall!

MALT LIQUORS.

It is very probable that were the claim to be made that the people of the United States consume a greater quantity of liquors per capita than those of any other nation, it would be sustained by official facts and figures. The report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the year closed June 30 places the consumption of malt liquors for that time at 17,573,723 barrels, an increase over the figures of the preceding year of 1,147,673 barrels. Reducing the reported consumption of last year to gallons, gives 702,948,920 gallons as the quantity of malt liquors consumed in the United States during the twelve months. On the basis of the canvass of population for 1880, the consumption of malt liquors per capita was over fourteen gallons, and if it be assumed that the entire quantity was drunk by the male population alone the figures would give over twenty-eight gallons for the consumption of every man and male child in the United States. If the calculation be based on an estimate of 55,000,000 as the present population of the United States it will be found that our consumption of malt liquors for the period stated was equal to a fraction over twelve gallons for every man, woman and child in the country.

— Washington is the paradise of smokers. A drummer says: "There are more cigars and tobacco used there than in any other place of its size in this country." This is explained by the fact that a great many government employes have nothing to do but sit around, smoke and talk politics.

— Drinking habits increase so much in Germany that in many places there is a liquor shop to every thirty-one inhabitants. In Hamburg the proportion reaches one to seventy-one, and in Berlin one to every 116 persons.

— At the closing meeting of the seventeenth annual session of the Erie county, Pa., teachers' institute Nov. 28th, 500 teachers indorsed a resolution to make it compulsory upon the teachers of Pennsylvania to make the subject of temperance and total abstinence from the use of alcoholic drinks a part of the common-school education.

BAVARIAN BEER.—Bavarian winter beer contains about 4 per cent and the summer beer about 4-5 per cent of alcohol, porter contains from 6 to 7 per cent and ale 6 to 9 per cent of alcohol.—Scientific American.

The late Senator Anthony's wine cellar in Providence was found to contain more than 6,000 bottles of wine. Mr. Anthony was supposed to be worth one or two hundred thousand dollars, but his fortune turned out to be over $600,000. He had great quantities of wine given to him, and he seems to have saved it all up.

Matthew Brady, who has just been fined £100 for illicit distillation in Dublin, has solved a great historic doubt by giving into the hands of the police the following recipe for the manufacture of Irish poteen: Materials for ten gallons, ten ounces of prunes or French plums, one and a quarter ounces of green tea, two ounces of orris root, one-quarter ounce of angelica root, one-half ounce of sulphuric-acid, one-quarter ounce of cream tartar, tincture of vanilla, essence of almond.

Three recent events strongly point to a great advance upon the temperance question.

First among these may be recorded the enactment by the Massachusetts Legislature of a law that no man habitually using intoxicating liquors to excess shall be appointed to, or retained in office, and that no liquor-dealer shall hold any office affected by the civil service law.

The second is the publication in the Boston Herald of the article entitled "Temperance by Moral Coercion," in which persons employing men are inferentially recommended to enforce the rule "No drinking men need apply."

THE CHURCHES.

—An interesting revival work is in progress at Wheaton under the lead of Mr. Bell, of Ravenswood, Ill., a lay evangelist. Following the death of Mrs. C. A. Blanchard the College church was moved to more faithfulness toward the unconverted. Union meetings among the various churches followed, and Mr. Bell began work last week. About a score of conversions, chiefly among the boys, encouraged those who were engaged in the work last week.

—Rev. W. H. Tibbals, of the Methodist church, Paw Paw, Michigan, resigned, owing to political differences with the congregation, he having advocated prohibition during the campaign.

—An attack was made on Rev. Dr. Ball's house at Buffalo Sunday night. The missiles used were lumps of coal, windows being wrecked and the inmates frightened. Dr. Ball originated the war on Cleveland for his immoralities through the religious press.

—The evangelist Moody was in Chicago Monday on his way to Milwaukee, where he holds a three-days' meeting. From there he will go to Minneapolis and St. Paul, and then to Cincinnati for like work. Sunday evening, in connection with Maj. Whittle, he concluded a three-days' meeting at Toledo. Mr. Moody states positively that he will not hold any meetings in Chicago this winter. He is in excellent health.

—Major Whittle, the evangelist, accompanied by the singers, McGranahan and wife, have been holding meetings in Grand Rapids, Mich. Three of the churches, Methodist Episcopal, Presbyterian and Baptist, have united in this effort.

—White's Grand theatre, holding 3,500 people, was much too small to contain the crowds that came to hear the first regular sermon by Dwight L. Moody in the late Christian convention in Detroit. Mr. Moody was accompanied by Maj. Whittle and Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan, the latter as singers. To accommodate the overflow a meeting was held in the Central Presbyterian church, conducted by Maj. Whittle. The convention was not a revival, but a meeting to consider ways and means for saving the unchristian portion of the community. The program is systematically arranged, embracing a number of topics which are discussed at each of the four daily sessions. Mr. Moody speaks on every topic. His remarks on saving Detroit youth made a deep impression.

—Monday next, says the Inter Ocean, a veritable missionary family, now resident in Chicago, will surrender the youngest son to the trials and sacrifices of the foreign field. Upon that day Dr. Doremus Scudder, son of the Rev. Dr. Henry M. Scudder, of Plymouth church, accompanied by his sister, Miss Kate Scudder, will set out for his post at Niigata, Japan. He will there assume charge of the hospital maintained in that city by the American board. Young Dr. Scudder goes, as it were, to a life-work, and goes well prepared. Graduating at Yale in 1880, he took up the study of theology at Union Seminary in New York city. Upon the removal of his father from Brooklyn to Chicago, Dr. Scudder devoted himself to the study of medicine in this city, and in due time was assigned charge of the medical ward in Mercy Hospital. He is qualified now as a medical missionary to toil in the East, the land of his father's birth and the land of a brother's labors in the practice of medicine.

—The first General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church in the United States met at Baltimore Dec. 24, 1784. When Francis Asbury was ordained Bishop the church had 80 ministers and 15,000 members. The centennial conference, which met in Baltimore Tuesday, represents a church with 25,000 ministers and 3,800,000 communicants.

—There are now more than 260 Protestant congregations of various persuasions in Mexico, with about thirty thousand members. The Mexican converts are very liberal in their gifts to the churches, being in many instances willing to give away even the clothes from their backs.

—During the last decade of Protestantism in this country it has contributed for missions, home and foreign, $56,136,636. In the decade, beginning with 1810, the amount of contributions for these objects was $206,210. Every ten years show a large and steady increase. Last year the women of the United States gave $600,000 towards Christianizing the heathen. Of this large sum the Presbytcrian women gave nearly $200,000; the Baptist women, $150,000; northern Methodist women, $108,900; and the southern Methodist women $26,500, and other churches considerable sums. The Methodist Church-extension Board has received $2,500,000 in its twenty years' history, with which it has built 4,500 houses of worship, with 1,000,000 sittings, that are now worth $8,000,000.

—It is a remarkable fact that although for the last 125 years a ship has left England annually for the Moravian missions in the Arctic regions, not a single vessel or passenger has been lost by storm, iceberg or wreck.

—Instead of 150 pastors, in 1804, in the Protestant church in France, there are now more than eight hundred, and in some purely Catholic districts Protestant churches have sprung up of late years.

— Rev. J. W. Bain, former pastor of the United Presbyterian church of Chicago, and author of Freemasonry Self-condemned, is now pastor of the Alexandria Presbyterian church, Philadelphia.

—The Belgian priests are greatly irritated at the distribution of religious tracts among their people. The little messengers of truth are denounced from the pulpit, and one priest near Dinant went from house to house offering five cents for each one left among his people. It is not the least of their objections that a tract often leads to the purchase of a New Testament.

— Dr. Geo. F. Pentecost, whose testimony against Freemasonry as a seceder, was given several times in this city several years ago, is now pastor of the Tompkins Avenue church, Brooklyn. This church has arranged to throw open its entire house on Sunday evenings for the use of all who choose to come, the pew-holders relinquishing all personal claims to their seats. The exercises will consist of a Gospel service, with special service of song, and are designed to reach the non-church-going masses, and those who do not like to stand at a church door or ask for a seat.

—It is reported that Mr. Ira D. Sankey, Mr. Moody's associate, has decided to use a portion of the profits accruing from the sale of "Gospel Songs" in erecting and furnishing a public library building in Newcastle, Pa., Mr. Sankey's home. The profit from the sale of the books has been very large, but the evangelists have refused to apply a cent of it to private ends.

—Rev. Mr. Ross, who is evangelizing in the north of China, has succeeded, after much trouble, in discovering the Corean written character as well as the rudiments of their language. Six thousand copies of two of the gospels translated into the Corean language have been distributed in the country, and one Chinese New Testament, the gift of three Christians, has reached even the court.

—The Rev. S. G. McLaren, of the Scottish United Presbyterian church, writes from Japan that a committee of missionaries have had an interview with a member of the Japanese cabinet, in which they requested that the government recognize Christianity, not as a state religion, but simply as a religion. It was thought that such recognition would be of great advantage to Christianity. The Minister's attitude seemed favorable; but he complained that Protestants were so divided that it would be hard for the government to confer with them if it wished to. It is stated that, to obviate this confessed difficulty, a union of all Protestant denominations will be formed.

—Affairs in China, as related to mission work, seem to have reached a crisis. Rev. W. J. White, of the Presbyterian Board, probably voiced the general feeling for the past two months in saying, "It seems as if we had been living near a smoldering volcano." That volcano appears to have burst when the viceroy of Canton issued his proclamation calling upon the people to show their patriotism in defending the country against French enemies. Of course the mass of people are unable to discriminate between different classes of foreigners, and they took this proclamation as a general permission to get rid of them all. No less than seven Protestant chapels have been destroyed, while scores of Catholic homes and shops have been burned or torn down. Six Presbyterian missionaries were cast into prison, where, like Paul and Silas, they sang praises; which so impressed their fellow-prisoners that some were converted to Christ. The presence of three foreign gunboats and the prompt action of foreign consuls may have been instrumental in bringing the viceroy to his senses. At any rate he issued a second edict restraining the people from further violence. Most of the chapels have been reopened, and there is a very hopeful feeling among the missionaries that the worst is over.—Congregationalist.

—The real urgency of the case presented to the Christian world in Japan has seldom been more concisely and forcibly put than recently by the Rev. G. H. Pole, of the Church Missionary Society. After quoting the veteran American missionary at Canton, Dr. Hopper, as saying that in the face of China's vast need he could counsel that Japan should stand first, as a field more ready for the gospel, and as likely in the future to play an important part in the evangelistic work of the far East, he goes on to make the following points, as incontrovertible: 1. This country is ripe for the gospel in a sense that no other in the world is, at this moment. 2. It is manageable in size—its insulated position and its comparatively small population render its evangelization possible within reasonable limits. 3. The Japanese, and especially Christian Japanese, under the influence of the Spirit of God, are an active and energetic race, eminently qualified for missionary work in the neighboring lands. 4. The speedy winning of this land for Christ would have an electric-shock-like effect both upon Christendom and heathendom, and would give an incalculable impulse to missionary effort all over the world.

A reform that is perhaps as much needed in this land as any other now is in the matter of Sabbath observance. People have come to esteem this matter so lightly that if there is anything of unusual importance to be done, or a long journey to be taken, it is nearly sure to be begun on this day. We are sorry to observe that the Iowa exhibit for the New Orleans Expesition was started last Sabbath. It did not get out of the State, however, till it was brought to grief. The train bearing it came in collision with another, and dispatches say that the entire exhibit, which was very valuable, and collected at much labor and expense, was almost wholly ruined. What was not destroyed was damaged almost beyond repair. Now if this exhibit had been shipped on any other day the probability is it would have gone through without accident, and would have done credit to the great State that furnished it. When will our people learn wisdom?—Blanchard (Iowa) Record.

—A dispatch from Dawsonville, Ga., Nov. 30, says: "A remarkable case of faith-cure has been developed here, the beneficiary being Mrs. Elizabeth Beavers, a grandmother in Israel, who had passed her 70th year. At the age of 32 she had a violent attack of typhoid fever, which left her afflicted with chronic tympanitis, and ever since she has been an almost bed-ridden invalid with dyspepsia. In October her suffering became so great that her death was looked for. During many years of her afflictions she had prayed for grace to enable her to bear them, but on the 22d day of October she went to a secret place of prayer and prayed fervently, not for grace to bear them, but for Jesus Christ to heal her bodily ailments. She says that on the evening of the same day she was sitting in her room, when all of a sudden something said to her as distinctly as if spoken in words, though she heard no sound, 'If you'll believe, you'll be healed.' Instantly she responded, 'I believe.' A strange, singular, calm-like feeling came over her, and she felt at ease and painless, and has been so ever since. She sat for some time enjoying the peaceful feeling, and then asked her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Caroline Doss, if she believed Jesus had the same power to heal diseases now that he had when on the earth. Mrs. Doss replied, 'Yes, on the same condition of faith.' Mrs. Beavers then told her of the inaudible voice that she had heard, what it had said, her reply and also of her entire freedom from pain. Ever since that day of her faith-cure she has been hearty, doing things incident to home life in the country, without an ache or pain, except such feelings of tiresomeness as any well person of her age would feel from exercise and labor."

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

—The House Committee on Appropriations reported a bill for the support of the navy. The amount appropriated was $6,734,717.

—At 2:20 o'clock Saturday afternoon the American flag was unfurled from a staff on the top of the Washington monument as the signal of the completion of the work, which was commenced in 1848. The total weight of the monument is 160,000,000 pounds. The total cost was $1,130,000. The height of the monument is 550 feet; the flag was about 600.

—Representative Buckner, Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, introduced in the House a bill to suspend the coinage of the silver dollar.

—Robinson, of New York, has prepared a resolution providing for a return to the simplicity of the inaugural ceremonies as practiced by Jefferson. It prohibits the erection of triumphal arches and a display of bayonets in Washington on inauguration day, and provides that the chief justice shall call upon the president-elect and accompany him either on foot or in a plain carriage drawn by not more than two horses, and without decorations or livery, to the Capitol, where he shall take the oath and address such citizens as may be there to hear him.

—The recommendation of Secretary McCulloch that the tax on tobacco should be removed revives new courage to producers of that article that this session of Congress will witness the abolition of the tax.

THE COUNTRY.

—The Presidential electors met at the State capitals Wednesday and cast their ballots for the respective leaders in the late campaign. In North Carolina the ballots used were of silk, grown in the State, and were United States flags in minature.

—The Georgia Legislature passed a resolution, Wednesday, empowering the Clerk of the House to employ women to perform clerical work. In the debate the opening of every avenue of labor to women was fully indorsed.

—Science Hall, the elegant stone structure devoted to the scientific department of Wis. State University, took fire Dec. 1, from the forge-room, and, not being attended to by the fire company in time, it was completely destroyed. The building was an imposing structure of three stories, above the basement, 111x156 feet in dimensions, and was the most completely equipped scientific structure in the West. The building and fixtures alone cost over $100,000, and the laboratory, chemical, physical, zoological, geological appliances, etc., will swell the sum to over $200,000.

—Incredible as it may seem to farmers and people of the East, the farmers of Central and Southern Dakota were busily engaged in plowing last week. The weather resembles Indian Summer.

—Thefts from stores at Charleston, W. Va., led to an investigation and the discovery that a band of boys, fully organized, and having grips, passwords, etc., were the robbers. Their headquarters were in an unfrequented section, and their meetings were always held at night.

—Hill, Fontaine & Co., of Memphis, Tenn., estimate the cotton crop of this year at 5,683,000 bales. The frost of Oct. 24 resulted in a loss of fully 100,000 bales.

—Stephen Young, a well-to-do farmer of Stafford Corner, N. H., had occasion to drill through a rock for a well. A basket of Atlas powder cartridges was used in boxing the well. He placed the battery and cartridges in the kitchen where they were handled by some visitors. Instantly a loud explosion followed. The house was demolished, the first floor being blown into the cellar, and the back part of the house was blown out. At the time eight persons were in the house and all were terribly injured. The house took fire and with its contents was burned to the ground. Everybody was afraid to go near the house during the fire, fearing a further explosion of cartridges. The explosion was heard for a distance of fifteen miles. Money and notes of considerable value were lost. Of the eight persons injured, one soon died. Of the seven survivors it is doubtful if any will recover except one.

—Fire in the Hall Spring Railway stables at Baltimore Thursday morning destroyed ten cars and caused the burning to death of fifty-one horses.

—The case of Nellie Thompson, recently fatally burned at Omaha, Neb., has developed into a shocking murder. The dead woman knew of some burglaries, and the "gang" conspired to quiet her tongue. John Thompson and his mistress got her intoxicated, poured kerosene over her clothing, and then set her on fire. The latter pair are under arrest.

—Near Knoxville, Ohio, Thursday, Wm. Reynolds' wagon, containing his three children, left its fastenings on a hillside and dashed down the incline, coming in collision with a great rock. Two of the children were killed, but the third escaped with slight injuries.

—Measles is epidemic in Cleveland, O. Thousands of cases at present exist, and deaths from the disease are numerous.

—Between 200 and 300 persons have died from the plague in Wise county, Virginia. The disease is now on the decrease.

—Francis Murphy has inaugurated another temperance revival in Pittsburgh, Pa., which promises to excel that of eight years ago. Twenty-five hundred signatures to the pledge have been obtained.

—Dewey & Son, of Kalamazoo, Mich., purchased Wednesday the timber growth (white pine) of 3,100 acres in Jackson county, Tennessee. The estimate is that it contains 20,000,000 feet.

—If the Spanish treaty is ratified, it is claimed that Key West will be a ruined town. Seven thousand persons employed in the cigar factories will be rendered idle, while the loss to property will be $2,000,000.

—The family of Andrew Mann, a cattle-dealer at Fort Spring, W. Va., were poisoned Tuesday night, the drug having been placed in milk. Two persons have died, four are beyond recovery, three are seriously ill, and four others are out of danger. This is the third attempt, it is alleged, to poison Mr. Mann's family.

—For the purpose of filling the depleted city treasury a committee of the Des Moines City Council has been instructed to consider the question of issuing licenses to saloons. A prominent attorney gives it as his opinion that licenses can not be granted under the existing prohibition law.

FOREIGN.

—The franchise bill was read a third time in the House of Lords Friday afternoon, and was subsequently passed by that body. The Queen has signed the bill.

—Gladstone presented the redistribution bill to the Commons Monday last. England will have six additional and Scotland twelve additional members. Wales and Ireland are unchanged. The large cities of England have eighty-one additional members.

—Some excitement is caused in London by rumors to the effect that English merchant vessels are fitting out and loading with cargoes, intending to run the French blockade of the Chinese ports. French papers express great indignation at the scheme, and say that the humiliation that was visited on England for her course in breaking the American blockade during the rebellion may be repeated. It is said that the English Government will not do anything in the way of preventing the consummation of such a scheme unless there is a formal declaration of war between the two belligerents. Earl Granville says that English mediation between China and France is not only still possible, but that England was perfectly willing to use friendly offices as mediator the moment both France and China should ask English advice concerning the Chinese dispute.

—The London Standard's Hong Kong dispatch says the Chinese appear to have abandoned all hopes of mediation, and are determined upon a vigorous policy. Twelve men-of-war have been ordered to engage the French fleet and break the Formosa blockade. There are twenty-four German officers on the fleet and one commands a ship under the Chinese Admiral.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

IN THE COILS;

—OR—

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Wat hman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

Thick paper, beautifully bound, 352 pages, sent to any address for $1.50. AGENTS WANTED

HOLDEN WITH CORDS,

OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by E. E. FLAGG, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. In cloth, $1; per doz., $9. Paper, 50c; per doz., $4.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness. The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

"Our Anti-secret society friends are certainly entitled to great credit for their persistence in their efforts to expose and root out secretism. The object of the writer of this story is to present in its true light the crafty, unscrupulous and exceedingly hurtful influence of Masonry, the parent of all the orders."—Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

—Gingerbread may be varied and wonderfully improved by the addition of a cupful of grated cocoanut.

—Headaches almost always yield to the simultaneous application of hot water to the feet and the back of the neck.

—Begin the fight against insects on house and conservatory plants in the fall. Some green flies are sure to be lurking about the plants at this season.

—Sick rooms where there is diphtheria, measles, scarlet fever, etc., should be impregnated with the odor of equal parts of turpentine and carbolic acid.

—Cold boiled turnips make a nice garnish for roast beef or lamb. Cut them in thin slices, and brown in butter, pouring hot gravy over them. Place them on the platter around the meat.

—The best way to free a wardrobe infested with moths is to burn sulphur in it. Camphor will prevent their coming. The cheapest and surest method is to keep furs in a drawer, and as you fold them pepper them well with common white pepper.

—A good way to arrange fruit in a dish for an ornamental piece is to set a glass tumbler in the center of the dish, around and over it put a thick layer of moss; then not nearly so much fruit will be required, and it can be arranged very handsomely.

—Many housekeepers dread the labor of lifting heavy furniture during housecleaning. The carpet must be removed, cleaned and replaced, and a heavy bookcase, or case of drawers, is not easily raised from the floor, and many a lame back is the result. All this hard work is entirely unnecessary. Procure a stout wooden lever four or five feet long, or longer, and about double the size of a common crowbar, and placing the stout end under the heavy furniture, raise gradually a fourth or half an inch, for withdrawing or replacing the carpet. Articles weighing several hundred pounds, heavy stoves, etc., may be thus raised with the exertion of a little strength, or with one hand.

USEFUL HEALTH HINTS.

—Keep the back, especially between the shoulder-blades, well covered; also the chest well protected.

—Never go to bed with cold, damp feet; always toast them before a fire for ten or fifteen minutes before going to bed.

—When hoarse, speak as little as possible until you are recovered, else the voice may be permanently lost, or difficulties of the throat may be produced.

—Merely warm the back by the fire, and never continue keeping the back exposed to the heat after it has become comfortably warm. To do otherwise is debilitating.

—When going from a warm atmosphere to a cooler one, keep the mouth closed, so that the air may be warmed by its passage through the nose before it reaches the lungs.

—Never stand still in cold weather especially after having taken a slight degree of exercise; and always avoid standing upon the ice or snow, or where the person is exposed to a cold wind.—Ev. Messenger.

A CAT AND A DOLL SPREADING DIPHTHERIA.

A good deal of prominence was given last fall, says the Sanitary Engineer, in the papers, to the occurrence of diphtheria in a family in Amsterdam, N. Y. Two children died at intervals of several months, and a third was taken sick. The Board of Health appointed a committee to investigate, which examined the house and its surroundings, and obtained a statement from the attending physician. They have recently made their report, finding that there were no bad conditions existing in or about the house sufficient to explain the appearance of the disease, and they concluded that it came from a cat which was fondled by the child who first fell ill. This cat was found at the time to have a swollen throat, and to be suffering from a discharge from the mouth and nostrils. It died a few days afterward. Three days after the death of the cat the child fell sick with malignant diphtheria, and died in about a week. During its illness it played with a doll, which was afterwards given to a younger child, as it was supposed to have been properly fumigated with sulphur fumes. This child, shortly after being allowed to play with the doll, also fell ill of diphtheria and died. The third child also played with the doll, and fell ill, but recovered. The Board of Health, therefore, traces the reappearance of the disease in the family, after the death of the first child, to a doll.—Medical Record.

"SCRIP and STAFF."

BY H. M. HUGUNIN.

This new and attractive volume is now ready. It is composed of thirty-nine chapters on nearly as many topics. Neatly bound in cloth with gilt stamp. Price 60 cents.

The Chicago Evening Journal of May 3, says:

The author of this little volume, for many years a working editor of the EVENING JOURNAL, has here presented us with a variety of topics of a religious character. Among the number we note "The Evils of the Sunday Newspaper," "The Divine Sanction of Church Organizations," "The Good Work and Government of Sunday-Schools," "The Bible in our Public Schools," "Fallacies of the 'Evolution Theory,'" "Chronology—The Age of the World," and "Labor and Laborers." Mr. Hugunin writes as an independent thinker, untrammeled by denominational alignments. His style, however, is marked by the vigor of earnestness and sincerity, and with these characteristics, and with a close adherence to Bible Christianity, his book becomes a suggestive aid to evangelical workers. In discussing the topics above named, as in others, he deals consistently with questions of public interest and great importance in the reform of individual and social evils.

OBITUARY.

ROBERT PALEY died at his residence in Lanark, Ill., Nov. 8, 1884, in the 63d year of his age, after a long and very painful illness of a year and a half. Mr. Paley, with his estimable wife, took a warm interest in the reform represented by the Cynosure. He was born at Richmond, Yorkshire, England, in 1822, and was twice married before coming to this country. His first wife dying in 1849, two years later he married Ann Freek who, with one son, survives him. He came from England in 1852 and settled in northwestern Illinois. He removed to Morrison in 1863, and in August, 1879, to Lanark, says the local paper of that place, where in April, 1883, he was elected Mayor of the city. He was privileged for a short time only to discharge the duties of that office. Soon after his election the disease which resulted in his death began to trouble him. An operation was performed in the month of May, but only temporary relief obtained. The disease continued to gain strength until his sufferings were ended in death.

His religious life was steady and satisfactory in its development. His conversion to God took place before his second marriage, and he at once connected himself with the Wesleyan Methodist church; Queen street, Scarborough. Here under a faithful Gospel ministry and under the guidance of his class-leader, John Purnell, he made considerable progress in the knowledge of divine truth. He became subsequently a Sunday school teacher.

On coming to America he and his wife gave their letters to the M. E. church and remained in that communion until, for sufficient reasons, they joined the Congregational church at Morrison, and afterward at Lanark.

Mr. Paley was an uncompromising enemy of the use of both tobacco and strong drinks, and ever used his influence for the suppression of these evils. Some weeks ago, when he thought it possible that he might die suddenly, he said to his wife, "If I die suddenly, give my love to all the people of Lanark; and tell them that I have ever sought their welfare, and that I desire to die at peace with all men. If I have offended or wronged any, I ask their forgiveness. I want them all to prepare to meet their God."

On the announcement of his death the citizens of Lanark met to take measures to show their respect for their esteemed townsman; and at a subsequent meeting resolutions of respect were adopted, and it was arranged that the members of the city council should act as pall-bearers, and a request was made that all places of business should be closed during the funeral services.

Died, in Polo, Ill., at the residence of his youngest daughter, Mrs. C. A. Clinton, at a quarter to twelve o'clock Sunday evening, Nov. 23d, 1884, DEACON TIMOTHY PERKINS, aged 89 years, 10 months and 3 days.

—Australian advices state that the British Commodore on the Australian station, in accordance with instructions of the British Government given some time ago, had proceeded to New Guinea, and on the 6th of Novomber, with great ceremony, proclaimed a British protectorate over part of that Island. The protectorate covers the southern coast eastward 141 St. meridian, east longitude, and includes the islands adjacent to Southern New Guinea. Settlement in the protectorate will not be permitted at present.

Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lectrner will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Masonry. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen. 75 cents.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4 00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2 00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic, with signs of recognition, passwords, etc. and the ritual of the Machinists and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

BUSINESS.

Ira Green called at the N. C. A. office this week and left fifteen dollars for ten yearly subscriptions to the Cynosure.

Rev. H. Avery sends two subscriptions for six months, one of them new and writes for names and dates of those of his club whose subscription expires soon.

W. B. Stoddard sent in forty-one subscribers as the result of one week's work. Twenty-four of them trial subscribers. But every week brings a good list from him. Read again his "Hints to canvassers" in Cynosure of Nov. 27.

J. B. Stowell of Oregon writes: "I have taken the Cynosure from the first. I think it the best paper printed upon this earth!" Can you not send us a club of twenty subscribers from your neighborhood?

Mrs. Mary E. R. Jones sends fifteen dollars, and writes wishing the cause prosperity and success.

P. M. Carnahan: "I will endeavor to secure as many subscribers as possible."

"The Cynosure grows better and better," writes Mrs. A. E. Jenks and backs up her belief with ten subscriptions for one year each.

Mr. James Kennedy, though confined to his house, keeps the "good cause slowly but steadily moving forward;" and he sends as a new subscriber, "one of the best men in this place" who first took the Cynosure on trial. If you cannot get your neighbors for a year, most of them will take it on trial.

A. Wakeman sends two subscriptions for one year each.

Wm. D. Clay sends one subscription and "hopes to send some new names before long."

G. H. Davison is in a new place and wants sample Cynosures in order to commence the reform movement in that place.

"Please do not discontinue the Cynosure just now," writes Martin Myers, "I will try to get up a club soon."

W. C. Bissell went four miles to see if he could get a subscriber and the result is a new yearly reader for reform principles.

PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT.

Again the auspicious time for securing Cynosure subscribers has come. The election excitement is passing away. Intelligent Republicans are seeing that the bitter feeling held and ostracism practiced toward papers which advocated the election of St. John, is really the Ku-Klux spirit of the South which they themselves have so hated. Hence, now is the time to push forward the reform in your neighborhood. Will you do it? So far as possible will you not see that every reader within five miles of your home is invited to subscribe for the Cynosure? The Home, Temperance, Religious and Secular News, Editorials, Farm Notes, Market Reports, Correspondence, Editorial Notes of Current Events. Children's Department, Literary Reviews, and last but not least the New Story, "Between Two Opinions" adapt it to almost every class of readers, while many who seek the purity of the churchand improvement of politics consider it an aid that they must have.

SUBSCRIBE FOR EIGHT WEEKS.

One agent sent in 24 trial subscribers last week and this week 26 more; others have sent in less, but to one and all we are thankful and are glad to be co-workers with you. Some of these trial subscribers are becoming yearly ones. If your neighbors will not take the Cynosure for a year are there not many of them to whom you can send it on trial—eight weeks for twenty-five cents?

SPEECH OF HON. S. C. POMEROY

"The Mission of the American Nation to Mankind," 18 pp., including John Quincy Adams on the Duty of American Voters, 4 pp. Twenty-five copies of this pamphlet of 22 pages will be sent during the campaign for fifty cents. 25 copies postpaid, 50 cents.

HOLIDAY GIFTS.

Send to this office for any book mentioned in this paper or desired by yourself or friends.

Have you made your pastor a New Year gift of the Cynosure. Fifty-two gifts, or weekly visits for one dollar and a half?

A NEW PAMPHLET.

A WOMAN'S VICTORY;

OR

THE QUERY OF THE LODGEVILLE CHURCH

BY JENNIE L. HARDIE.

This simple and touching story which was lately published in the Cynosure is now ready for orders in a beautiful pamphlet. It is worth reading by every Anti-mason —and especially BY HIS WIFE. Get it and take it home to cheer the heart of your companion who may desire to do something for Christ against great evils, but is discouraged from making any public effort. PRICE, FIFTEEN CENTS. Ten for a dollar.

A Wonderful Woman,

A Wonderful Life,

AND

A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Elizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

Her book is neither fiction nor founded on fiction, but is an interesting narration of facts of a most thrilling character, as every one will find and testify who will get and read her book, now on sale at the Cynosure office, 221 W. Madison St, Chicago, Ill. Price, cloth, $1,75; half Russia, $2.25.

ONLY 12 CTS. for 3 FRENCH DOLLS
WITH AN ELEGANT WARDROBE OF 32 PIECES.

Consisting of Reception Dresses, Evening Dresses, Street Costumes, Morning Dresses, Cloaks, Hats and Bonnets, Hand Satchels, Sun Umbrellas, Music Portfolios, Overcoats, Sailor Suits, Military Suits and Drums, Street Jackets and Dress Suits, Watering Place Suits, Traveling Costumes, etc. These dresses and suits in this elegant wardrobe represent Nine Different Colors, and they are lovely beyond description, several of them being from designs by Worth, of Paris. There is one little Boy and two Girl dolls in each set, with pretty faces and life-like beautiful features, and their wardrobe being so extensive that it takes hours to dress and undress them in their different suits. Every child, and in fact every mother that has seen them go into ecstasies over them. Children will get more real enjoyment out of a set of these French Dolls than out of articles that cost $10. Every person that buys them sends immediately for more. A lady writes us that her little boy and girl played for five hours with a set of these French Dolls, and they felt very bad indeed to think that they must stop and eat their supper, and if mothers only knew how much amusement there is in these dolls they would not only give 12 cents but 50 cents for them rather than not have them. Sample set, consisting of three dolls with their wardrobe of 32 pieces by mail, postpaid, for 12 cents; two sets, 6 dolls, 64 pieces, for 20 cts. Thirteen sets for $1. If you send for one or two sets we will send our Secret Method and Full Directions how you can make more than One Hundred Dollars a month out of these dolls. This is an opportunity too valuable for you to lose. Address FRANK O. WEHOSKEY, PROVIDENCE, R. I.

THE CYNOSURE

has issued no special prospectus for the year 1885, but measures for increasing the value of the paper to every reader have not been neglected. The deservedly popular biographical sketches with portraits of eminent reformers, living and dead, will be continued. Our readers may expect during 1885 in this department sketches of HON. HENRY WILSON, late Vice President, DAVID BERNARD, JOHN QUINCY ADAMS, NATHANIEL COLVER, ADAM CROOKS, Chief Justice JOHN MARSHALL, CHARLES SUMNER, GERRIT SMITH, SAMUEL PLUMB, and the old CANANDAIGUA JAIL in which William Morgan was confined and from which he was kidnapped. The privilege is reserved of changing this list according to necessity or convenience, but the Cynosure readers may expect one illustrated paper a month during the year.

We have already a grand list of contributors and correspondents, but it will be better than ever in 1885. Information will be especially sought from correspondents in other lands of the workings of lodgery around the world, and a plan is under way to have reports from every part of the country, from thousands of corre spondents, of the work of the lodge and the victories of the truth over this great evil.

Another interesting feature, which was proposed several years ago, is a classification and brief account of the history and objects of each of the numerous secret lodges. Information for such a series of articles has been collected, so that we feel better able to begin so serious a task than when it was at first proposed. If the limits of the paper will allow it will be undertaken.

The latest and best REFORM STORY has been running some weeks and will continue through a considerable part of the year. It is worth twice and thrice the cost of the paper.

These are some of the attractions offered to the readers of the Cynosure during the year 1885. They are worth presenting to the consideration of thousands of new readers by the old friends of the paper. Let no such opportunity be neglected!

President Arthur has peculiar trials with his Bureau of Labor Statistics. Soon after it was established by Congress he listened to the siren voice of the lodge and selected for its head a coarse, unmannered fellow, Jarrett, whose principal recommendation seemed to be that he was chief of the iron workers' secret unions. But his offensive character soon displayed itself, and his commission was withheld. Mr. Arthur has now selected another man and the lodges are buzzing thick as angry wasps around Washington, to defeat the appointment—a very sure indication that it is a fit one to be made.

The Catholic Council concluded its work last week in Baltimore. Among the most important of its decisions is the plan for the establishment of a great university that shall rival Yale and Harvard, and possibly the the great institutions of England at Oxford and Cambridge. A Miss Caldwell of New York and her sister have each promptly placed $300,000 each at the disposal of the hierarchy for this institution. Ever since Erasmus we have been ready to believe that a high degree of culture and learning is inimical to the mysteries and superstitions of the church of Rome; and it is in a large degree true. But there are many highly educated Catholics who live and die such. "Knowledge is power," and a man's capacity for good or evil depends much on his education. Ingersoll would be nothing but for his eloquent speech, and Paine would never have been heard of but for the power of his intellect. The effect upon the nation and the world of a score of Capels upon our lecture platforms and in our legislatures, we cannot but contemplate with alarm.

The Claus Spreckels sugar establishment of San Francisco is one of the widest known of American monopolies; and, to judge from the assassin methods it uses against its enemies and criticisers, it is one of the most odious. But from the fact that it is a monopoly and has thereby great wealth it is able to procure machinery of the most economical kind. A vacuum pan for sugar making has just been manufactured for this company, which has the capacity of making from cane juice 1,000 barrels or over 100 tons of sugar every three hours. A little calculation shows that this single machine, running day and night except on the Sabbath, would easily supply a population of twelve million people. Beside the saving of fuel and labor this method of manufacturing sugar is so improved that a largely increased production is the result. Under old methods two or three hogsheads of sugar are obtained to one of molasses; with this machine the proportion is six or eight to one. In the supply of an article of such necessity and universal demand the power of wealthy corporations to serve the general good is a responsibility few stop to estimate; and though the mass of the people are often benefited in an indirect way, no thanks are due to the grasping and selfish monopolies, which, like the Spreckels company, have clutched the immense profits of their business instead of dividing it by reducing the price of their product.

Remarkable as the above statement may appear it yet is much less so than the triumphs of scientific engineering in transportation by steamer and railway. So near to perfection has modern machinery been brought, that by the burning of an ordinary business letter a ton of freight can be moved a mile. Cargo steamers are now constructed with a view to the most economical use of fuel. One of these vessels left England for China with a cargo of 2,800 tons. From Plymouth to Alexandria, a distance of 3,380 miles, the vessel was moved at the rate of ten miles an hour, burning on the way 282,240 pounds of coal. The consumption of coal was, therefore, only 83.5 pounds per mile, or per ton of cargo the 0.028 of a pound or about half an ounce per mile! Had it been told among the Munchausen stories that the heat of a neglected love letter would move a ton one mile as fast as a man can run, it would not have seemed out of place. Railway transportation cannot be expected to reach such a point of economy, but surprising results are obtained, and the estimated expense has been reduced to from two to five ounces of fuel for moving one ton a mile, according to variation of grades.

The Congo Conference which is expected to conclude its labors next week, was urged by the British and American representatives, last week, to insert a clause in the protocol requesting the powers to limit the importation of alcohol as much as possible. They also advocated with great earnestness the entire abolition af the slave trade. The commercial basis of the Congo territory is recognized in the following declaration by the delegates of the fifteen States, including America, which unites in the Conference: "In the regions forming the basin of the Congo and its tributaries, the limits of which the Conference will fix, there shall be perfectly free trade for all nations. Commodities shall be imported and exported free of duty, except such as shall be necessary in the interest of general trade. The Powers exercising sovereign rights in the Congo regions are forbidden to exercise monopolies or favors of any kind in regard to trade. Foreigners are to enjoy, without distinction, the same treatment and the same rights as citizens of a sovereign State. All the Powers exercising sovereign rights shall bind themselves to co-operate in the endeavor to suppress slavery and to promote the work of missions and all institutions which tend to the civilization of the natives."

The interest of Germany in the Congo conference and in one or two colonization schemes in Western Africa, in which the rights of England have been narrowly pressed, has an explanation. The Empire, or the States now comprising it, in 1816 contained but 25,000,000 inhabitants; to-day there are 45,000,000, and the question of existence within their narrow limits is pressing upon the government as it did upon their half-savage progenitors, when they overran their borders to fall before the armies of Cæsar. Illinois, Iowa, and Wisconsin include nearly as much territory, and if Vermont be added it is greater. Bismark has no liking to see his able-bodied men coming over to America and lost to Germany upon our all-absorbing prairies, but a few colonies will relieve the bursting pressure at home, while the government will be strengthened by possessions abroad. The plan is not a bad one, for vigorous colonies are apt to become independent when they are grown.

VOTES THROWN AWAY.

BY PRES. C. J. KEPHART.

Being one of the number who worked and voted for Hon. John P. St. John, and in consequence one of the number who in the opinion of some threw away their votes, I have felt quite an interest in learning what was the influence of the votes thus thrown away.

It is of course true that if the Prohibitionists of New York had voted for Blaine he would have been elected. No doubt he would have been elected had the Printers' Union of New York city not antagonized him because of the attitude of the Tribune toward that organization. No doubt he would have been elected had he not accepted the dinner furnished in part by the railroad monopolist, Jay Gould. No doubt he would have been elected had he, as a man, voted his professed sentiments in his own State in October. But Prohibitionists are responsible neither for the moral weakness of the Republican party nor of their candidate.

But what of the votes thrown away? As to whether these votes exerted no influence we may learn somewhat from the friends of the whisky traffic. From an article in the Union-Signal of Nov. 20, from the pen of Frances E. Willard, I make some extracts quoted by her from the Champion, the official organ of the "Liquor Dealers' and Manufacturers' State Protective Association of Illinois." The quotations are from an editorial, written by Paul Schuster, editor of the Champion. When our enemies take fright we should take courage.

Speaking of the fact that St. John and Daniel receives near 200,000 votes in the nation, the editor says: "What of it? What is that to the liquor trade? It is exactly what the firing of the first cannon of Fort Sumter on the 12th of April, 1861, was to the United States government, a solemn, forcible, defiant declaration of war by the simultaneous opening of hostilities. There is no backing out now for either side. The Prohibitionists have shown at this election that they now are enlisted for the war to its bitter end. They propose to crush the liquor traffic out of existence, by fair means or foul, and they have good reasons for being sanguine of success." (The italics are mine.) He is right. Whisky must go. Surely not, however, by foul means. YET IT MUST GO.

"The prohibition wave," says he, "is now sweeping over every State in the Union, threatening some, ruining[?] others. It undermines the foundation of every distillery and brewery, and shakes like an earthquake every liquor warehouse and saloon in the land." Of course it does. That is what it is intended for. God grant that it may not only shake, but bring to the earth every one of them. It cannot come too soon. But mark! he says, "threatening some States, ruining others." Why? Because it threatens the ruin of distilleries, breweries, etc. He does not dare to say, threatening the home, the church, public morals, civil government, commerce or agriculture. How well he knows the influence of rum, and how well knows its danger to-day!

Further. "Saloon keepers, liquor dealers, brewers, distillers, beware! The muster of the Prohibitionists at the late election is your 'Mene, Tekel, Uphasim.'" Prohibitionists, do you hear that? From the pen of one of the strongest friends of the whisky traffic in America. Should we not hold a jubilee?

"The election is over; the smoke of the battle is disappearing; and as the atmosphere clears up, we see standing forth in glaring prominence one representative and distinctive fact. * * * This fact is, there is a National Prohibition party organized in this country, which is bent upon carrying forward the temperance agitation to the bitter end. The party which voted for St. John for President 'means business.' * * * It has enlisted in its behalf several great religious organizations, with their Sunday-schools and their attendant swarm of fanatics, and while the more conservative of these organizations stand firm against the inroads of frenzied agitation and morbid zeal, these fanatical churches with their powerful discipline constitute a great political power. * * * The principle of prohibition has a distinctive, organized embodiment, and is now and henceforth a political entity, which cannot in the future be blinked or dodged." Thank the Lord. Is it not wonderful to hear such men speak so grandly of the purpose, resolution, power, prominence and importance of this great movement?

"There can be in this war no middle ground. Parties must adapt themselves to the situation, and stand or fall as they enlist in the cause of liberty or oppression. There may be a re-adjustment of political lines, but there can be no re-adjustment of the issue."

What do such expressions mean? They mean that the leaders of the rum curse of this country recognize that the cloud which once was only like a man's hand, is now spanning the entire heavens, and that the storm is sure to follow. What coloring does it give to the boomerang about St. John selling out? Of course men who know what the temperance movement means would pay money to help it forward. That is perfectly (in)consistent. Do not men see? Can they not understand? Of course if the liquor dealers of this nation could get men to believe that St. John sold out, it would both bury him and cripple the great movement of which he was—yes, and is, the honored head.

I had felt satisfied with having voted and worked for St. John, but never so glad as when I read the article from which the above quotations are made. Whisky men cared not a farthing whether Blaine or Cleveland was elected President. They knew that one or the other of these men would be chosen. They knew, too, that with either the Republican or Democratic party represented at the White House their interests were safe. Their anxiety was to divert all attention possible from St. John, and thus as far as possible have the Prohibition party hidden from view. They wanted all Prohibitionists to "train" with the Democrats or Republicans, they cared not which. But as Miss Willard says: "When the liquor dealers find the same principles that are embodied in resolutions of conferences and synods written into election returns, they take alarm, and not till then."

SHORT SERMON ON A FAMILIAR TEXT.

BY ELDER NATHAN CALLENDER.

Our text will be found in the Third book of Chronicles of the Kings of Lodgery, sixth chapter and sixty-sixth verse. You see its "number is 666." This is the number of his majesty the Prince of the Orders. The text, as near as I can quote it without the book in hand, reads: "There's nothing in there but what is all right." Please accept the text as from the canonical Scriptures of Lodgery, and don't criticise it at all.

As a brief introduction to our sublime subject, it should be remembered that the inspired author of the text has for many years been a prominent member of an orthodox church, and that he and his kind of saints never paid any such a compliment to the church—not they. Nay, the imperfections of the church are what makes these orders an imperative necessity. Now, it must be remembered also, that Dea. Rubbersoul knows all about the matter, he having belonged to both institutions and still belongs to the orders. He has seen nothing in the lodge but what was all right.

Do not forget, dear hearer, that Dea. Rubbersoul is a man of very great stretch of capacity; his charity can "cover a multitude of sins"—in the lodge—but will not extend anywhere else. The ingenious hearer asks, But what is in there? Lodge-trained people neither ask nor answer such questions. They have learned better long ago. But I do hereby aver on my sacred honor, there is nothing in there but what is all right, saith my text; and my text is all right, sure. Bro. Rubbersoul is a model man, you see, since his conscience was put on the stretcher of a hundred oaths and savage covenants. Stretching from West to East his charity is simply amazing, but it is all long and no wide. Why, my dear hearer, just think of a soul prostrate; yes, a soul prostrate at the altar with Christ's Bible before him, and that under the compass and square; with the Royal Arch oath in his mouth; or, suppose the Knight Templar's covenant of double damnation, with a human skull in his hand, holding the liquid of Pandemonium in it ready to press to his consecrated lips, and can you not trust the asseverations of men thus immensely qualified, by a hundred conscience-expanding swearings, to sit in judgment in your stead, and so report, infallibly, on the minor question of right and wrong? Would it not be an unpardonable sin, almost, to question the judgment of a man so hugely educated by being "in there" himself? Why, my hearers, it is simply an insult to insist on using your own moral sense in the question of right, with such a jurist as a "Knight of the Red Cross" to settle such questions for me. Were it a question of a horse deal, we should insist on seeing the horse before dealing, and so use our own discrimination. But here, in a question of mere rectitude, with such a judge on the seat as Dea. Rubbersoul, who would stop to even look at such a question? We close this sermon by quoting his solemn assurance, "There's nothing in that but what is all right." "So mote it be."

FREEDOM.

BY LORD ALFRED TENNYSON.

O thou so fair in summers gone,
While yet thy fresh and virgin soul
Informed the columned Parthenon,
The glittering Capitol;

So fair in southern sunshine bathed,
But scarce of such majestic mein
As here with forehead vapor-swathed
In meadows ever green;

For thou—when Athens reign'd and Rome,
Thy glorious eyes were dimm'd with pain
To mark in many a freeman's home
The slave, the scourge, the chain;

O follower of the Vision, still
In motion to the distant gleam,
Howe'er blind force and brainless will
May jar thy golden dream.

Who, like great Nature, would'st not mar
By changes all too fierce and fast
This order of our Human Star,
This heritage of the past;

O scorner of the party cry
That wanders from the public good.
Thou—when the nations rear on high
Their Idol smear'd with blood.

And when they rolled their idol down—
Of saner Worship sanely proud;
Thou loather of the lawless crown
As of the lawless crowd;

How long thine ever-growing mind
Hath still'd the blast and strewn the wave,
Though some of late would raise a wind
To sing thee to thy grave.

Men loud against all forms of power—
Unfurnished brows, tempestuous tongues,
Expecting all things in an hour—
Brass mouths and iron lungs!

SELF-WORSHIP AND PARTY SPIRIT.

Why associate the two? some reader may ask. In fact they are so closely connected that it is almost impossible to divorce them. Ego, and the party Ego affiliates with, are the grand objects of worship with thousands.

Small wonder that they grow narrow and bigoted and disagreeable, for a person thoroughly permeated by self-conceit and self-worship is about as contemptible an object as can be found. When this devotion is transferred to "our party" there is but little to choose. The failure is only more conspicuous. "What does the party say?" is oftener the query than "What is just and right?" And obedience to party dictation is counted more meritorious than obedience to the commands of God. Diseased self-consciousness is the root of many troubles. If one cannot excel all, he will often refuse to do at all.

Such people are continually meeting slights or affronts. One may believe himself sincerely interested in the reforms of the day, but if, in striving to advance its interests, another takes the precedence, lo! everything is forgotten but the sense of personal humiliation and injury.

It is an acknowledged fact that people grow noble or insignificant as their object of worship is exalted or mean. If we believe this, we should choose a higher object than self to lavish our cares upon. Party claims cannot bind the soul which recognizes the great principles of right—the supreme law in earth and heaven.

If we but substitute the Universal Benefactor for paltry self, as an object of worship, then the prayer, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done," will be more to us than all the claims of party, and the insignificant self will grow more and more into the likeness of the Divine object of worship.—Our Union.

ROME AND THE SCHOOLS.

The main object of the recent conference of Romish dignitaries in Baltimore, says the New York Witness, turns out, as was expected, to be a systematic demand all through the United States for separate schools wholly under the control of the Romish prelates and priests. In view of what that exclusive control has produced in Italy, Spain, Mexico, and South America, one would think that sheer shame would prevent such a demand here; but the church of Rome knows well that to have good voluntary slaves it must begin with them young by carefully excluding the true light from them and filling them with its own lurid light. There is, however, an apparent fairness in the demand the bishops (not the people) make for the application to their own schools of the education taxes which Roman Catholics pay. The resnlt of that change wonld be the building up of an empire within an empire—a separate and most dangerous elass, leagued together by mediæval ideas, and controlled by the ablest men that can be seleeted. That rapidly-growing politieal power, Mormonism, whose organization is in many respects like that of Romanism, may be more dangerous in proportion to its numbers, but not much. We know by the sad experienee with the slave power what a cursc it is to have a large percentage of the population leagned together to promote its own supposed interests regardless of all others.

Let us consider some of the difficulties in the way of separate schools for Roman Catholies supported by the share of the school-tax which they pay. If this division is estimated according to numbers, then there is every inducement to swell the numbers retnrned to the census-takers. And the amount the Roman Catholics would get out of the school-tax would be at least three or four times as much as they pay in. The difficnlty would be obviated by each payer of the sehool-tax electing whether to pay into the Roman Catholic or general fund, as is done in Canada. But if the Romanists were allowed to devote their taxes to their own schools, the Episcopal ehureh here and the Jews would probably demand the same privilege, and perhaps other denominations or elasses, such, for instance, as Mormons or infidels. What, then, would become of our public sehool system, which is the admiration of the world? One great difficulty in the way of entrusting the bishops with the education fund for their people is that the latter would get but little benefit from it. The hierarchy are not friendly to popular education, and they contrive, in Canada for instance, to apply the fund to a considerable extent to church purposes, rather than for the education of the masses.

WHAT SHALL THE CHURCHES DO?

The evil of seeret soeieties has given the ehurch a great deal of trouble, and is causing a great deal of trouble still. Some are ready, indeed, to reply to every statement of this kind, that we need only let them alone, and they will eease to trouble us. But people who speak thus are laboring nnder a delusion. It is true, secretists will not make open war against the chnreh, if they are permitted to have their way. They may even seem very friendly, and the innocent ones among them who are deceived, not deeeivers, may be friendly to pastors and congregations who let them have their way. But to let them alone in this sense is silently to give consent to the dissemination of principles that are antagonistic to the church, and to expose souls, unwarned, to the danger of being deceived and destroyed. And not only do they propagate their Deistic notions and lead souls astray, but they keep clamoring for admission into our congregations, that by reeeiving members of lodges as members of our congregations we may sanction their orders, and declare their prineiples not ineompatible with Christianity. Aecord to them all they want, and they will not externally trouble us. But on such terms the world and the flesh and the devil will all cease to trouble us, at least with outward persecutions. With such peace eome greater tronbles, from which we should earnestly pray to be delivered.

If secretists, recognizing that the broad religion which they advocate, on the basis of which all religionists can unite, is not Christianity, but pure Naturalism, and recognizing also that Christians have an exclnsive religion, which does not simply claim to be the equal of many others that are in the world, bnt that is the only religion which brings salvation to man and gives glory to the one true God. would deelare that they radically differ with us and that therefore there ean be no fellowship between us, the trouble would not be so great. But that they will not do. They are liberal enough to fellowship Jews and Turks and Christians, and even claim great credit for their liberality. In that they have an advantage over us in the eyes of the thoughtless and indifferent. Why should not we, such people will say, we who profess to live pre-eminently a religion of love, be as liberal as these same societyists, of whom we say that they have a false religion? If they can have fellowship with us, why not we with them? We must not repeat what some so-called liberalists are shocked at, but what we urge with all emphasis, namely, that the Christian religion is in its very nature exclusive. It eannot admit that there is any other religion that has saving truth or that ought to be recognized by men. It cannot permit itself to be co-ordinated with any other religious system, whether professedly derived from nature or revelation. There is no other name given under heaven whereby men can be saved, and with those who refuse to recognize this only name we must refnse to have any kind of religions fellowship. Those who are not for Christ are against him, and Christians do not wish to be regarded as having any agreement with those who are against their blessed Lord and Savior.

It is no doubt only the lamentable indifference with which the churehes are afflicted in these times that leads some Christian people to imagine that there is no impropriety and certainly no sin in meeting with Jews and Gentiles one day of the week and praying with them in some name that is not that of the Savior of the world, to some being that is snpposed capable of helping them, and then on another day of the week praying with Christians in the only prevailing name of Christ to the one only true God, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. From the Christian's point of view the thing is startling, and the wonder is how any would think of so treating their blessed Savior without trembling. And the wonder becomes greater when we read in the Scriptures, which all Christians profess to reverence, sneh solemn warnings against conduct so inconsistent. As an example let but this passage be earnestly considered: "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what eommunion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them and walk in them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people, Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." 2 Cor. 6: 14–18.

Let those whom men have tried to persuade that there is no harm in performing religious exercises with Jews and in the lodge, reflect upon such warnings given by the Holy Spirit, and ask their consciences whether they shall be able to justify it on the great day of account.

But there always are some who will not take the Word of God to heart. There are some who think that a person maybe a member of a lodge and engage in itsDeistic worship in fellowship with all religionists, and at the same time be a member of the Christian church. What is to be done in such cases? If these people will not hear the church, certainly to hear them and yield to their wholesale nnionism is not the right thing for the ehurch to do. They should be instructed until they are eonvinced of the abomination of secretism, or until they are unwilling any longer to receive instruction, but by no means to be admitted to the saerament of the altar or to a vote in the congregation, as long as they will not renounce their fellowship with the lodge. The admission of sueh persons to the rights of eommunicant members only strengthens them in their error. They do not see their sin, and admitting them to communion convinces them that the church does not see it either, otherwise it would not make itself partaker of the offence. We should deal gently with the erring, exercising all patience in teaehing and exhorting, but not yield the whole matter in controversy by admitting them first, with the delusive hope that teaching and exhorting will be more effectual afterwards—Prof Loy in the Lutheran Standard.

MORMONISM.

The disfranchisement of polygamist Mormons has not diminished the number of polygamous marriages in Utah. All Mormons of the orthodox church, whether polygamists in practiee or not, believe that polygamy is sanctioned and even required by Divine revelation. Therefore, the disfranchisement of those who are openly living in polygamous relations does not deprive the Mormon church of its power, for the ballots are cast and the offices are still held by men who are in sympathy with those who have suffered a loss of privileges. The report of the Mormon commission shows how difficult it is to contend sucecssfully against the Mormon organization in its home. The number of plural marriages has inereased in the present year, and polygamy is defiantly defended by Mormon teachers.

The conviction of Clawson and Evans was secured only by excluding all Mormons from the jury. The Commissioners recommend that several changes be made in the laws in addition to the very radical changes proposed in the Senate bill, and urge that many of the important Territorial and county offices be filled hereafter by appointment, without regard to the wishes of the Territorial Legislature. It is possible that the changes suggested would be of service in securing the conviction of polygamists, and inasmuch as it should be the government's first purpose to enforce the anti-polygamy laws, they should be promptly made by legislation.—[N. Y. Times.

MOHAMMEDANISM AND MORMONISM CONTRASTED.

Mormonism as compared with Mohammedanism is, to quote the language of Prof. J. Hadley, of Yale. with regard to a Greek writer, "a pinchbeck imitation of a putty original."

Mohammedanism began in a tribe, in obscurity, in Southern Arabia.

Mormonism began in an obscure township in Northern Pennsylvania.

Mohammedanism rose as a protest against idolatry.

Mormonism rose as a protest against common sense.

Mohammedanism triumphed through the sword.

Mormonism triumphed through the gullibility of mankind.

Mohammedanism appealed to sensuality and avrice.

Mormonism appealed to as deep a sensuality and as intense an avarice.

Mohammedanism is Ishmaelitic, its hand against every man.

Mormonism is Ishmaelitic, every man's hand against it.

Mohammedanism has cursed and blighted woman and the family, and destroyed millions of homes.

Mormonism is cursing and blighting the family, and destroying thousands of homes.

Mohammedanism, as a political organization, is compact, inclusive, intolerant.

Mormonism is a politieal conspiracy against republicanism, liberty and law.

Mohammedanism began in a dark age, and had 1,000 years of darkness in which to perpetnate its power, and yet it is now dying from the incoherency of its own corruption.

Mormonism began in the full blaze of an enlightened age, with 10,000 burning glasses turned full upon it, and must yield to the light of truth and education.

Mohammedanism as a political power will be neutralized by falling under Christian rule.

Mormonism as a political conspiracy must be put down by the strong arm of the politieal state.

The Mohammedan people are to be brought to Christ by the patient preaching and teaching of the Gospel.

The Mormon people, as distinguished from the political organization, are to be evangelized by the teaching and preaching of the same pnre and blessed Gospel.—Rev. H. H. Jessup, D. D.

Mormon Missionaries in India.—The latest, and we may add worst, new thing in Calcutta is the arrival of a party of Mormon missionaries in our midst! The leader is an elderly Englishman, who has spent many years in Utah. He is accompanied by two young men, one of whom is a son of the notorious Orson Pratt. This is not the first attempt made by the Mormons in Calcntta, but their success on previous occasions was very slight. They talk piously, use the current language of evangelieal Christians very glibly, profess a great coneern for their hearers' souls, and defend the iniquities of their system by blasphemous appeals to Jesus Christ and the patriarchs. Of all forms of pious iniquity ever taught, we have never heard of one so revolting to our instincts of truth and purity as this horrible impostnre of Mormonism.—Indian Witness.

Josiah W. Leeds, the Philadelphia Quaker whose pamphlet against the theatre has worthily attracted wide notice, is extending his efforts to the avenues that lead to the theatre as well. He has lately ealled the attention of the Board of Education of Philadelphia to the demoralization of the youth by means of bad literature and especially the illustrated sheets, in an able letter. The Methodist pastors have also memorialized the City Council on the same subject. An ordinanee is now on its passage prohibiting the Police Gazette and all other obscene and indecent publications. There needs to be a step farther taken in the suppression of the theatre bills posted everywhere on walls and in windows throughout our large eities. They are as indecent and should be made as unlawful as the news-dealers' stuff.

—The Harvard College faculty have not yet taken decisive action on the prohibition of foot-ball as we understood last week. The students have been summoned to show cause why such action should not be taken, and there is no doubt the recommendation of the committee on athletics will be adopted.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS:

OR

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR.

BY E. E. FLAGG, AUTHOR OF "HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

Stephen sat down once more to his interrupted study of certain complications which had arisen in one of the liquor cases he was just then prosecuting; for, without any seeking of such honor, he had come to be a prominent leader in the movement in Jacksonville, and was already engaged as one of the chief speakers at a meeting to be held a few days before election in the interests of the temperance party. He was young, ambitious, and high-principled. He felt that he was engaged in a glorious cause, and metaphorically he girded on his armor and longed for the trumpet to sound for battle. Mr. Basset did not quite suit him. He thought there was a great deal of talk in him to very little action. Still he never distrusted his sincerity. Had Stephen been more deeply conversant with the workings of that system of mingled religion and morality to which he had so recently joined himself, he would not have been surprised that the proprietor of the Phœnix House should step out—nobody knew where, nor for just how long—a few minutes before the raid on his establishment: from which, by the way, every vestige of the bar, which he was known to keep in cool disregard of the terms of his license, had vanished like a dream in the night.

Stephen was not only surprised, he was disgusted and wrathful, the more so that another prominent liquor-seller, whose conviction he had looked upon as a foregone conclusion, seemed now likely to escape through certain newly-discovered technicalities of the law. But he comforted himself with the old saying that it is an ill wind that blows no good. People would finally learn that prohibition pure and simple was far more easily enforced than the most ingenious license law whose ramifications were only so many loopholes through which the liquor-seller could slip and thus evade conviction; that behind the saloon power lay a masked enemy whose arrows were shot in secret, an argus-eyed foe that never slumbered, wily, treacherous, that with its deluding ignis fatui was leading himself and others a fool's dance over bogs and morasses foul with miasma and death—this was an idea that never came into his head. But though Stephen did not know why so many finely-laid schemes of the Prohibitionists "went agley," there is no reason for keeping the reader in like ignorance.

The proprietor of the Phœnix House was an Odd-fellow as well as a Mason, having joined both orders for several reasons. In the first place he wished to shed all the respectability possible on his traffic, and he knew very well that Odd-fellowship was considered more respectable than Masonry by a large class of moral and Christian people. He knew also that owing to the close and beautiful relationship existing between the two he would get more advantage from Masonry by being an Odd-fellow, and more advantage from Odd-fellowship by being a Mason. That he was right in this opinion the sequel will show. For quite in a neighborly way Mr. Basset accosted a Masonic acquaintance whom he happened to meet a few steps from Stephen Howland's office, and informed him—all as a mere piece of friendly gossip—"that Parker stood as good a chance to be hauled over the coals as any of the common saloonists, and he knew on good authority that his arrest was already planned." Whereupon his Masonic friend did exactly what Mr. Basset supposed and expected he would do—promptly "warned" the hotel keeper "of impending danger." Nor was this the first time that Mr. Basset had played with success the role of "Mr. Facing-both-ways." He had once turned a lawsuit in favor of a brother Odd-fellow by refusing to agree with the other jurymen on the verdict; he had contrived in a number of cases to have worthy employes turned off and their places supplied by men who could sport the three links on their shirt fronts; besides otherwise seeking the good of the order by a system of vigorous proselyting that would have done credit to any olden Pharisee or Mormon bishop.

"But a Christian man, and a Prohibitionist too—impossible!" exclaims the astonished reader. Know, dear sir, or dear madam, as the case may be, that though Mr. Basset was a temperance man he was an Odd-fellow first, and he held his Christianity on the same secondary principle. He believed in the church as a highly convenient institution, which, as it obligingly took in all that numerous class that the ark of Odd-fellow salvation passes by, could not well be dispensed with; but his relative valuation of the two may be inferred from the fact that while he was seldom or never absent from the brethren on lodge nights and always paid his dues with promptness, he was invariably short of funds when called upon to aid any department of church work, and never found time to attend the prayer meeting—a very common state of things among that portion of the secret fraternity who are trying, like Mr. Felix Basset, to play the part of the scriptural Issachar. But lest the reader should look upon him as a sinner above all other men, we will state what we know to be a veritable fact: that the keepers of two restaurants had been "warned" in like fashion only the day before, by a Mason who was also a Good Templar, and as such had been freely trusted by the small but determined body of Prohibitionists who had set out to suppress the illicit saloons, but found their plans betrayed without any clue to the traitor.

Martin Treworthy laughed sardonically when he heard them wonder who divulged their plan, asserting that the liquor power, by means of its sworn Masonic allies scattered up and down through the length and breadth of the temperance camp, could hear what was whispered in their secret chambers. He had said the same thing a good many times before without anybody's heeding or laying it to heart, and with the grand persistence of a true prophet-soul he was willing to keep on saying it to a generation that only mocked and despised his words.

But Jacksonville was, as Stephen expressed it, very thoroughly waked up, and in a way not to be mistaken by saloonist or Prohibitionist. How to allay the excitement or keep it at fever height was the respective problem discussed by each with very various answers. One important wing of the Prohibition side had a plan of their own concocted, of which we shall hear more anon. Meanwhile the idea was industriously circulated that General Putney was a temperance man, with a record as high in that respect as the average, and consequently temperance men could vote for him without sacrificing either their principles or their standing in the glorious old party that had abolished slavery and saved the Union. Men who had voted with that party from its birth hour, to whom its very name was a storehouse of glorious memories of grand deeds and noble leaders—gray-headed men who still loved it, with all its veniality and corruption, almost as a father his erring first-born, wavered, glad to catch at a straw. There was still another class who halted between two opinions—men who believed in prohibition and wanted to see it triumph, yet could not make up their minds to leave the party in power and thus resign all expectation of office or preferment at its hands: while another class, still more numerous, comprised the floating political driftwood; men ready to support either side according to circumstances; men with votes to sell and willing to sell them; and men with principles, but deterred from taking that unpopular article to the polls by the newspapers and stump orators with their black prophecies of woe and ruin sure to follow the defeat of the Republican party. And they also halted between two opinions.

SLAVERY IN AFRICA.

Mr. Stanley made some revelations as to the slave trade in Africa, at the jubilee meeting held in the Manchester Free Trade Hall which ought to be widely known and considered. The Portuguese proceed on the principle that the best thing possible for the negro is to catch him, sell him to severe taskmasters, and force him to work; the Mohammedans of Africa also adopt the same idea. The consequence is that slavery of the most abhorrent type is common. The following statement made by Mr. Stanley speaks for itself:

"A slave trade was a great blight which clung to Africa like an aggravated pest, destroying men faster than children could be born. He overtook a party of Arab marauders on the Congo, in November of last year, over 1,200 miles from the sea. They had utterly desolated a number of villages, massacred the adult males who had not at once fled, and carried off the women and children. He never saw such a sight before. In a small camp 300 fighting men kept in manacles and fetters, 2,300 naked women and children, their bodies encrusted with dirt, all emaciated and weary through much misery. It was like ravening human kennels—a sight to make angels weep, cruel enough to make strong men curse and cry 'vengeance on the murderers.' Here was the net result of the burning of 118 villages and the devastation of 43 districts to glut the avaricious soul of a man who had constituted himself chief of a district some 200 miles further up. Though over 75 years old, here he was prosecuting his murderous business, having shed so much human blood in three months, that, if collected into a tank, it might have sufficed to drown him and all his thirty wives and concubines. Those 2,300 slaves would have to be transported over 200 miles in canoes, and such as could not be fed would die, and perhaps 800—perhaps 900—of all the number would ever reach their destination. This was the latest story of the slave trade in Africa."—Golden Rule.

THE ST. JOHN SLANDERS.

A more complete refutation of the slanderous stories about ex-Gov. St. John's early married life we have not seen than the following letters, handed us for publication by Elder Henry Cogswell, of Lima, Ohio. If any of our readers have doubts remaining on this point, let them read carefully these letters from St. John's partner and his oldest son. It is enough to say, that the stories of large sums of money paid St. John by either of the old parties, is just as untrue as those refuted below:—

MY DEAR SIR:—Your favor of 20th inst. is received. In reply I wish to say that I have known Ex. Gov. St. John for about fifteen years, and during almost ten years past have sustained very close and intimate personal and business relations with him, and am now his law partner. There is not in the state of Kansas, nor in the United States, a purer, or more conscientious man in all his private and public relations than ex.-Gov. St. John. He is generous, courageous and true. The story that he abandoned his first wife and failed to provide for his children has only the small grain of truth for a foundation,—that in 1852, when a boy 19 years of age, he was married to a woman some years his senior, and lived with her only two or three months, when he went away for reasons entirely sufficient, and of such a character that an honorable man could not have done less. These reasons were not known to St. John before the marriage, but came to his knowledge very soon after. Some ten or eleven months after the marriage a child was born, Henry C. St. John. In 1859 his first wife began a suit for divorce, charging desertion, and a decree was awarded. The woman very soon married again, and raised a family of five or six children.

Gov. St. John took care of the boy, educated him, took him into his office, where he was given every opportunity to read and practice law, and from which he was admitted to practice. Young St. John, now himself a married man and the father of four children, now holds a responsible government position in the Land Department at Washington, D, C., at a good salary, which was secured for him by his father, the ex.-Gov. If your friend or any other person wants to know the truth in regard to the reasons St. John had for leaving his first wife, and whether he was justified in his course, let him inquire of the old and respectable citizens of Olney, Ill., where all of these things transpired, where all the parties, and circumstances were well known, and within sixty miles of where ex.-Gov. St. John afterwards married his present wife, a most excellent and estimable lady, and where they continued to live for many years, honored and respected citizens. There will not be wanting testimony to entirely vindicate St. John from the foul stories set afloat by the exigencies of a heated, political campaign.

It is not true that I have gone back on him. The ordeal through which he passed, and is now passing, has endeared him to me still more, and his noble stand in favor of humanity and the homes of the people is consistent with his life and history, and there can be not a shadow of doubt as to his perfect honesty and conscientiousness in advocating the cause of prohibition.

Knowing the man as I do, I could not say less; and the fact that I have been a resident of Kansas since territorial days, have always been a Republican, am now one of the Blaine and Logan electors for Kansas, elected by over 60,000 plurality, does not deter me from paying a just tribute to an honest, upright, Christian gentleman, such as I know ex.-Gov. St. John to be. The spirit exhibited by some Republicans toward St. John since the election is coarse, proscriptive and brutal, altogether unworthy the grand history and traditions of the Republican party, a spirit which has found expression in hanging and burning effigies of the governor at various places throughout the country, and which should be entirely condemned by every honest and fair-minded citizen. It hurts not St. John, but will, if not promptly and indignantly disowned and rebuked by the party, wound it unto death. It is the very essence of bulldozing and coercion; it serves notice upon every Republican within the party that any attempt by him towards independent political action subjects him to political and social ostracism, to ridicule, hate, contumely and disgrace, to personal indignity and public execration. When it comes to be understood that this is the penalty to be visited upon persons who have the temerity to step outside of party lines few will have the courage to lead a revolt. How can we as Republicans approve of the outrages that have been committed in the name of Republicanism, and go before the people to complain and denounce the political bulldozing of the South? I would as lief suffer physical punishment as mental duress or terror, the result being precisely the same, that of preventing free and independent poitical thought and action.

Please excuse the great length of this letter, and believe me most sincerely yours, I. O. PICKERING.

To the Editor of the Binghamton Republican:—

SIR:—In a recent issue of the Republican I find an editorial headed "A Queer Morality," in which the following statement is made:

"But they acknowledge that St. John deserted his young wife, to whom he had been married only three months, and never before or since contributed one cent toward her support, or the support of the child he was bound by every law written and unwritten, human and divine, to protect, maintain and educate."

Now, I am at present nearly thirty-two years of age, am the identical "child" above referred to; and while I have no personal knowledge of the troubles referred to between my father and mother, I desire to state that those who were familiar with the facts, have always exonerated him from blame in the matter. I desire further to state that I personally know your statement so far as it relates to me, to be wholly and infamously false.

Instead of my father neglecting me, he has educated me, provided necessary comforts, and I lived for years in his family where I was always treated kindly by him and his present wife, my step-mother; no distinction whatever was made in the treatment accorded me and my half brother and sister.

I studied law in father's office, and was admitted to practice while with him, and he has at all times been kind and affectionate to every member of his family, and no one who was in distress ever appealed to him in vain so long as he had a penny to divide.

Very respectfully,
HENRY C. ST. JOHN.

Washington, D. C.

COUNT THIS GOOD VOTE.

Peter Howe, Esq., of Wenona, Ill., writes:—I see by the Cynosure you put me down as not voting for St. John. I certainly did vote for him and my son also: and I stand ready to do my part toward the support of his family, if his enemies see fit to kill him as they threaten to do. The hand writing is on the wall and it needs no prophet to interpret it. The enemies of all good are mad. God grant the overthrow of the Lodge, Rum, and Mormonism. Twin evils must go to their own place.

Yours truly,
PETER HOWE.

THE ELECTION RETURNS.

Requests have come for the publication of the total vote for Presidential candidates. As the total vote by States for the four leading candidates has been published in most of the newspapers, it seems only to be necessary to give the St. John vote, which was as follows, according to the figures in the New York Sun and Herald, which agree throughout:

Alabama	610	Mississippi	....
Arkansas	....	Missouri	1,503
California	2,640	Nebraska	2,858
Colorado	759	Nevada	....
Connecticut	2,305	New Hampshire	1,573
Delaware	55	New Jersey	6,155
Florida	74	New York	25,006
Georgia	184	North Carolina	....
Illinois	12,074	Ohio	11,269
Indiana	3,018	Oregon	488
Iowa	1,472	Pennsylvania	15,306
Kansas	4,273	Rhode Island	921
Kentucky	3,106	South Carolina	....
Louisiana	366	Tennessee	1,131
Maine	2,160	Texas	3,511
Maryland	2,794	Vermont	1,752
Massachusetts	9,923	Virginia	143
Michigan	18,403	West Virginia	939
Minnesota	4,691	Wisconsin	7,649
Total			150,134

The reports in different papers varies thus:

Chicago Inter Ocean—Cleveland, 4,894,634; Blaine, 4,859,644; St. John, 150,796; Butler, 133,002; total, 10,038,076.

Chicago Tribune—Cleveland, 4,838,319; Blaine, 4,844,061; St. John, 150,385; Butler, 208,553; total, 10,041,268.

New York Times—Cleveland, 4,913,901; Blaine, 4,847,659; St. John, 150,633; Butler, 133,880; total 10,046,073.

New York World—Cleveland, 4,912,780; Blaine, 4,843,683; St. John, 149,402; Butler, 118,715; total, 10,024,580.

New York Herald—Cleveland, 4,914,058; Blaine, 4,844,252; St. John, 150,134; Butler, 134,028; total, 10,042,472.

The discrepancies result from the different methods of counting the electoral vote. In some States the Cleveland and Butler parties formed a fusion on one or more electors, and in all the States the electoral vote varied, as in Rhode Island, the highest vote for a St. John elector was 928, the lowest 916.

The New York Evening Post makes these interesting comparisons of the total vote:

"Cleveland is shown by the figures to have a plurality over Blaine in the entire country of over 64,000, in a total vote of a little more than 10,000,000. Garfield's plurality in 1880 was only 8,464. Cleveland lacks 214,000 votes of having a majority over all other candidates, while Garfield lacked 311,000 of a majority over all others. The increase in the total vote this year over that of 1880 is in round numbers about 823,000.

The figures of the two great sections of the country, the North and the South, make a most interesting study. Blaine's total vote in the twenty-three Northern States, including Indiana and Missouri, is 3,790,000, against 3,535,796 for Garfield in the same States in 1880, a gain for Blaine of about 255,000. Cleveland's total in these States is 3,432,000, against 3,056,576 for Hancock, a gain for Cleveland of 376,000, which is 121,000 greater than Blaine's Northern gain. Turning to the thirteen Southern States, we find Blaine's total vote to be 1,054,000, against 918,620 for Garfield, a remarkable Republican gain of 144,000. Cleveland's Southern total is 1,481,000, as against 1,388,376 for Hancock, a gain for Cleveland of 92,000, which is 52,000 less than Blaine's Southern gain. Cleveland's total majority in these thirteen Southern States is only 232,872. Blaine leads Cleveland in the North by nearly 358,000 votes, while Cleveland leads Blaine in the South by 427,000."

OBITUARY.

EBENEZER KENT died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. O. W. Brown, in Wethersfield, Henry county, Illinois, Nov. 26, ult., in his 91st year.

He was born in Dorset, Bennington county, Vermont, on the 7th of April, 1794. At about the age of 18 years he went to Greenfield, Saratoga county, New York, and served an apprenticeship at the blacksmith trade, after which he went into business for himself in the same place and remained until about 1823, when he removed to what was then Genesee (but now Wyoming) county, New York, and cleared up a new farm, and remained until 1844. He then removed to this State, spending the first two years in Wethersfield and then going to what is now Neponset township, where he improved a new farm. In 1856 he sold this farm and moved back to Wethersfield where he lived until the death of his wife in 1876, since which time he has lived with his children, a large share of the time with his son Charles in the adjoining town of Kewanee.

At about 39 years of age he was hopefully converted and joined the Presbyterian church at Castile, Wyoming county, New York, and when he came West united by letter with the Congregational church of Wethersfield, of which he was a valued member.

Father Kent was a man of strong and radical convictions upon all questions of Christian reform, and formed one of a little company of very aged men in the two towns who warmly supported the Cynosure. The eldest of these, Father Joseph Catterlin, now living in Abilene, Kansas, is about 95 years old. Father Kent paid as well as prayed for the success of the principles he maintained, and his contributions were neither scanty nor irregular. He voted for St. John in the late election, and though a life-long Abolitionist, after it was known that Cleveland was elected, he said he should do the same if the election were to be held over again.

Died, Nov. 13th, at the residence of her son-in-law, Daniel Gould, 26 North Ada street, Chicago, MRS. MEHETABEL F. MORSE, aged 85 years.

Mrs. Morse was born in Alstead, N. H., in 1799; converted to Christ in early life, and came with her husband, the late Dea. Mark Morse, and three little daughters, to Cook county, Illinois, in 1835, making a journey of six weeks by wagon from Rochester, Vt.

In the small log-cabin at Elk Grove that first winter all the children of the white settlers were gathered under her instruction, and not unfrequently the dusky faces of the children of the forest were seen in that company of learners.

Enduring the toils, trials and privations of pioneer life with fortitude, she was always interested and earnest in every good work. In those early days, before the erection of school-houses or churches, her home was very often converted into a place of meeting for the worship of God, and for the instruction of the young in the Sabbath-school, in which she took an active interest. Her influence was always on the side of truth and righteousness and temperance, and she never lost her interest in any of these things, although for several years past too feeble to be actively engaged in their promotion.

Conscious that the change was approaching, her last intelligible expression was, "Rejoice with me; I'm almost home. Let me go: let me go."

Her remains were interred in the beautiful Hope Cemetery at Galesburg, Ill., where all her family except one daughter now await with her the resurrection morning.

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep."
"I shall be satisfied when I awake in Thy likeness."

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN OBERLIN OPINION.

OBERLIN, O., Dec. 6th, 1884.

I have conferred with a few of the friends here, and the feeling seems to be that it would be unwise to drop or suspend the anti-secrecy work in the State. We can see no reason why the same line of Christian effort in the work may not continue in this field as before. We do not approve of the "prohibition whale swallowing the anti-secrecy porcupine," as we can see no need of it. The two movements in principle are not opposed to each other, but are only different branches of the great Christian work of purging out from our religious and civil institutions the evils which are working their corruption and ruin. We think that the action of the N. C. A. Board at its last meeting in pointing out the distinction between the line of action in party politics and that of the N. C. A. was pre-eminently wise. As the Prohibition movement is further advanced than the other, it will, doubtless take the lead in politics, and as the N. C. A. pushes on its Christian work, it will enlighten the people and thus tend to purge out the secrecy element from the prohibition ranks; and hence in time the principles of both movements in politics may be combined in one organization. Such a combination is now greatly desired by many. But until this can be effected let the leaders in the Prohibition and American parties see to it that men nominated for office are free from any responsible connection with the liquor and the lodge, and are willing to stand on a political platform committed to the destruction of each as was the case with St. John and Daniel. If such nominees are chosen I can see no good reason why the members of both parties may not vote the same ticket. The struggle in this State against the liquor power must necessarily absorb a good deal of the time and strength of those who are opposed to lodgery, yet sufficient time and effort may be given to the anti-secrecy movement here as will keep it before the people and thus gain to a greater or less extent new converts to it.

Prohibition as a distinct party movement is getting a strong foot-hold here in Oberlin; and party opposition to it has been strong and most disgraceful in some of its manifestations. With all the Prohibition and Anti-masonic sentiment there is in this place, it is found to be a hard soil in which to plant and cultivate a thorough and radical reformation in the line of this sentiment. When the Holy Spirit puts life and power into all righteous sentiment it assumes a form of outward activity which is ready to face and overcome all opposition and thus help to bring all things in subjection to Christ whose right it is to reign. Yours in the conflict to bring about this glorious reign.

MOB DEFENDERS IN DUNLAP, KANSAS.

DUNLAP, Kans., Dec. 6, 1884.

EDITORS CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Accompanying this please find a copy of the Dunlap Reporter of Dec. 5th, 1884, in which you will see a copy of the minutes of an indignation meeting (so-called) held by some colored people whose names appear, which meeting was called on seeing a copy of the Christian Statesman of Oct. 9th, 1884, containing an article from Mr. Andrew Atchison, principal of Dunlap Academy, on the mob which attacked Mr. Starry while here exposing Masonry on Sept. 19th and 20th, 1884; of which fact you have been already informed by Rev. P. S. Feemster.

Now you will see from these minutes that they charge Mr. A. with telling no truth at all, but nothing but "lies, fibs and whoppers," as they term them, a copy of which they forwarded to the Christian Statesman, I understand, for publication, and I feel it my duty to defend Mr. A. against these false charges.

The statements he made are facts which can be substantiated, every one of them. Perhaps in the first statement there is a slight error, namely, one-half of the population of the village being colored. This, however, was true until recently; but within the last few months the whites have a small majority, possibly. The remaining statements are all invariably true without the least variation whatever. The barbed wires are preserved for examination at any time when called for by proper authorities. Also the stones and some eggs and egg-shells used on the occasion, and the shooting can be proven clearly, as the number of colored people who called to see and express their sympathy for Mr. Starry on Sabbath morning are almost as numerous as the list of names accompanying these minutes. As to the number of dollars raised, I presume they did fail to find from whom it came. The fact is true; though as regards the lodge statement they deny a connection with any lodge. This we know is false, three of these very persons we know belong to the Freemasons. The majority of the others belong to what they call the "Ladies' Kingdom;" which they themselves call a lodge. As regards the settling of the colony being done somewhat by Mr. Johnson, we will not deny; but would as regards to Mr. A.'s sympathy for these colored people only reaching as far as the dollars and cents he gets out of them.

But one thing we can vouch for, he has been a most earnest and laborious worker for a period of over three years, sparing neither time nor means in trying to Christianize, elevate and ennoble the colored race as a people. These facts they do not deny.

Finally, as regards the charge against Mr. A. for bringing these lecturers here, it is another falsehood. He positively had nothing to do with it. He was absent in the East all summer; had just returned about ten days at which time these lectures were arranged. As regards that matter, the honor or dishonor, whichever you may term it, belongs to myself, acting as agent for the colored people; they being the prime-movers in the case. MRS. C. M. SNODGRASS.

WRONG MUST GO DOWN.

CHITTENANGO, N. Y.

We were told very pleasantly at the session of our last conference that the defeat of the Republican party would delay a prohibition victory twenty years; just as if success were impossible unless said party co-operated with us. This prediction assumes the character of a scare-crow.

I am convinced that God is in this business and that the attention of this nation will be called to act for the utter overthrow of this evil. We may now say to the parties as Mordecai to Esther, who was rather slow at comprehending matters: "For if thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, then shall there enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place . . . . and who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?"

We shall not knock at the doors of any party, but presue the even tenor of our ways until we convince this nation that we are in heart-sympathy with the robbed, oppressed and degraded victims of the rum-traffic, and draw a color line across this continent, on one side of which the party of righteousness, and on the other the party of iniquity shall stand face to face.

We shall see men coming to the front from the East, West, North and South with ballots to execute the will of God, and all other considerations sunk out of sight until this question is settled. We must have in the White House a man who will not drink wine nor strong drink, nor set it for his guests. We must have a Congress which will banish the saloons from the building in which laws are made for this nation, and put the accursed fire-water out of Washington.

One great trouble among us is, that we are not patient enough. We want success before we deserve it. This reform must come up through great tribulation. I just got a letter from a friend who says that the pastor of the M. E. church at Middleburgh, N. Y., has incurred the indignation of his pew-holders because he had the manliness to vote for St. John. They now are trying the bread-and-butter thumb screws on him, but the ravens always know where the Elijahs live.

Let God in Christ be among us. Just in proportion as we have the Holy Spirit, our work will be deep and glorious. We have as an American party a double foe; rum on one hand, and secretism on the other—both formidable. We have penetrated the armor of the secret society devil, and we will not rest until he leaves us victors of the field.

"Right for ever on the scaffold,
Wrong for ever on the throne,
Yet that scaffold sways the future,
And behind the dim unknown—
Standeth God within the shadow

TEMPERANCE LODGE VOTE.

You ask in your last issue for information in regard to how many of the temperance lodges voted for St. John. In reply I would say that no one here, in good standing in the lodge, did so. Three who joined the lodge six months ago claim to have voted the clean ticket and one voted a part, but none of these have been attending the lodge lately and are behind in their dues, and some of them say they have no use for the lodge any more. Fifteen votes were cast for prohibition, some by Democrats and some by Republicans.—J. MCCLEERY, Inman, Holt Co., Neb.

A LODGE WOLF.

Who so capable of organizing and setting on foot primary schools as a graduate of the university? A 33-degree Mason from Washington is here organizing "Temples of Honor." Before he knew my object, I had him in my study and read to him some passages from Finney and Ronayne, and gave him to read what Herodotus says about Phallic worship. He used the usual contradictory Masonic arguments, branding these men of God (Finney and Ronayne) as liars and perjurers; but, with a cheek unknown to gentility, he asked the loan of one of these books (he being an entire stranger). He professes to be doing this work in the name of Gospel temperance, and is around seeking the aid and sympathy of the churches, the Y. M. C. A., etc. Oh, tell it in Gath! and publish it throughout all Zion!—A READER, Philadelphia, Pa.

A WORD FOR TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS.

L. E. Lincoln, a Boston friend, whose list of trial subscribers for the Cynosure numbers twenty-two, makes a good suggestion:

Permit me to suggest, in view of the fact that some of your subscribers are sending the Cynosure to people, many of whom we are not acquainted with, and whose subscriptions we shall not be able to solicit, that you publish couspicuously a statement that the Cynosure is being sent on trial to persons who have not subscribed, with the hope that they will appreciate the deep religious tone of the paper and its attitude towards intemperance, lodgism and Sabbath desecration, and encourage the reforms which it so ably and fearlessly advocates by becoming subscribers to the paper.

PENNSYLVANIA OSTRACISM.

I have done the best I could for the good cause by lending my books and giving away the Cynosure to lodge church members. The drinking, profane, Sabbath-breaking portion of the lodge I neglected, for it was like casting pearls before swine. By the course I have taken, I am completely ostracised. One lodge man had the hardihood to brave the lodge and vote for St. John. He was abused shamefully and called a fool and lunatic. One lodge man told me he would "give $100 to any man that would shoot St. John," and that a distiller in New York gave St. John $3,000 to defeat Blaine. Everything was said to dupe the ignorant to the support of Blaine.—SENEX, Springville, Pa.

MERITED DEFEAT MADE EVIDENT THROUGH DEFEAT.

Before the November election and its published results the doomed party augured its own overthrow. Since the election the party hatred and bigotry has culminated in outrages similar to and worthy of the "copper-heads" of twenty-five years ago. Your humble correspondent never voted any but the Whig and the Republican tickets in the forty-five years of his majority, till under a sense of duty he changed to the American Prohibition ticket. This was done as sincerely as he ever voted any ticket. When we read of the burning in effigy of St. John in many localities, under the leadership of Republicans, and of the revival in Oberlin, Ohio, of the "Ku-Klux Klan," and the rude if not brutal attack on Mr. Mills and wife, a peaceable and estimable student of theology in Oberlin College, and on many others, all over the land (save down South), we are nearly ready to implore that party to yield up the ghost, before it shall destroy all the glory it has ever achieved. Its intolerance and bigotry have written on its once fair walls, "mene tekel."—N. CALLENDER, Thompson, Pa.

"I HAVE COME OUT."

The election is over and our candidate run better than I had expected. The Republicans are very mad over the result; they tried every way to keep us from voting the St. John ticket. They called us rebels and traitors, but three of us stood the storm and are still standing it, for it is storming yet. I sent to A. W. Hall, College Springs, just one week before the election for tickets, but got none; the letter did not get there till the 4th of Nov., but got the reply back next day! But we were not to be cheated out of our votes so I got some tickets struck off here. I propose to fight it out on this line if it takes all the rest of my life. I am in true sympathy with our reform movement, although when I began to read the Cynosure I was not. But, thank God, it has opened my eyes to the fact that the lodge will not take men to heaven. I have come out and am beginning to speak out; but catch it on the right and on the left and from my own brethren; but by the grace of God I will continue.—H. A. LONG, Keota, Iowa.

TEMPERANCE LESSON.

STRENGTH VS. ALCOHOL.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The glory of young men is their strength. Prov. 20: 29.

Ques. What does the Bible tell us about Sampson besides his great feats of strength?

Ans. That he was a Nazarite from his birth.

Q. What was a Nazarite?

A. A person under peculiar religious vows, one of which was never to taste wine.

Q. Then upon what drink did Sampson attain his wonderful strength?

A. It must have been water.

Q. Is here a lesson for us?

A. There is. If spirituous liquors could make people strong in the same way that food does they would not have been forbidden to Sampson. Alcohol does not produce strength; it only uses it up.

Q. Mention one of the ways in which it does this.

A. Dr. Richardson tells us that the man who takes a pint of whiskey a day, or the equivalent of that in some other alcoholic drink, makes his heart beat 26,000 times extra every day. Now when the heart has to do so much extra work, not only does the whole machinery of the body wear out faster but it uses up power which might be applied in other directions.

Q. Then why do so many people believe such drinks are strengthening?

A. Partly because they are often told so by mistaken physicians, and partly because they really do feel stronger for a little while after using them.

Q. Why is this?

A. Because alcohol is a stimulant. When a man who is very weak or tired takes a glass of liquor it is just like applying the whip to a jaded horse. It may make the animal go faster but puts into him no additional strength.

Q. Mention another way.

A. No man is strong who has not full control over his muscles which are governed in all their operations by the nerves. Even a little is enough to put them out of order.

Q. What is the chief reason why alcohol cannot impart strength?

A. Because it is a poison. We grow strong on wholesome food, never on poisons, which only exhaust the bodily powers in the violent effort made by nature to expel them.

Q. Does alcohol contain anything that will feed the body?

A. It does not. Dr. Lees says, "It has no iron or salts for the blood; no gluten, phosphorus or lime for the bones; and no albumen, a substance which is the basis of every living organization."

Q. Should the young prize their strength of body?

A. They should. (Recite Golden Text). It is a gift to use for God. Other things being equal, those with the strongest bodies can accomplish most in his service. A young man who spoils his constitution with drink tramples in the mire what should be to him a crown of glory.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

BIBLE READINGS FOR THE YOUNG.

THE ASCENSION. Read Acts 1: 1–12.

Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of Glory shall come in. Psa. 24: 7.

1. Who is the King of Glory? Psa. 24: 8, 10; Luke 19: 37, 38.
2. When did he enter heaven with songs of triumph? Luke 24: 51; Psa. 68: 17, 18.
3. What symbol of his presence was brought to Zion with rejoicing? 2 Sam. 6: 12–17; 1 Kings 8: 3–7.
4. What door should we open that the King of Glory may come in? Rev. 3: 20.
5. In what throne does the King of Glory delight to dwell? Isa. 66: 1, 2; 57:15.

THE LITTLE HAND.

[This sweet little gem of a poem is the production of the late Lady Lawrence, wife of Sir Henry Lawrence, who was killed in the beginning of the Sepoy rebellion, in India:]

That hand of thine, my precious child,
How oft its soft caress I won,
And ask, with many a hope and fear,
What is that little hand to do?

How ductile, soft, unworn by toil,
The ready instrument of play,
It executes the fancies quaint
That make life thy one holiday,

It rolls the ball, it guides the pen,
And ciphers strange can deftly trace;
And oft, with warm affection's gush,
It fondly strokes my careworn face.

The mimic arms it well can wield,
And rein thy small and steady steed;
And when we con the lettered page,
Points to the tiny words we read.

And in thy parents' hands 'tis clasped,
When night and morn our prayer is pray'd;
And pillows oft thy rosy cheek
When slumber's spell is on thee laid.

'Twill not be always thus, my boy,
For real life has other tasks—
What is that little hand to do?
Once more thy yearning mother asks.

Is it to guide the seaman's helm,
Or point the gun 'mid flashing swords;
Or will it wield the student's pen,
Add clothe thy thoughts in living words?

Will it be hard and worn with toil?
Or pale with sickness' livid hue?
Oh! could thy mother's heart divine
What is that little hand to do?

But might her fervent prayer prevail,
Unsullied should that hand remain—
Clean from corruption's filthy touch,
And pure from every sinful stain.

Still ready for thy Master's work,
The servant of a willing mind,
More prompt to give than to receive,
And grasped in many a greeting kind.

And may another hand be found
To hold it in love's wedded grasp;
And may the hands which God then joins
Be one till death shall loose their clasp.

HEALTH—ITS IMPORTANCE AND CONDITIONS.

A LETTER FROM GEO. W. CLARK TO THE YOUNG PEOPLE.

The matter of one's health is of the very first importance, because without health you cannot answer or enjoy the great and noble end of your being; you can neither be useful, comfortable, nor happy. Health consists in the full and ample possession, the perfect and complete development and the harmonious operation of all the physical, mental, moral, social and spiritual powers, faculties and forces of our being. To secure and enjoy the full benefit of these you must obey and conform to the Laws of Life and Health.

Violations of the physical laws are the causes; disease the effects; disobedience to, or transgressions of these laws, is sure to bring the penalty, which is disease, suffering, and often premature death! You have by nature a good, or fair constitution, a constitution which if taken care of would secure you good health, a useful and happy life, and a comfortable old age. These are not only desirable but they are all important. But to secure and enjoy these inestimable blessings you must obey God's laws, "obey and live!" 1st. Be regular. Order, or regularity is nature's first law! Be regular in your rising, regular at your meals, regular in your work, regular in your exercise, and be regularly at home evenings and in your beds by 9 to 9:30 o'clock or 10 at the outside. "Balmy sleep" is nature's "sweet restorer." Young people, especially in the growing and developing period, need more sleep. Night and its quiet repose and rest is the most favorable time for renewing the wasted tissues of the body and recruiting its exhausted strength. Late hours and irregular and incomplete sleep, is a serious fault and attended with great harm to anyone especially to young people.

2d. Be careful what you eat, when you eat and how you eat. You should eat and drink to live, not live merely to eat and drink! If you eat and drink to live, you will carefully select and use such food as is nutritious and health and strength-sustaining, food that will make good and pure blood, tissue, muscle, bone, brain, etc., such as the entire wheaten meal, oat meal, rye meal, corn meal, all of these made into mush or bread, with pure milk are highly nutrifying and life-sustaining; and along with rice, fruits and berries are not only wholesome, but palatable food. I do not recommend flesh food, but if any is eaten it should be pure, clean mutton or beef, and the lean portion at that, with a careful selection of esculent vegetables. Fish, especially fresh fish, is good and wholesome food, but pork and fat meats, butter and lard and all greasy, gross victuals should be studiously avoided; and if you want to preserve your blood pure and good, keep your nervous system in a normal, comfortable, and controllable condition, your brain and mind bright and vigorous, and your intellect clear and active, never muddle or paralyze them with tea or coffee, nor above all by the use of liquor or tobacco! These are Satan's snares for the ruin of the bodies, minds and souls of men and women Avoid all condiments. They irritate and inflame the mucous membrane while they serve only to derange the appetite. Never drink anything while eating! Eat slowly and masticate your food thoroughly. The saliva will then mix with and will sufficiently moisten and liquify it for an easy passage down the esophagus into the stomach. A plentiful supply of saliva with the food greatly assists the gastric juice in the process of digestion. If you feel you must have drink after eating, nothing is better than warm water with milk and sugar. Crust coffee, pea coffee, barley coffee are wholesome and palatable drinks, while they are free from any narcotic or injurious effects. Never eat anything or nibble between meals! Let the degestive organs rest until the next regular meal.

"Cleanliness" is not only "next to Godliness," but it stands in the same relation to health and long life. Thorough ablution, therefore, as often as twice and sometimes thrice a week with a wet towel, and in a room filled with pure fresh air, at a comfortable temperature (which will serve also as an air bath), then rubbing dry with a towel, not only, but with the hands. This you will find to be not only healthful and invigorating, but a most enjoyable luxury. Live as much as possible in the open air by day, and have your sleeping rooms well ventilated by night. Do not forget the old saw "keep the brainal extremity cool, and pedal extremities warm!" Observe these plain, simple and essential conditions, take Shakespeare's council "throw physic to the dogs," and old Abercrombie's prescription, "abstinence the best medicine," and with all, "trust in the Lord and do good," and verily thou shalt enjoy healthful, useful, honorable and happy lives.

I make these suggestions and give this advice not only from a study of the subject and observations of cause and effect, but from an extensive and varied experience of more than seventy-two years of living in this wonderful world. The miseries of mankind come of transgression, "the way of the transgressor is hard!" "The soul that sinneth it shall die." "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life." "Obey, therefore, and live!"—The Vanguard.

A sportsman sat very still in the woods and began to whistle an air to a red squirrel in a tree near by. In a twinkling the little fellow sat up, leaned his head one side, and listened. In a moment more he scrambled down the trunk, came within four feet of the sportsman, and looked at him with eyes beaming with pleasure. On changing the tune the squirrel skipped away.

The "revenges of history" are finely illustrated, and also emphasized by the fact mentioned by Dr. Beard, in a letter to the Congregationalist, that when the German Emperor rode into humiliated Paris, at the close of the Franco-German war, not less than eighty members of his personal staff were descendants of the Huguenots, who had been formerly driven from France at the dictate of Papal authorities. It is a long account which France has to settle for the revocation of the Edict of Nantes.

TEMPERANCE.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

The following able presentation of the hopeful side of the temperance work is taken the Christian at Work:

The London Times says that there is a very considerable falling off in the number of cases of drunkenness brought before magistrates. Mr. Gladstone has already noted the accumulation of savings and the diminution in the amount annually expended for intoxicating drink. Not so here. In the United States, drink and its expenditure, and its accompanying crime and wretchedness, are on the increase. Congress has done nothing but listen to the public murmur. Meantime sentiment is growing, and bids fair to make itself felt in our national politics, and when it does, the charmingly cool assumption that the infamies of the liquor traffic concern only the state, will be scattered to the four winds of heaven. There is a good time coming, boys—and fathers and mothers, too!

I do not agree with you "that drink and its expenditures" is on the increase in the United States, i. e., that drink that leads to crime. The statistics are the other way. In the quarterly report of the Chief of Bureau of Statistics, of the Treasury Department, by Joseph Nimmo, Jr., Esq., of March 31, 1884, on page 357, is a statement of the annual "consumption of wines and liquors in the United States from the year 1840 to 1883, inclusive."

In 1840, the quantity of domestic spirits distilled was 40,378,090 proof gallons. Our population then was 17,069,453. The consumption of domestic spirits was therefore a fraction over 2.36 gallons per capita.

In 1880 the production of domestic spirits was 62,-132,415. In 1880 the population was 50,155,783. The consumption of domestic spirits was, therefore, 1.23 gallons per capita. This is 1.13 gallons less per capita than in 1840!

In 1840 we imported of spirits for consumption 2,-682,794 gallons, and in 1880 only 1,394,279 gallons. This is 1,288,515 gallons less than 1840.

Number of gallons of domestic wines produced in 1840, 124,734, and in 1880, number of gallons 23,-298,940.

Number of gallons of wine imported in 1840, 4,-748,362. In 1880 we imported 5,030,601 gallons, an increase in forty years of only 282,239 gallons.

Number of gallons of malt liquors produced in 1840, 23,162,571. In 1880 number of gallons produced, 413,208,885. This shows that malt liquors have increased some seven gallons per capita in consumption.

The consumption of native wines and malt liquors has largely increased, but not of "fire water" since 1840.

Sixty years ago everybody drank—ministers and people, at all times and upon all occasions—at weddings and at funerals. And the man who did not drink was an exception. Cider brandy and New England rum were legal tender for work in the East, and corn whisky in the West and South. Spirits were on the end of the counter in every store, and all who traded drank—rum and molasses. In traveling, one could hardly get out of the sight of a tavern.

What can Congress do? It can exercise no control in the States. It can prohibit importation of spirits, wines, and beers. It can impose a tax on the sales. That it does now. The number of retail liquor dealers in 1883, in the State of New York, was 28,923. Wholesale dealers, 759. Retail dealers in malt liquors, 2,078, wholesale dealers in malt liquors, 409.

The total number of retail liquor dealers in the United States in 1883 was 187,871. Now, over these Congress has no control whatever. If Mr. St. John was President of the United States, and every member of the Senate and House a Prohibitionist, they could do nothing to prohibit the sale of liquors in the States.

Let us get the people in the States right by inculcating facts as to the influence of strong drink upon the physical, moral, and mental man. Let us get the fountains from which flow the streams, pure, and then an influence will go out to help our country, and the good time will be hastened for which good men hope, and for which they labor.

What is the use of voting for a Prohibition candidate for President, when we have 187,871 liquor dealers in the States? It is simply "voting in the air." There is nothing practical in it. Iowa in 1883 had 5,001 retail liquor dealers, Kansas, 1,898, Maine, 1,-054, Michigan, 5,050, Vermont, 454.

"Let us work and wait." Virtue is stronger than vice, God than the evil man. In sixty years the half of two generations have been saved, and the same progress and change in sixty years more, will make prohibition of the manufacture and sale of "ardent spirits," save for scientific and manufacturing purposes, a fixed fact in these United States.

JAMES A. BRIGGS.

THE CHURCHES.

—Rev. D. P. Rathbun and U. D. Lathrop have been holding revival meetings at Beaconsfield, Iowa. There have been some fifteen conversions. Rev. A. W. Hall of College Springs has organized a Wesleyan church at a school house in the vicinity.

—The next General Conference of the United Brethren churches meets in May next. It was appointed at Galion, O., but the church at that place feeling unable to entertain the Conference, it will meet at Fostoria.

—The Richmond Star, ex-Bishop Wright's paper, says that seventeen United Brethren conferences have during the summer and fall resolved strongly in favor of the law against secret societies.

—Rev. A. T. McDill, late of Philadelphia, is editing a paper at Colorado Springs and has also undertaken a mission there for the United Presbyterian church. He still maintains an editorial relation to the Christian Instructor.

—Rev. R. W. French, for twenty-one years pastor of the Wilton United Presbyterian church near Paotone, Ill., has lately removed to Chicago and may be addressed at 301 Winchester Avenue.

—Pastor Seguin, of the French Protestant mission in Chicago, has just begun a class for students in French at his rooms, No. 44 Blue Island Avenue. He is making an effort to organize his mission into a church which shall be taken into the Presbyterian fold; and also expects Father Chiniquy to hold meetings for a week or two in some prominent hall or church.

—The San Francisco Post says of a long-standing evil: "The superintendents of the Congregational church of the Northwest have made a spirited remonstrance against the 'incompetency' and 'lack of common sense' evinced by many ministers sent out to them from the colleges and theological seminaries of the East. Such men, they say, however 'liberally educated' and 'thoroughly good in character,' without common sense, are 'thoroughly good for nothing in the work of the ministry' there, and 'our duty to the churches compels us to set our faces against them.'"

—Ths Rev. Henry Varley, the English evangelist, is in Cincinnati, arranging to hold a series of evangelistic services there. He will conduct revival meetings in St. Louis during the winter.

—Tarsus, the birthplace of St. Paul, now boasts of a Young Men's Christian Association vigorously at work, and of a native Bible woman successfully engaged in teaching her sex from house to house.

—Rev. Dr. Burchard in a late sermon transferred the responsibility of his inopportune allusion to Rum, Rome and Rebellion, at the Blaine dinner, to Divine Providence, with which he is satisfied to leave the result. He spoke the truth, although unguardedly, and need not be ashamed.

—At the recent anti-instrumental convention of United Presbyterians in Zenia, Ohio, there were present one hundred delegates from thirty-six presbyterics. One of the resolutions adopted was, "That we will not and can not assist any Board of our church which will use our funds in supporting any congregation which is violating any of the distinctive principles of our church in the service of praise, also we will withhold help from any of our institutions whose influence or teachings may not be in accord with our distinctive doctrines." The agitation is to be kept up and with unabated vigor.

—The Rev. Dr. Clark, senior secretary of the American Board, speaking of the "Self-support of Native Churches," says that "of the 293 churches connected with the different missions of the Board, 130 are self-supporting;" that "there has been no increase in the number of ordained missionaries for thirty years, while the field actually occupied is at least four-fold greater, at less than double the expense;" and that this economical expansion is chiefly "due to the self-supporting native churches, and the young men and women they have given to Christ."

—Last May a resolution was offered by a member of the First Baptist church, Boston, in favor of fermented wine at the Lord's table, and notice given that the question would be brought up at the church meeting in October. The long time was given in order that the members might have ample time to study the subject and vote intelligently. A very large meeting assembled on October 21, and after over two hours' discussion voted to reject the resolution. A motion was then made instructing the deacons to purchase "the pure fruit of the vine—unfermented wine," for sacramental purposes, which was adopted with very few dissenting votes. This makes the record of Baptist churches in Boston and vicinity stand twenty-three to two in favor of unfermented wine.

—The Board of Directors of the American Baptist Home Missionary Society find their treasury report shows such a shortage of funds that it has made its appointments of only six months, instead of a year, as usual, in apprehension that there might not be money enough to pay salaries and expenses for a full year. The society's embarrassment is largely due to its having recently taken complete charge of the missionary work among the Chinese on the Pacific coast, and to the large sums expended in the church edifice and educational departments.

—It is gratifying to find Lagos, but a short time ago a barbarous place and a great slave center, now with its numerous churches, many of them self-supporting, bringing in its free-will offering of 10*l*, to the Bible Society, and sending, besides, payment for a large consignment of Yoruba and English Scriptures. Next to Sierra Leone, no place bears greater witness to the power of divine grace than Lagos. Many evils and corruptions are still there, but the power of a living Christianity is evident.

—Rev. A. A. Fulton, of Canton, China, says: After forty years of missionary labor the church to-day is subjected to the worst persecution in the history of our work in southern China. The classes who have the most influence are among the most conceited and intolerant, and have often the bitterest contempt for everything foreign, chiefly because it is foreign. This hatred seems to grow solely out of their consciousness of the superiority of western nations. The majority would tear down every chapel, school and hospital and banish every foreigner, if they could safely do so; but there is not a shadow of hope that the progress of Christianity in China can be stayed. Every chapel torn down would be built up. I have not heard of a single instance of any Christian abandoning his faith.

—Long have the prayers of evangelical churches gone up for Africa—unknown, mysterious Africa, shut up from the knowledge of the nations, but believed to be a dense mass of heathen darkness. Now these prayers are being answered in the establishment of missions in several regions of the interior, and a scramble among civilized nations for a share of its vast, well-watered, fertile, and thickly-peopled valleys. May the present Conference of European Powers so arrange matters that Christian missionaries will be safe, that commerce will be free, except in slaves and spirituous liquors, and that the rights of the natives will be observed in all respects, except their murderous orgies and slave-hunts. The advice of Mr. Stanley is, we see, most eagerly sought, and is most judiciously given.—N. Y Witness.

—A new religious revolution is threatened in Russia. The Czar has for many generations been recognized as the religious as well as the political head of the state. In the autonomy of Russia he is the pope of popes as well as the king of kings. No pope or metropolitan can hold his office without the seal of the Czar, and the Czarina at a coronation ceremony kneels to the Czar not in his capacity as an Emperor, but as the Vicegerent of God. Now, however, a sect of dissenters have risen which threatens to overthrow this belief in divine selection. The dissenters have their headquarters in Moscow, and they have thousands of adherents throughout the empire. They are not Nihilists, and they do not seek to subvert the existing government. They simply discard the religious ritual used by the loyalists, and they deny the religious supremacy of the Czar. It is stated, however, that they are committing acts of fanaticism which will make them subject to the severe penal laws of Russia, and that they will thus be crushed out of existence, as other religious rebels have been.—The Interior.

—The Directors of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary of Columbus, S. C., have requested the resignation of Dr. James Woodrow from the Professorship of natural science. The synods controlling the institution had decided against Dr. Woodrow's exposition of the evolution theory and Dr. Woodrow declared his intention to continue teaching his theory to the classes. He declined to resign, and demanded a formal trial. The Board then cited him to show cause why he should not be dismissed. Dr. Woodrow declined to make a defense and a resolution passed removing him from the chair, whereupon other resignations followed among the faculty. The Board adopted a resolution stating that in its interpretation of the instructions received from the synods, it does not understand any restrictions be placed upon the professors, or limitation set to the discussion of any legitimate subject, doctrine, or hypothesis, nor does it desire to limit discussions on all proper subjects, provided always the views inculcated shall be in accordance with the standard of the Presbyterian church.

—The mission work along the Congo is being conducted not only with great success in the matter of growing influence and increasing missions, but with a very helpful effect upon the commercial interests of the outside world. The first missions were established in Banana in 1878, when two missionaries reached there in February. In the next June two more were sent, and in 1879 five more workers entered the field. In 1880 five more stations were added, and in 1881 there arrived seven more missionaries. Of the twenty-two, four died and six that year returned to England. Over $20,000 was expended that year. Early in the present year the missions had reached to Bolobo, 220 miles above Stanley Pool. In the five years specified there were fifty missionaries put into the field, but because of deaths or returns there now remain but twenty-six. The stations reach 500 miles into the interior, and have had expended upon them $150,000. The mission which was begun by Mr. and Mrs. Guinness, of England, was offered to the American Baptist Missionary Union, and was accepted last May. The Union is now raising $20,000 to push the work along. The Methodist church has also entered heartily into the work. Africa is now pretty well districted with missions, and the work is in a very encouraging state.—Inter Ocean.

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1884.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.

4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.

5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.

7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.

8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.

9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.

10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.

11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.

14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.

15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

MASONIC OATHS,

BY

E. Ronayne,

Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago.

A masterly discussion of the Oaths of the Masonic Lodge, to which is appended "Freemasonry at a Glance," illustrating every sign, grip and ceremony of the Masonic Lodge. This work is highly commended by leading lecturers as furnishing the best arguments on the nature and actual character of Masonic obligations of any book in print. Paper cover, 207 pages. IN THE COILS;

— OR —

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, gives the correct or "standard" work and ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the lodge room, order of opening and closing the lodge, dress of candidate, ceremony of initiation, the proper manner of giving the signs, grips, etc., are fully illustrated and explained. First three degrees. Paper cover, 35 cents.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Identical, explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp.....75 cts.

Freemasonry at a Glance Illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 32 pages. Single copy, six cents.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1 00 per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen. $1.25

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and TENDENCY OF FREEMASONRY. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each per dozen. $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Masonry. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen. 75 cents.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

BATAVIA CONVENTION PAMPHLET.

A Staggering Blow!

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in BATAVIA, N. Y., September, 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freedmen and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

HAND BOOK OF Freemasonry,
BY
E. Ronayne,
Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 539, Chicago.

Gives the correct or "Standard" work and ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the Lodge room, order of opening and closing the Lodge, dress of candidate, ceremony of initiation, the manner of giving the sigus, grips, etc., are fully illustriated and explained. In short, it is

A Complete and Accurate Lodge Manual.

The high standing of Mr. Ronayne in the fraternity, his popularity and success as a teacher and lecturer in the Lodge, together with the testimony of high Masonic authority, leaves no doubt of the accuracy of this work. It is rapidly becoming a standard work in the hands of ACTING LODGE OFFICIALS, and those who desire to post themselves on the workings of the order. The price is so low that it is within the reach of all. Sent postpaid securely wrapped on receipt of price. 184 pages, Paper covers, 35 cents. Elegant cloth with beveled edges and gilt stamp, $1.00. RICHER THAN CRŒSUS!
Now the only Crœsus that I envy, is he who is reading a better book than this.—PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON.

The Literary Millennium

WHAT IS THE WORLD COMING TO? The poor man is now on an equality with the richest so far as Books are concerned.—CENTRAL BAPTIST, St. Louis.

THE ENDS of the EARTH CRY OUT and REJOICE in the triumphant progress of The Literary Revolution.

HONOLULU, Hawaii.—"I received by the last mail your catalogue, and inclose order. I make the cost $72.95. I inclose draft for $75.00."—P. C. JONES, JR.

TEHERAN, Persia.—"Please send mo one 'Doré Gallery of Bible Illustrations,' ono 'Teaching of the Twelve Apostles,' three volumes, 'Seven Great Monarchies,' for which I send you $5.58."—W. W. TORRANCE, M. D., U. S. Vice-Consul-General.

CITY OF MEXICO.—"Will you have the kindness to send me by mail complete catalogue, and samplo copies of the following books (valuo $9.92)?"—HENRY WARD POOLE.

NEW ZEALAND.—"Kindly mail mo the April number of CHOICE LITERATURE. Shall probably send you a twelve months' subscription."—GEO. T. BOOTH, Christchonch.

SIERRA LEONE, Africa.—"Please send me a descriptive catalogue, as I am in need of some good books."—C. A. MCKIE, Shesbro.

GUATEMALA, Cent. Am.—"Please send me 'The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles.' Inclosed find 25 cents."—REV. JNO. C. HILL.

BATTLE of the BOOKS.—The nature of the conflict which is being so successfully waged in the interest of choice books for the millions may be concisely stated as follows:

THE OLD WAY:—Charge all the customer will stand, and competition permit.

Big discounts to dealers and agents (when competition compels)—let the private buyer take care of himself.

1,000 books, profit, $1 each—$1,000.
Publish the books that will sell.
Take care of "Number One."

THE NEW WAY:—Give the best book possible for the least money possible.

Sell to buyers direct, giving them all possible discounts.

1,000,000 books, profit one cent each=$10,000.

Publish the books that deserve to sell—merit wins in the end.

To make $1 and a friend is better than $5 profit.

"Push things."—U. S. Grant.

CONSEQUENCE: The New Way brings the largest retail book trade in the world—still growing beyond all example—in spite of opposition and difficulty unprecedented.

375 TONS

VICTORY—VOX POPULI.—On which side lies the final victory in the desperate "Battle of the Books," the following extracts, characteristic of tens of thousands received, signify:

AMAZED.—"I am absolutely amazed at the cheapness and real excellence of your books. Your enterprise is a public benefaction of the highest kind."—REV. DR. SHEPHERD, Santa Rosa, Cal.

A BANKER'S View.—"Two sets of Waverley just received. All my friends are wondering how I get such bargains. I explain, and theso orders are the result."—H. MCLALLEN, Farmers' Bank, Columbia City, Ind.

GEN. PHELPS' Opinion.—"Your efforts towards extending useful information to all classes, are the most extraordinary yet witnessed by any age or country. They ought to render your name immortal."—GEN. J. W. PHELPS, Brattleboro, Vt.

STATE LIBRARY of Kansas.—"Having been connected with the State Library for several years, and accustomed to buying books, I cannot help but wonder how you can sell so cheap; or else, wonder how others can sell so dear."—W. E. STERNE, Topeka.

BOLD—ORIGINAL.—"The world's greatest benefactor to-day is John B. Alden, tho bold and original publisher, who is successfully placing standard literature within the reach of everybody who cares to read."—Evening Star, Bradford, Pa.

JUVENILE JOY!—The delight, the enthusiasm, the gratitude, with which the knowledge of the victories of The Literary Revolution is received throughout the continent is exemplified in the following quotations:

A PINE-KNOT FIRE.—"The old-fashioned biographers tell us how their subjects became learned by perusing borrowed books by the light of a pine-knot fire. Others saved their money for months to buy a single volume. This is all over now; and if reading is the road to greatness, great men ought to be plentiful."—The Champion, Atchison, Kan.

TANTALIZING.—"You do tantalize mo so. Such an abundance of cheap, delicious food, and no means to procure it. I can't stand it any longer. I have saved up $5.00, intending to buy clothes, but it must go. Please send for it, * * *."—E. BOYNTON, Calistoga, Cal.

A HAPPY MAN.—"Give a man this taste (for good books), and tho means of gratifying it, and you can hardly fail of making a happy man. You place him in contact with the best society in every period of history—with the wisest, the wittiest, the tenderest, the bravest, and the purest characters who have adorned humanity. You make him a denizen of all na

CHOICE BOOKS,

HOLIDAY BOOKS,

NOW READY.

YORKSHIRE, England.—"I am anxious to get a copy of the 'Cyclopedia of Science,' 4 vols., half Russia; also of the 'Historical Wonder-Book,' and the 'Doré Bible Gallery.' Will you do me the favor to say how much money I must send?"—REV. JOHN EDWARDS, York Road, Driffield.

GRAHAMSTOWN, South Africa.—"In reference to your MANIFOLD CYCLOPEDIA will you kindly send us full prospectus and specimen pages?"—H. GUEST & SON.

SOUTH WALES.—"You may kindly send me the following books. Inclose Post Office Order for the sum of £1. On receipt of the books shall send you another order."—D. E. WILLIAMS, Ammanford, Carmarthenshire.

CORK, Ireland.—"Inclosed find bank draft, valne $5.00, which please place to my credit. Please forward the six volumes as noted on the fly-leaf. You may see that I have not been idle in recommending your goods."—THOMAS H. ATTRIDGE, 24 Sonth Terrace.

WONDER-BOOK!—"This is indeed a wonder-book, in the amount and valuable quality of its contents. The wonder is how such a book, which is a library in itself, can be sold at such a price."—Methodist Recorder, Pittsburgh.

AND NO WONDER!—"It is no wonder that the publisher calls it a 'Wonder-Book.' The scenes and incidents described in these pages are more wonderful than anything in the Arabian Nights or the Fairy Tales of Andersen or Grimm."—National Baptist, Philadelphia.

THE IDEA! Only $2.50!—"A wonder-book in more senses than one. The idea of putting a work like this at only $2.50 per copy, seems preposterous; and yet there is wisdom in it, for everybody will want it, and it will thus be the means of advertising and introducing the numerous other valuable books which the publisher is putting forward."—Christian at Work, N.Y.

TWO CENTS.—"I can truly say that your two-cent (Elzevir) books are a Godsend to our schools."—JOHN TRAINER, County Supt., Decatur, Ill.

DR. LOSSING'S Verdict.—"Your 'Historical Wonder-Book' IS a wonder—a wonder how an imperial octavo volume of over 1,000 pages, with many illustrations, clear type, fine paper, handsomely bound, containing four standard historical works of great valne, can be sold for $2.50."—BENSON J. LOSSING, LL. D., the celebrated historian.

PREST. GREGORY.—"You ought to sell ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND sets of the Rawlinson in six months, and will do so if the reading public come to understand what you are doing for the intelligent masses. The books are marvels of cheapness and elegance combined."—D. S. GREGORY, Prest. Lake Forest University, Lake Forest, Ill.

ONE DRAWBACK.—"There is only one drawback. . . . it seems more like getting a present than making a purchase."—Churchman, Toronto.

100-PAGE CATALOGUE FREE.

NEATNESS.—"As much distinguished for neatness of appearance and general typographical excellence as for cheapness."—Sunday-School Times, Philadelphia.

"I MUST commend you for your splendid persistence and surprising resource, and exceptional and quite unexpected honesty. 'Unexpected' I mean in quite a good sense—for who could anticipate such rare regard for old claims and debts, under the staggering sea of difficulty in rebuilding your noble enterprise."—REV. CHAS. M. JONES, Golden, Colo.

EXCELLENT.—"The books, as books, are excellent. Paper, type, presswork, illustrations, and binding are all good, and the price extraordinarily low."—Literary World, Boston.

CHEAPNESS.—"These books are a marvel of cheapness and excellence. We know of no other work of similar valne and extent that is sold in this or any other market for anything like so low a price."—Examiner, N. Y.

RAPTURES!—"The youth of our household are in raptures."—Christian Advocate, Hamilton, Canada.

COMFORT for the HUNGRY.—"I am a young man of 25; am living on a claim alone—300 miles to the nearest railway. Your catalogue came to me like a Godsend. My mother sent me five dollars to buy some comfort in the shape of meat, and this is the use I make of it, stinting my stomach to give my mind a treat. I have thumbed your catalogue over night after night trying to make a choice of five dollars' worth of your excellent works. My heart fairly jumps when I see the extraordinarily low prices—yet too much for my limited purse. Inclosed, $5.00, for the following: * * *."—R. M. MASON, Prince Albert, N. W. Ter.

BOOKS or TOBACCO.—"I make up my mind that books I must stop buying from that man Alden, or else—well, say, farewell to tobacco. Your circular comes to hand calling for votes, and for what? That we may receive $5.00 for every $1.00 invested, and everlasting pleasure to boot. I can't resist—away, dear tobacco! Please record my vote, viz: Rawlinson, Ruskin, and perhaps, though I can't promise, Guizot."—C. M. EDWARDS, Barrie, Canada.

FAIR TERMS TO BUYERS.

EXAMINATION BEFORE PAYMENT.

TUNG CHOW, North China.—"Will you please send me by mail the following books? * * Inclosed find five dollars. I hope that will cover postage, but should it not, I will remit the balance."—MRS. J. M. SHAW, Chefoo.

CONDÉ-SUR-NOIREAU, France.—"Please send me the following volumes from the ELZEVIR LIBRARY. * * * I inclose 50 cents."—F. JULLIEN, Professeur d' Anglais, Rue Roussean.

FROM JERUSALEM.—"Wisdom is the principal thing, therefore get wisdom. * * Apply thine heart unto instruction, and thine ears to the words of knowledge."—SOLOMON, King of Israel.

CIPHERED OVER in Vain!—"How Mr. Alden can give the eight volumes for seventy-five cents a volume, and this on good paper, and clear type, including the multitude of illustrations, is a thing we have ciphered over, but we fail to understand it."—Christian Leader, Bostou.

ILLUSTRATIONS Superior.—"This edition includes all the maps, notes, and illustrations of the edition for which $18 has heretofore been charged (here reduced to $2.75), and the illustrations are actually superior to those of the $18 edition."—Oregonian, Portland, Oregon.

"THE MARVELOUS cheapness of these profusely illustrated and handsomely bound volumes must provoke comment everywhere. The present edition includes the more than 400 really superb illustrations of the English edition."—Journal, Indianapolis.

"CERTAINLY one of the prettiest books to be found, whatever the price."—Methodist Recorder, Pittsburgh, Pa.

"THE ENTERPRISING publisher has put us under great obligations by giving us these works in so beautiful, cheap, and convenient form."—Lutheran Observer, Philadelphia.

QUEEN TITANIA.—"This dainty Elzevir edition is fit for Queen Titania's hand."—Methodist Magazine, Toronto.

ADMIRABLE.—"Put forth in such admirable shape as to increase their circulation among all classes."—Indianapolis Journal.

ALMOST.—"The volumes you sent are almost a miracle of cheapness combined with excellence."—JOHN S. WOOLSON, Attorney, Mt. Pleasant, Iowa.

MONEY Wanted!—"I never feel the want of money so much as when I look over your list of books."—F. N. GILTON, Pontiac, Mich.

"IF MR. ALDEN continues to do such excellent work as he is now doing, he will assuredly win the good wishes of all who are interested in cheap, good literature."—Sunday-School Times, Philadelphia.

PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON.—"The humblest subscriber to a mechanics' institute has easier access to sound learning than had either Solomon or Aristotle. Whoever reads English is richer in the aids to culture than Plato was."—From preface to The Intellectual Life.

MILLIONAIRE?—"Alden's publications are simply immense, and the prices very low. John will ne'er die a millionaire."—The Item, Huntsville, Texas.

JAY GOULD Beaten!—"I believe the country would lose less by the failure of Gould than John B. Alden. The loss of one would be in commerce, and by the other, in learning."—A. DAVIS, Du Quoin, Ill.

BOTTOM DOLLAR.—"John, you lead me into temptation. You draw the bottom dollar, by your winning way, and yet I freely give you absolution. Inclosed find $1.00."—REV. D. LUTHER ROTH, Lunenburg, Nova Scotia.

IRISHMAN'S Wish.—"I send you $12.20. If you had asked more you could have had it. As the Irishman said: 'May you live to ate the hen that scratches over yere grave!'"—REV. E. A. WHITWAM, Jonesville, Mich.

"WE CONGRATULATE Mr. Alden in his 'new departure' by which he includes in his publications the best works of the great masters of art illustrating literature."—Journal of Education, Boston.

"IT IS A REAL benefaction to that large class of people who have little money and much hunger after knowledge, that such books are now put within their reach."—Bible Banner, Philadelphia, Pa.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

Senator John Sherman favors the stoppage of the coinage of the silver dollar, or else making it 470 grains, instead of 412½, which would raise it to a gold standard and make it passable throughout the world. If this change were made, Mr. Sherman states that he believes the effect on trade would be magical.

The Agricultural Department reports farm products as tending lower in values. The average price of corn is 36½ cents, being highest in Florida (80 cents) and lowest in Nebraska (18 cents). Wheat averages 65 cents, against 91 cents a year ago; while the average for oats is 28 cents, the lowest ever reported by the department. The cotton average is between 9 and 9½ cents, and for potatoes the farm price is 40 cents per bushel.

A bill was introduced in the House by Mr. Beach to maintain the secrecy of the ballot in the election of representatives and delegates in congress. It provides for a separate uniform ballot upon which candidates are to be voted for.

Wade Hampton was re-elected United States Senator by the South Carolina Legislature, Tuesday, receiving all the votes but those of five negroes.

THE COUNTRY.

The Federal Grand Jury sitting in Chicago on Thursday reported indictments against J. C. Mackin, secretary of the Cook County Democratic Club; Arthur Gleason, chief clerk in the county clerk's office; Henry Biehl, vault clerk in the same office; Samuel C. Shields, Dr. Simon Strausser and Peter Hansbrough, judges of election in the second precinct of the eighteenth ward and Ed. Kelley and Mike Sullivan, election clerks in the same precinct. This is a list of those who are implicated in the election frauds in the 18th ward, including the men who signed the returns, the men into whose hands the package of ballots was given, and the man who ordered printed and into whose hands were delivered the counterfeit tickets found in the package when it was produced in court.

A. B. Wheeler, inventor of the Wheeler & Wilson sewing machine, was placed in an insane asylum, Wednesday.

Loggers in some of the northern pineries are reported to be in a wretched condition, some of the Swedes selling their labor for 10 cents a day. For food they are furnished rye bread and coffee, with salt meat three times a week.

Silas Sanders, colored, two month married, and a witness in the Crouch murder trial at Jackson, Mich., attempted suicide Thursday by cutting his throat. There have been so many murders, suicides and attempts at murder and suicide connected with this tragedy that the public should begin to take alarm. Daniel Holcomb and Jud. Crouch, who are on trial, and in whom all suspicions center, are one or both Freemasons.

Wilkinson Brothers' private bank at Syracuse, N. Y., failed, Wednesday, for about $500,000, preferences for $98,600 being given. The depositors are principally farmers, who will lose everything.

United States Judge McCoy became insane on the bench at Atlanta, Ga., Friday morning, and the bar prevented the transaction of business. He later made a harangue in the street, urging the killing of half the negroes and all the doctors. Insomnia is believed to have clouded his brain.

The sudden breaking out of fire in Gray, Toynton & Fox's candy factory at Detroit Friday evening, caused the girls employed in the second story to rush for the fire escape, in descending which one fell and was slightly hurt. Three girls were seen at a window, but a sudden burst of the flames drove them back and they were burned to death.

A storm Tuesday last upset several oyster fishers' boats in the Rappahannock river and Chesapeak bay, and fears are expressed that fifty persons lost their lives.

FOREIGN.

The French commander in Madagascar telegraphs that his troops now occupy Vohemar and Fort Embanion. The Havos fled southwest. The French suffered no loss. General Miot further telegraphs that on the 6th inst, after a march of fifteen hours, he captured the second fort south of Fort Vohemar. Two hundred Havos were slain and five guns captured. The French had four wounded.

A dispatch from Odessa to the London Times says the Turkish atrocities in Macedonia are increasing. Two hundred Christians have been murdered within the past few weeks, and three villages burned. Kidnapping is common and the inhabitants are afraid to leave their houses.

The French government has received information to the effect that 126 German officers have joined the Chinese forces. The war office has received a very pressing request by telegraph from the commander of the French forces in Tonquin for reinforcements.

Italian railway laborers threaten to burn the town of Port Rowan, Ont., unless they are paid by Wednesday. Troops are going forward and bloodshed is feared.

Capt. Dudley and mate of the wrecked English yacht Mignonette, who killed a boy named Parker, while on the wreck, in order to eat the flesh, have been sentenced to death. The Secretary of State for the Home Department advises the Queen to respite them. A later dispatch says the sentence was commuted to imprisonment for six months.

All London was intensely alarmed late Saturday afternoon by an attempt to blow up London bridge with dynamite. The attempt, however, proved an utter failure, as far as the design to demolish the structure was concerned. About £50 worth of window glass was broken in the vicinity. The bridge was not damaged. A strong force of police was put on guard and others sent to search for the parties who planned the destruction of the bride, but no arrests were made or clew obtained. Owing to the excitement and fear of a repition of the explosion, traffic was suspended for a time.

A dispatch from Dongola says: Prior to Gen. Wolseley's departure for the front he held a farewell interview with the Mudir, in the course of which the latter said: "You will find the people glad to see you. The rebels are scattering. The Berbereans are returning home and will not fight. You will find all the supplies you require, with any amount of cattle."

An explosion took place, Saturday, in the colliery of the Staatsbahn company at Anuna Steyrdorf, South Hungary, by which 75 men were killed, all husbands and fathers of families.

BUSINESS.

S. A. Reynolds, of Waverly, Pa., sends in six subscriptions and says, "I wish to say that, to my mind, the Cynosure is all right on the temperance question and in its support of Gov. St. John."

L. E. Lincoln, Boston, Mass., remits $2 for eight 8-week subscribers. This makes twenty-two within the past month.

We are also in receipt of $2 from Hope Davis, Huntley Grove, Ill., for eight 8-week subscriptions.

Rev. Isaac Bancroft adds another subscription for three months to his list.

John Ball also sends us one subscription for eight weeks.

A. C. Jennings sends $9 and six yearly subscriptions.

W. B. Stoddard sends thirteen subscriptions and says: "I have not a very large list this week. I have spent the last three days visiting friends; shall call this my vacation; go to work again to-day."

W. Amidon renews his subscription and says, "I furthermore promise to work for the Cynosure as I have opportunity."

Moses Shay sends his own and another's subscription for a year.

T. W. Palmer renews his subscription for six months and sends one for eight weeks.

H. H. Hinman sends one subscription for eight weeks.

D. Andrews writes: "I shall try and send a few names for the paper."

Mrs. Lovantia Green sends in two new names for one year, adding: "I mean to get more subscribers if possible."

H. W. Goddard sends in his renewal, and says: "I am glad to see that the reform work is to be pushed forward with vigor. I am in hopes that the time will come before very long when there will be a State Association in Maine."

Another trial subscriber sent in for a year by our agent Mr. J. Griffith.

W. W. Cromwell sends six dollars for a two years' subscription for himself and also one for two years for another person. It would save to the cause time and money if many would subscribe for two years instead of one.

Charles Ludwig of Washington Territory has taken the Cynosure on trial and now sends $2 to have the paper continued. He rejoices in the soul-cheering articles which he finds in it, and asks prayers that he may be of service to his Lord and Saviour.

Will you not act as agent for the Cynosure among your neighbors, that they may be led to discern clearly whether the Lord be God or the Baal of the secret lodge?

LETTERS CONTAINING CASH for Cynosure received during the week ending Dec. 13th:

THE CYNOSURE

has issued no special prospectus for the year 1885, but measures for increasing the value of the paper to every reader have not been neglected. The deservedly popular biographical sketches with portraits of eminent reformers, living and dead, will be continued. Our readers may expect during 1885 in this department sketches of HON. HENRY WILSON, late Vice President, DAVID BERNARD, JOHN QUINCY ADAMS, NATHANIEL COLVER, ADAM CROOKS, Chief Justice JOHN MARSHALL, CHARLES SUMNER, GERRIT SMITH, SAMUEL PLUMB, and the old CANANDAIGUA JAIL in which William Morgan was confined and from which he was kidnapped. The privilege is reserved of changing this list according to necessity or convenience, but the Cynosure readers may expect one illustrated paper a month during the year.

We have already a grand list of contributors and correspondents, but it will be better than ever in 1885. Information will be especially sought from correspondents in other lands of the workings of lodgery around the world, and a plan is under way to have reports from every part of the country, from thousands of corre spondents, of the work of the lodge and the victories of the truth over this great evil.

Another interesting feature, which was proposed several years ago, is a classification and brief account of the history and objects of each of the numerous secret lodges. Information for such a series of articles has been collected, so that we feel better able to begin so serious a task than when it was at first proposed. If the limits of the paper will allow it will be undertaken.

The latest and best REFORM STORY has been running some weeks and will continue through a considerable part of the year. It is worth twice and thrice the cost of the paper.

These are some of the attractions offered to the readers of the Cynosure during the year 1885. They are worth presenting to the consideration of thousands of new readers by the old friends of the paper. Let no such opportunity be neglected!

England and America are not too soon, and cannot be too urgent in pressing the claims of temperance before the Congo Conference. The Boston Traveller notes the fact that the largest cargo of New England rum ever shipped from the country has just gone to Africa and characterizes the business in these justly indignant words: "Thus do human greed, Satanic influence, and heartless indifference to the moral welfare of the African race, combine to obstruct the path of progress in the regeneration of the dark continent."

Some of the papers are sneering "sour grapes" at General Grant's letter refusing to accept a pension from the government for eminent services. This is unjust. The recommendation of the President's message was followed by a bill in the Senate for a pension of $5,000, which would have been carried undoubtedly. As the Cynosure maintained last spring after the great Grant-Ward failure, the acceptance of a pension would be a mark of dishonor which no glare of earlier glory could outshine. It would be a mark of recognized imbecility. Appeals to popular sympathy and wailing over the ex-President's rags and poverty are wholly superfluous. He has saved considerable from the wreck of his fortunes, and the fund of $250,000 raised a few years ago by the New York Times yields six per cent. interest. This fund is kept by trustees and cannot be squandered by the sons and partners of the General.

Prohibition is a national issue. The Secretary of War the other day sent to the Commissioners of the District a petition from fifty clerks of the Surgeon General's office, asking that the numerous saloons in proximity to their place of business be closed. The Surgeon General and his assistant gave their sanction to the plea, adding that investigation had satisfied them of the bad character of the saloons, which were a standing nuisance and disgrace. The Commissioners contemptuously ignored the petition, and relicensed the groggeries, saying they had a good police record and had complied with the laws. The keepers are now considering the advice of their friends to prosecute the assistant surgeon on account of his damaging statements. It is time prohibition was in power in Congress to stop not only such arrogance as this, but to outlaw the saloon business wherever that body has the power.

There was less perfection of arrangement and few of those attractions which draw immense crowds, at the opening of the New Orleans Exposition last week Tuesday, in comparison with the Centennial; but if the programme was less elaborate and more business-like, there were some striking features. A live President could not be obtained, but Mr. Arthur stood at one end of a telegraph wire in the White House, with the heads of departments and the foreign legations about him, while the Exposition crowd was at the other; and his quiet speech sounded just as well as if he had not been so far away. The passing of these messages between two waiting audiences reminds us of the little Sabbath school book on the telegraph which very happily used the invention to illustrate the wonderful communication a man may have with his Maker, who, unseen to human eye, yet regards the faintest message, the humblest cry, and extends the hand which controls all the forces of the universe to aid even a little child.

The completion of the Washington Monument and the approaching celebration of the event reminds some of the old residents of that city of the "Know-Nothing" days, thirty years and more ago. The Monument Association had applied to all governments with which our relations were friendly for contributions of blocks of stone, with appropriate inscriptions. The Pope was then maintaining a semblance of temporal power and sent a block of African marble taken from the old Temple of Concord, and inscribed, "Rome to America." Notice of the fact aroused the Know-Nothing spirit. A Baltimore preacher prepared an address to the people of the United States against the Pope's block. One night a party surrounded the watchman in his sentry-box, and carried off the offending stone toward the Potomac on a wheelbarrow, and it is supposed to be somewhere still in the bottom of the stream. The incident suggests a profitable disposition of a number of stones sent from Masonic bodies with their offensive carvings. Let the builders reject them, following the traditions of their own Royal Arch degree.

But the New Orleans Exposition, unlike its predecessor, has begun by ignoring God's ordinance of a day of rest and worship, and on the first Sabbath was thrown open to the public; and, to make the flimsy excuse that the working people could visit the exposition at no other time seem to be a fact, the price of admission was reduced one-half and religious services, so-called, were attempted, as Jeroboam set up his calf at Bethel, as near to the Jerusalem temple as he could get. A Unitarian preacher was engaged and a band from half-heathen Mexico—and so this religious performance, without Christ, and whose sole end was dollars and cents, inaugurates a season of Sabbath violation to be protracted until June. The Protestant churches have spoken strongly against the evil but have been disregarded. Their word may yet be heeded and this stain be wiped off from the programme of the exposition.

Miss Eunice F. Ward, who is associated with Mrs. Mumford in the Faith Mission at Phillippopolis, Bulgaria, writes to the Free Methodist an appreciative word for the American platform: "Well, if the prohibition ticket is not carried this fall, I think it will be some time. It seems to me that every Christian should vote the American ticket, and sustain that platform. I especially like the second and third clauses: 'That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.' 'That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.' Of course I like the eight: 'We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.'"

AFTER THE FIGHT AND DEFEAT.

BY REV. HENRY T. CHEEVER.

From its high outlook of observation into the political heavens, at the great West, the Cynosure may like to know and to record the views taken under bleak New England skies, of what the French call the fait accompli of the Presidential election. Now that the grim, dismal fact of a small plurality for the Democratic electors in New York is ascertained, thus giving the Presidency to Cleveland, men submit to the same as to the known will of God. But they ask themselves and one another, What meaneth this? and whence cometh it to pass, that so large a majority of the intelligent, patriotic and pious are disappointed and overborne by the baser elements of society in our large cities? It is not to be denied that figuratively speaking according to Scripture, wrath is kindled unto the uttermost against St. John and his followers, who snatched or diverted a well-earned victory from the Republican party.

Your correspondent was one that beforehand steadily affirmed the folly and danger of risking the cause of Prohibition in the States, by making it a national issue, when the margin was so small as to numbers between the two great parties. He held that it would have been honorable, patriotic and prudent in the highest degree for St. John to have yielded to the considerations presented with so much clearness and cogency by President Woolsey and others, and to have withdrawn from the canvass and candidacy at the last hour. In a communication to the Massachusetts Spy, of this city, on the "Right and duty of Prohibitionists," I wrote what it is not out of place to quote here:

It has been repeatedly said to me of late, "Are you, a Prohibitionist, going to vote for Blaine?" My reply is, that in voting for Mr Blaine I vote as I pray. I vote as a patriot, a prohibitionist, a Christian. I vote, too, as a consistent Republican abolitionist, on the line upon which I have steadily voted ever since 1856, with the great party that will have it in its power, by a present success, to secure and make practical the right of suffrage to our colored countrymen—the laboring men of the South. I want by my vote to do now for them (the southern freedmen), and in them for our common country, what one of the race did for us in the war of the revolution. * * * * *

Cool and calm, with malice toward none, with charity toward all, with reason clear, I want by my vote, in common with many Prohibitionists who think in like manner, to execute a patriot's honest wrath upon the saloon-supporting democracy. I want, by such an intelligent, well-aimed ballot, to take at once the life of that party that is as hostile now to prohibition, as it once was to emancipation, as it still is to equal rights for the freedmen of the South.

We want to make an end of that false Democratic party by a Waterloo defeat, from which it shall never recover.

Oh! for the faith to read the signs aright,
And from the angle of thy perfect sight,
See Truth's white banner floating on before;
And the good cause, despite of venal friends
And base expedients, move to noble ends;
See Peace with Freedom make to Time amends,
And, through its clouds of dust, the threshing floor,
Flailed by thy thunder, heaped with chaffless grain.

That I did not fail to read the signs aright is proven by the result. Everywhere in the East the cause of prohibition, the temperance reform, has received a set back which I fear it will take long years to recover from. Following the triumphs of the Democracy all the large towns and cities in this Commonwealth, but three, vote for license with largely increased majorities. In this city of 70,000 the majority for license is 2,123, when last year it was 762, and the year before was reduced to 117.

To the objection that during the last quarter of a century of unbroken Republican rule, and by its indifference the liquor traffic has steadily grown stronger, and drunkenness has increased to the appalling extent we witness to-day, it is enough to say that the increase of drunkenness in the country at large, and the great cities, especially, during the period that the Republican party has had the ascendency, is not due to Republican misrule, nor to the natural increase of native Americans. But it is due largely to the enormous influx during that period of aliens, with the drinking tastes and habits of the old world, crowding our cities, swelling the ranks of the Democracy, populating and empowering the dangerous classes, playing into the hands of unscrupulous politicians, creating a hungry market for brewers and whisky-makers, and all the while displacing and corrupting native Americans by force of numbers, and by domestic usages and habits of indulgence much easier to imitate and learn, than to resist.

The Republican party has had it in its power, if the leaders would have allowed it, to have given hospitality to the temperance reform, and to have done much toward curbing the liquor traffic; and it has suffered a sad defeat for not so doing. The single great mistake in the late brilliant Republican campaign was the early avowal by Mr. Blaine, in his speech of congratulation to the Republicans of Maine, upon the September elections, that he did not vote for the prohibitory constitutional amendment in that State. But this imprudent and uncalled for avowal by Mr. Blaine did not alter the fact that in the Republican party were comprised the largest number of the friends of prohibition, and that in the success of that party appeared to lie the chief hope of moral reform.

Hence it was that I said to prohibitionists just before the election, "If we, prohibitionists, will so vote, on the national ticket, for Republican electors, however we vote on the State ticket as local prohibitionists, we shall help win a victory that will ensure both to temperance, freedom, and the protection of American industry and manufactures. We shall lift the Republican party to a higher moral plane. It will be in our power to modify, if not to entirely control its policy as to prohibition; and we shall be laying the foundation for the great political party of the future, on the principle of protection of the American Home against the destructive and demoralizing liquor traffic."

Has not the event justified the rightfulness of that position? Could I now write a platform for the party it would be something like this:

WHEREAS, the great Republican Party and its grand leaders, foremost of living American statesmen, have suffered defeat on account of ignoring the temperance reform, it is for the party now to rally and write upon its banner, The ballot for women and protection for the American home and American industry against the depraving domestic liquor traffic and all oath-bound orders of secrecy.

Worcester, Dec. 10, 1884.

THE TEMPLE OF HONOR.—IV.

BY ALBERT M. PAULL.

From all classes of society is drawn the material for the Temple of Honor. The rum-seller, the moral man, the sot, the church-member and the rank infidel, all are represented in a heterogeneous union which aspires to rival the sacred bond of Christian love in the church of Christ. Listen to the language of the Manual:

"Ye are brethren. Life-lasting ties knit you together. A common bond of sympathy unites you in one. Your hopes, your fears, your aspirations after the unseen are all associated with the idea that ye are brethren. The mysterious sympathy which inspires our whole order with the emotions of one single mind, the community of happiness which spreads through all under the thrill of a single joy; the deep and yearning tenderness excited by the danger of one, are the instructive indications of our oneness of feeling and interest and love." p. 33.

Again:

"Brotherly love is the chain that unites us as one. Its golden links entwine about every heart, while angel hands fasten it to the Throne on High." [!] p. 79.

This motley company, bound so closely together, is first of all pledged to total abstinence and temperance work as the order understands it, as the first step toward satisfying those "aspirations after the unseen" spoken of above. Temperance work as the order understands it, is mainly the building up of the order, as any session of a Grand Temple will show.

As a second step, each member is dedicated, as a templar, to the work of the Temple of Honor. In the first degree, representing Truth, which, by the way, is not numbered as one of the degrees, he is called an initiate, and the ceremony, an initiation; in the following degrees he is called a novitiate, and the ceremony, a novitiation. He is also called a neophyte, which means one regenerated, a convert. As such, he is instructed, through the conferring of the degrees, in the theology of the order and its "high and holy" duties, which he is expected respectively to advocate and practice. This is the work to which he has been dedicated, i. e., solemnly set apart, and that with all the solemnity the order can command. That these initiations and "novitiations" are considered by the order as dedications, and that they are closely related to the salvation offered by the order, see p. 37: "By all our hopes above, we're dedicate to love." Also p. 53: "No height can be too lofty for your aspirations if you seek that eminence by purity. Beneath the dome of this temple, and within the spray of its sparkling fountain, acknowledge your solemn dedication to purity." This dedication to Temple of Honor service, of course annuls all previous dedications. The professed Christian who thus allows himself to be consecrated is thenceforth a templar, but no longer a Christian consecrated to the work of Christ.

What is the essence of the degrees to which the neophyte is dedicated? The answer comes from the Manual, "Eternal Truth." See p. 13: "Stand forth the champion of our eternal principles," and p. 16, "Yon temple, brilliant with the light of its nine-pointed star, [notice it is not the light of the Bible] is a symbol of our noble order. * * * * By its ritual embodying eternal truths * * * * it lays hold of the strongest elements of success and perpetuity."

What are these "eternal truths?" or in other words, What is the theology of the Temple of Honor? The Manual will inform us. A superficial examination of this book will impress one with its jumbling verbosity, interspersed with pious expressions culled from the vocabulary of Christian literature, mystifying rather than enlightening the reader. A Christian naturally would put a Christian interpretation upon such words as truth, bigotry, true God, triune God, saving knowledge, regeneration, our Redeemer, the redeemed, etc., which would be utterly foreign to their import here as he would learn upon deeper study, for instance, "the redeemed" on p. 143 is interchangable with "each faithful templar" in the same sentence, and so can mean nothing more, or, at least, can refer to no other party, and must include every faithful templar whether he believes in Christ or not.

The key note to the theology of this order is, that salvation is offered to "each faithful templar," i. e., one who is faithful to his vows and obligations. See p. 57. "You cannot be a templar, true and faithful, without the strictest fidelity to them." Beside sthat, the essentials may be summed up as follows: The payment of a sum of money and acceptance of the creed of the order, without which no one could gain access into the temple; and a severing oneself, p. 9, "from all that intoxicates and weakens * * * and with unflinching purpose resolve to carry out the principles taught within our temple." A belief in Jesus Christ and consequently in the Christian's God will not debar one from the order any more than a belief in the Koran would, such matters being considered immaterial, from a templar's point of view, but no one of the above named essentials can be dispensed with. Bearing these things in mind we will proceed.

TEMPLE OF HONOR THEOLOGY.

Of the deity, called by templars, God, (emblem, a point within a circle) p. 132. "God is the center and circumference of his own works, perfect—over all, through all, beneath all, everywhere present, yet one and invisible—without beginning of years or end of days, from everlasting to everlasting. This simple emblem, everywhere equally distant from its center, perfect in all its parts, without beginning or ending, is to us an emblem of the perfection, omnipresence and unity of the Godhead." That is all that is said of the deity. No Christ, no Holy Spirit, consequently not the God of the Christian. A belief in Christ and the Holy Spirit is not required of any templar, nor is there an emblem of Christ or the Holy Spirit in the sacred books. The emblem of the deity is derived from ancient sun-worship.

Of Truth (emblem, the triangle) p. 88. "Truth has three essential elements, Wisdom, Power and Justice. These attributes are co-existent with the Godhead. Without them, or any one of them, God would cease to exist." This is not saving truth as Christians understand the term. The doctrine of the atonement is ignored by this order.

Of the Temple of Honor (emblem, nine-pointed star within a temple). In the initiation, when this emblem is exhibited, all respond, "Hail, heaven-born light!" See p. 144: "This fane divine;" and p. 72: when "death shall overthrow these pillars * * * the hand divine will re-erect them in the land of bliss," all of which goes to show that the Temple of Honor claims to be a divine institution, and thus disputes the right of the church to that position maintained for nineteen centuries.

Of its sacred books. They are inspired. This follows logically the preceding dogma. If the institution is divine, the "eternal truths" contained in its sacred books must also be of divine origin. Their sufficiency to save every templar is correlative proof of their supposed inspiration, p. 59. "Fidelity to these will lead you aright * * * though no other guide may appear."

Of this brotherhood (emblem, the pillars of the temple). Of the closest spiritual ties, all look forward to a happy eternity. This has already been discussed in the opening sentence.

Of sin. Of sin against God, as such, or of sorrow for sin and repentance, nothing is said, but before baptism (p. 44), the neophyte is required to renounce the "common vices" of gambling, fraudulent dealing and blasphemy. On p. 43, he is taught that by such vices "the soul is debauched and immortality lost."

Having arrived at this point, we naturally anticipate the notion of this order concerning the way of salvation. It is the same old delusion first spoken in the Garden of Eden: "Ye shall not surely die." Make yourself better and you will be saved. A human soul progressing from "the imperfect up to the true and perfect." A templar, living out the "eternal truths" taught within the temple, and developing his character until he attains such a state as to win the approval of his deity. A few quotations to this point—p. 29: "Yes, Love is the quickening spirit and vital essence of all things. All beings and all worlds make known its divinity; for it lifts all souls to God, and makes the universe a temple to his glory; for 'God is all in all' and 'he is love.' Such are the teachings of love; and to such love is our temple dedicated. Let us proceed, and ever bear in mind our high dedication;" p. 36: "Let us love him who hath created and blessed us, and the love that he shall impart to us will elevate and purify our natures. Love is the light and the life of our spiritual being, the beauty and blessedness of our souls;" p. 38: "To those who have pledged themselves to the duties our order enjoins, there is no permanent rest this side of the upper temple," p. 39. "Only those whose hearts beat with sincerity, and whose minds are rational with the light of truth can enter our temple," (temple of Purity, or in other words, only those can take the second degree); p. 46: "The new and holy Jerusalem, * * * is the home of Purity, and the redeemed [faithful templars] from all nations shall walk in its transcendent light; and the song they shall sing is the song of triumphant Purity;" p. 48: "Only the virtuous love virtue and are happy. To them the voice of love is pure * * * and its pleasures a perpetual fount of bliss, * * * and heaven is the gift of her right hand;" p. 50: "Purity will reunite its golden links in bowers brighter than Eden ever knew;" p. 53: "Each mind you shall enlighten with the pure teachings of truth shall be a star in the crown of your rejoicing;" p. 54: "Control that immortal spirit by a purified will and it will guide you aright;" p. 69: "Fidelity to the truth always gives the victory. On earth it crowns its votaries with joys, and in heaven introduces them into a holy brotherhood;" p. 80: "Holy Charity is the bond of perfectness. It overlooks the sectional differences of opinion, and claims its children among those whose motives are right and whose deeds are pure. * * * He who seeth in secret may give the promised reward." "Cherish these virtues and you shall receive your reward here and hereafter. * * * Because you have patiently persevered, and humbly labored for the success of the right * * * He who numbers the hairs of your head shall crown you with immortal life beyond the grave;" p. 114. "Thou God seest me, you should never forget; then your deeds will bear his most scrutinizing glance and be approved;" p. 123: "The grave has no terrors for the virtuous and the pure;" p. 141: "As you have expressed an unshaken confidence in God and his Word, you need not fear, for out of his Word are drawn our principles." "Of one heart and one mind, we labor together * * till the light of the star of Fulfillment [Temple of Honor] shall penetrate every heart, [excepting always the poor man, the unsound man, and the colored man] and dispel the darkness * * * till beneath all exteriors * * * integrity and uprightness of heart shall dwell, and the soul be prepared to look in confidence upon him," etc.; p. 224: "As Knights of the Ancient Temple we draw our swords for the right, and point to heaven as our final home."

These quotations are sufficient although many more, very important ones, might be given, had we the space. To me it is a sad thought that intelligent beings should waste their time and money to build up such a religion, a snare and a delusion to every soul trusting in it, while the Gospel of Christ, glorious and free, and full of grace and truth, goes begging. It is one of the mysteries of God's providence that just as the harvest of the world is fully ripe to be garnered, these secret societies should darken the air like locusts, and settling down to destroy the toil of centuries, threaten to greatly reduce, if not to empty entirely, the granaries of the church of God. If Paul were on earth how he would rebuke those professed Christians who cling so tenaciously to this new religion.

"I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ, unto another gospel, which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the Gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other Gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we have said before, so now I say again, If any man preach any other Gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." Gal. 1:6.

I have answered my opponent. If I am in error on any point I am ready to be corrected by proof, but not by assertion. If through God's grace I may have set the true animus of the Temple of Honor in a clearer light than it has appeared in before, to God, the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, be the honor and the glory forever. Amen.

Providence, R. I.

LAST DAYS OF JOHN WYCLIFFE.

He died at his post. He was conducting divine service on the last Sunday of 1384, with his loved and loving people of Lutterworth. Paralysis came down to him with noiseless, air-down touch, as of an angel's beckoning finger. He was borne from his church like a warrior from a field of battle. He was at rest. His last days had been twenty years of stormy strife, in which every day had seen a battle, and every battle a victory, and now came three days heavenly-peaced. His soul overflowed with gladness, a kindly light was on his face, and he seemed to breathe the air of paradise. In the closing hours of the year he entered upon the eternal years amid the solemn troops and sweet societies of the true and the brave on high. Devout men carried Wycliffe to his burial, and made great lamentation over him. The church of St. Mary, that in which he preached, and in which he was buried, still overlooks the pleasent town of Lutterworth. It is of the pointed architecture that prevailed in the century before Wycliffe, and though its boast is of but one great and illustrious name, we look on it with a concentered sensibility unfelt in Westminister Abbey. There hangs his portrait on the vestry wall; in that pulpit he was preaching when "heaven's usher of the white rod" touched him to escort him elsewhere; on that table he wrote; in that chair he died; he even wore that tattered robe, a very shred of which one might beg for memory! And the quiet waters of that stream were once strewn with his ashes! The lapse of time that deals heavily on this old building, leaves that still beautiful which once was so, and the associations here are fresh and unwithering. The thoughtful tourist will rather leave some places of more pretense unvisited. Years passed on, and up to the end of the century the dawn of reformation grew warmer and brighter. Other times then came, as we have already indicated. In 1400 Chaucer died. John of Gaunt was already gone. Only one of Wycliffe's great protectors, Percy, father of Hotspur, was remaining. Henry IV., following Richard II., gave all his influence at Rome, and the followers of Wycliffe fell on evil times and evil tongues. They found no comforter, none to hinder the swift wrath of their foes from its dire sweep of vengeance. Their master's writings were publicly burned, and every curse found in the Romish formulas of anathema was heaped upon his name. But how could they degrade him to whom the Master had said, "Well done!" How disquiet him who had entered into the joy of his Lord? One weak display of hatred like that which disgraces the foes of Oliver Cromwell was within their reach. The bones of the heretic, buried in the chancel of the church where he had preached, were defiling a consecrated ground. His enemies had long chafed in vexation over his peaceful death and burial. "Strange, indeed," says Fuller, "that a hare hunted with so many packs of dogs should die at last quietly sitting on his form!"

In 1428, when in the ruin of the Lollards all spiritual life seemed trodden out in England—when the profligacy of the "club parliament" and the avarice and cruelty of the army in France blackened the English name—when in all Christendom the one pure, heroic figure was Joan of Arc—in this midnight of church and State the last foul deed was done. Wycliffe's remains unearthed and burned upon the bridge spanning the little river Swift, that runs past Lutterworth, and the ashes thrown into the stream to defile English soil no longer. Rejected from consecrated ground, he gained a boundless sepulcher. "The whole earth," says Pericles,, in his funeral oration, "is the tomb of illustrious men." Fuller says, "This brook did convey his ashes to the Avon, Avon into the Severn, Severn into the narrow seas, they into the main ocean; and thus the ashes of Wycliffe were the emblems of his doctrine, which is now dispersed the wide world over." So, indeed it is dispersed! On what shore has the Bible in English not been read! What laws and institutions of our race has it not affected! In what country has it not caused some one to say, "My spiryt hath gladid in God my healthe!" (From the Magnificat, Luke 1: 46.) It has influenced every generation that has "hastened stormfully across the stage out of the darkness east into the darkness west."

In 1455, seventy years after Wycliffe's death, the first book was printed. It was the Mazarin Bible in Latin, of which six copies are said to be now existing; one being in the Lenox library of New York, another at Hartford. About twenty years later Caxton printed a Bible in England. Thus, within a century came two great Biblical epochs of translation—Latin into English, and from penmanship into print. Think of the slow toil of Wycliffe's penman, and then note that since 1804 Bible societies alone (to say nothing of other publishers) have printed and distributed more than 180,000,000 Bibles, Testaments and portions of Scripture! But we must take our leave of the great schoolman, translator, reformer and Protestant. It is fitting to pause at the five-hundreth anniversary of his death, the last day of this year. "Wist ye not that this daye is a prince, nay, a greate manne fallen doune in Israel?" The lips of those that can speak well should rehearse his virtues and his toils, and all who love and have freedom by the truth, should glorify God in him.—Exchange.

MORMONDOM.

The revival of the Mormon question naturally follows the report of the Utah commission, the recommendation of the President's message, and the bill of Senator Cullom, of Illinois, setting aside the present terrritorial government for a commission appointed by the President. A mass meeting is appointed in Chicago for Tuesday of this week, at which the leading address will be by the Rev. R. G. McNeice, of the Presbyterian church, Salt Lake city. His late address before the Presbyterian ministers of the city covers nearly the whole ground of debate. It was thus reported in the Inter Ocean:

The attempt to establish a fraudulent priesthood in Utah was the central evil of Mormonism. Congress, with its four hundred and odd members, had tried to prevent it, but were now indifferent. Our last three Presidents had felt it to be their duty to warn the people of the danger of Mormonism. The people who lived in Utah were competent to speak of its dangers. Governor Murray had said the dangers were so great that our government should act promptly. Allan G. Campbell, the contestant for Mormon Cannon's seat in Congress, said that in Utah there was a government within a government almost as dangerous as slavery to the peace of the Nation. An ex-Congressman had said that no power had been given to the Mormons that had not been abused. Judge Goodwin, of the Salt Lake Tribune, said that polygamy was a deadly menace to free government. The speaker then remarked that the evidence showed that the purpose of the leaders of Mormonism was the establishment of a separate and independent government of their own, an empire which would succeed every other on the continent. This accounted for their zeal in compassing sea and land, and planting colonies. Orson Pratt, a leader, had said the Mormon government was the only legal government. Brigham Young had declared that they would become a sovereign State—an independent nation, and to get rid of polygamy they would have to spend $300,000,000 for prisons, and that polygamy was a terror to republican governments. President Taylor says that the Latter Day Saints would control the destinies of the world as a kingdom. "The history of Mormonism," said the speaker, "had been one of strife outside of Utah. It was against three institutions dear to the American people, the home, the school, and a free State. The attitude of the Mormon leaders was one of bitter hostility to all of these. Home was blotted out entirely. The wife, in law, had no interest in the husband's estate. It had abolished all laws against the grosser social crimes. There was no law against incest, fornication or adultery. The ballot was given women, but they were told to vote for the Mormon system or be cut off from the church. They hate free schools. A Mormon had said he would rather throw his child into hell than send it to a public school. There was no free government in Utah. The territory was divided into twenty-one states or districts. These were subdivided into 265 wards, each having a bishop and his subordinate officers. A more terrible engine of oppression could not be conceived. The people did not think or speak for themselves. Priesthood dictates to them how they shall talk, at what store they shall purchase, and what school they shall attend. Priests talked of constitutional liberty in the Tabernacle Sunday, while others chuckled in their sleeves at the farce they were playing. Their mission work was to inveigle foreigners to the country by misrepresentation about the benefits to accrue to them under our land laws. They had a vast sum of money set aside with which to subsidize prominent Americans in their interests. Bancroft, the historian, who was there recently, was told that if he would write in his history of Utah certain things, they would take 240 sets of his complete works, which would give him $40,000. The progress of Mormonism is shown by the fact that twenty-seven years ago they were a few hundred people; they now occupy a territory larger than the whole of New England, New Jersey, and several other States combined. There was more wealth in Utah than in any other equal area on the continent. Crimes are perpetrated against religion, loyal and worthy men are assassinated. The Mountain Meadow massacre was perpetrated in the name of the priesthood. Why should the American people trim off the sprouts of this evil which would grow again? Let them uproot the tree. (Applause.) Senator Cullom's bill was considered amply sufficient to settle the whole case. (Applause.) It provided for nine commissioners to take the place of the present legislators at a nominal salary. The Gospel of the Divine Savior would yet transform Utah into one of the Christian States. Help us to bring it about." (Applause.) In reply to questions Dr. McNeice said that one-third of the population of Utah were polygamists, two-fifths were foreigners and ignorant. There was plenty of evidence to show that large numbers of Mormons were disaffected. There were 4,000 Mormon children in the Gentile schools. The way they secured land was to do as Brigham Young did, put a house on four wheels and locate it on the adjoining corners of four quarter sections of land and get men to share, so they lived on each one of the sections. Brigham secured 18,000, acres in this way. The population was 132,000, of which 92,000 were members of the church, and 27,000 of this number were members of the priesthood, or one overseer to three and a half people. Mormonism, if allowed to go on, would not only control the whole United States, but the whole world, and the day was near at hand, unless stringent measures were taken, that Mormonism would be put down with blood as was slavery. This condition of things could not be allowed to go on.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS:

OR

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR.

BY E. E. FLAGG, AUTHOR OF "HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

Stepheu Howland, on the contrary, had no party fetters to break. He bclieved the time had come for all true men to separate themselves from factional interests and vote only for candidates that would truly represent their convictions; and we will not pretend that he had not his own private, yet most worthy, ambition to become a leader in this new party of truth and righteousness. So he stood upon the platform primed to the fingers' ends with facts and figures; feeling sure that truth, invincible, eternal, was on his side, and with a great deal more faith in his power to convince the crowd before him of that fact than if he had been a little older or a little wiser. But though composed of all the incongruous elements mentioned above, it was a good-natured crowd, ready to laugh and applaud any specially clever hit; and Stephen Howland had the faculty of making a brilliant off-hand speech on almost any subject.

"What has the Republican party done? I ask" he said, in closing. "You point to the broken shacklcs of four million slaves. But who thirty years ago in the legislative halls of this very State voted for a law that should rescind every hunted fugitive, man, woman, or child, back to the master from whose brutality they had escaped, and made it a penal act to offer them even a cup of cold water in the name of our common Lord? Who but the very man on whom the Republican party of this State now proposes to bestow gubernatorial honors! You point me to a Union preserved through seas of blood and tears. Far be it from me to speak a word which should be a blot on the glorious record; but who, while ostensibly serving his country in the field, was silent partner in a company for cheating the Government and its brave defenders with shoddy contracts? Again I repeat, who but the very man the Republican party now delights to honor?

"But let these things pass. Time is a great conqueror of prejudices, and the gallant General is doubtless on the way to make as good a Prohibitionist as he is now an anti-slavery man. Perhaps the Republican party can afford to wait for him. It is good at waiting. [Laughter.] It has done nothing else since it came into power; but the people can't wait. This red-handed Herod who slaughtered the innocents must be dethroned [applause]; and what more fitting than that this same Republican party which dealt the death-blow to slavery with the sword should strangle intemperance at the ballot-box. So we have said, so we have hoped through all its delays, its compromises, its persistent ignoring of the great question at issue. Like the mother of Sisera as she looked through the lattice, we have cried, 'Why is his chariot so long in coming? Why tarry the wheels of his chariot?' And the wise among us have answered; yea, we have returned answer to ourselves, 'Have they not sped? have they not divided the prey?' [Laughter and applause.] Yes; that is the trouble. Sisera won a great victory a score of years ago, and he has been busy dividing the spoil ever since. Meanwhile shall we sit still while an enemy steals the wealth of our nation, desolates our homes, and slays not its tens but its hundreds of thousands, or quit us like men, like freemen, by casting our votes to-morrow for Col. Hicks and prohibition?

"What we want, what we demand of the Republican party, is present action, not a barren record of past achievements, however glorious. This want remains unmet. This demand has been received with open or silent contempt. It has quarreled over office spoils, split hairs over the tariff question, and passed bills to restrict Chinese emigration; but on the monstrous evil of the liquor traffic, an evil which is eating out the very vitals of our nation, it has nothing to say. Parties die, principles live. The Republican party totters to-day on the brink of dissolution, but the sublime doctrines enunciated by her first leaders cannot die. They are everlasting as eternity. When men are dead we bury them; when parties are dead we do or should do the same—whether in hopes of a future immortality must depend in either case on the question whether they have lived worthy of that immortality. I, for one, have a great deal of faith in the Republican party, so much that I can help bury it without a tear in the firm belief that it will rise again [applause] baptized with a new name, its mantle of old corruptions dropped, and animated once more with the spirit of its early founders. As one on whom a double portion of that spirit has fallen, I name the Prohibition nominee for the governorship of this State, Colonel Gail Hicks—a man in all respects worthy the support of every true citizen. I call upon all such without any regard to previous political affiliations to go to the polls resolved to vote, not for a party but a man, not for the saloon but the home, not for the lie of the rumseller but the truth of God, not for license but for prohibition."

There had been slight attempts at disturbance from the license element, which, however, did not amount to much beyond a few groans and hisses that were effectually silenced in loud and long continued applause when the young orator ended his speech.

"Good timber in that fellow now," muttered Martin Treworthy, who stood in the crowd, flashing keen approval from beneath his shaggy eyebrows, while Nelson Newhall close by was contributing his share to the burst of acclamation with an enthusiasm not to be mistaken.

The next to occupy the platform was Col. Morrison, editor of the Jacksonville Patriot, a stirring Decoration-day orator, a Mason, and a Grand Army man. He perfectly agreed with the position taken by the first speaker in regard to the rum traffic. He was a Prohibitionist to the backbone, but did not believe that the Republican party was dead or in a dying condition. It was still sound at the core for all the abuses and corruptions of party managers. If brought back to the purity of first principles it could extinguish intemperance as easily as it had slavery; and he put it to their common sense—one could always trust the common sense of an American audience even in the fever of political excitement—whether prohibition would come soonest by working for it in the ranks of an old and established party, or by joining a third, which, as it lacked all the elements of popularity and strength, must be years in achieving even a doubtful success. For his part he preferred the half loaf to no loaf at all. Why give their votes to the Democratic nominee and thus help to secure a triumph for the saloon? General Putney had been caluminated by his political enemies, and these calumnies he was sorry to hear repeated by the eloquent young speaker who had preceded him. He could state from personal knowledge that General Putney was a consistent temperance man, who could be depended on to enforce the law. True, he had once voted a pro-slavery bill in a pro-slavery era. That era had passed forever along with the days of witchcraft in which the good and learned Puritan, Judge Sewell, knew no better than to commit judicial murder. Let him who had no sin of ignorance to answer for cast the first stone."

"The Colonel means to be elected Representative to Congress next year," said Martin Treworthy, in another grim aside. "No half loaf of prohibition for him, but a longer nibble at the whole loaves and fishes of the Republican party."

The next speaker, Dr. Haynesworth, agreed with all the main points of Col. Morrison's speech, and could confirm his statements by remarking that he had been told only the day before by one of the most prominent of the Prohibition leaders that he was in constant correspondence with the General and could vouch for his temperance principles.

"There is treachery, O Ahaziah!" muttered Martin under his breath. "But this ain't the first time I've known the leader of one hostile army to be in correspondence with the other side."

The doctor deprecated discord between brethren. Prohibitionists should wear the same colors or there was continual danger of mistaking each other with fatal results to the cause. He would be willing to work for a third party if temperance men everywhere would join it, but as a matter of fact the large majority were faithful to old political friendships; and he was more and more convinced that no better standing-place for union could be found thau that same Republicau party in which they had been nurtured, which had once so gloriously lead the vanguard of Reform, and might again. And he drew such a glowing picture of that happy time when all differences, forgotten in the joy of victory, high license and low license men, prohibitionists and moral suasionists, should lie down together like the lion and the lamb of prophecy, that it provoked another side remark from Martin Treworthy:

"This is going to be like the witches' cauldron"—for, unlettered backwoodsman though he was, Martin kept a copy of Shakespeare in his hermitage, which he occasionally studied in the intervals between his Bible and his newspaper—" 'black spirits and white, white spirits and gray, mingle, mingle, ye that mingle may.' An out-and-out speech for prohibition might ruin his chance to be mayor."

Stephen had been led to suppose that all the speakers would be unanimous for a third party, and he was simply astonished at this unexpected change of base. He felt that he had been treated unfairly, for though he would not have altered his speech one iota, had he known beforehand what was to be the tenor of the other addresses, it would have prevented his speaking at all and thus saved him from the awkwardness of having to defend his position among assumed friends. But to hear this weak apologizing for party corruption and misrule added a feeling of shame and disgust to his sense of injury; and when the climax was reached by claiming General Putney as a temperance man, his old lie-hating, truth-loving Puritan blood stirred within him. When he attempted to answer, however, there was a scene of tumult between the saloon element which sought to prevail by dint of noise, and the cries of "Go on," "Give it to 'em," and sundry similar exclamations from the third party men, who knew their champion when they saw him, complicated still more by a settled disposition on the part of the managers of the meeting to make him reply at a disadvantage by allowing him only five minutes, on the pretence that there were a number of others yet to speak.

But Stephen bethought himself of a certain newspaper paragraph which had attracted his attention sufficiently to cut out and store up in his pocket-book for future use, and which, produced at the right moment, would be just the thing to turn the tables on these political time-servers. So quietly remarking that he believed it to be one of the laws of parliamentary usage that he who makes the opening speech should also make the closing one, he waited till all had said their say, including one or two rather discouraged advocates for a third party, followed by another seeker after loaves and fishes, who devoted himself to picking up the chips in the wake of Messrs. Morrison and Haynesworth, Stephen rose to his feet and simply observed that as there seemed much coufusion of opinion as to General Putney's prohibition principles, he would, to set all doubts at rest, read his own testimony on that point at a recent political gathering: "The time has not come for us to take up the temperance issue with safety, and I repeat once more I am not in sympathy with the fanatics who are trying to force this question on the Republican party, knowing that it will bring disruption if not absolute ruin thereto."

JOHN WYCLIFFE.

Wycliffe! Now half a thousand years are sped
Since to the music of our English tongue
Thy thin white fingers cunningly did wed
What holy men of old have said or sung!

First Protestant! First scholar for the poor!
The first to tell in modern, fireside speech
To homely folk in their own cottage door
What living truths those sacred lips did teach.

As swims into the sky the early star
To lead from shades the brightness of the day,
So through the centuries thou art seen afar,
Clear, when our dawn was misty, cold and gray.

Hard was thy task, O scholar, struggling on
Against the bitter hate of monk and priest,
Worried and sick; and yet thy work, full done,
Still follows thee, now entered into rest.

Bend from thy rest, if it be given, O saint!
Pale, worn and baffled in thy toil no more.
Hark! how thy language, tuneful, clear and quaint,
Tells the glad tidings upon every shore.

What though thine ashes in their feeble wrath
Thy foes upon the wandering waters flung?
The waters, conscious, smoothed for them a path
O'er all the tides where lands and isles have sprung.

And when thy work's millennium shall be,
Can that millennium yet linger long
When o'er all nations Truth hath victory,
And Peace lifts up her sweet and endless song?

CORRESPONDENCE.

CHAIRMAN CAPWELL ON POLITICAL CONVENTIONS.

DALE, N. Y., Dec. 16, 1884.

Editor Cynosure:

MY DEAR BRO.—I understand you, in Cynosure, Dec. 11, to call on me to "arise and explain" on the subject of conventions.

My idea is to combine, so far as possible, all the reform element in the land in one grand reform party—a political party with a platform defining our position as clearly as the lodge, the liquor interest and Mormonism define their position against Christ and a Christian government. And as the N. C. A. has a State organization in very many of the States already, I think the most efficient work can be done, for the present, by calling one or more conventions in each State, auxiliary to the N. C. A., and at the same time and place call a political convention of the American party to follow, inviting all anti-secretists to join us, culminating in a grand rally next June in Chicago immediately following the American meeting of the N. C. A. It was truly said in the last Cynosure, page 8, "The entrenchments of sin," etc. I most heartily and fully endorse those sentiments. I think it is high time the three or four reform parties cease each to fight on its own hook and form one solid army, marshaled under the great Captain of our salvation to fight for God and Home, and Native Land. Yours for the war,

F. W. CAPWELL.

MACCABEES OF THE WORLD.

CUSTER CITY, Pa., Dec. 15, 1884.

I would to God I had the means to hire a lecturer for this vicinity. O the apathy on this vital question! Our good people say, "Yes! yes! I know its evil," but they don't realize the importance of action. O, for a missionary spirit to enlighten the young men! Only a few weeks ago another of those miserable fungi established itself in this vicinity. Its grand title is "Knights of the Maccabees of the World." Isn't that enough to swamp anything? It has captured some of our best young men who hated Masonry, as one expressed to me, because "it let a horse thief go and the evidence was positive too." But these Sir Knights "just have enough secret to prevent being imposed upon" (as usual).

"Masonry! Masonry!! I assure you, my dear sir, this has no affinity to Masonry. If I thought it had, I'd have nothing to do with it. I used to be as much opposed to all secrecy as you are; but I have learned that these mutual-benefit societies bear no resemblance to Masonry." And that is all the effect you have after the wool has been drawn over their eyes.

All I could say was, "Boys, beware! Open your eyes, and keep them open; you'll soon see enough of Masonry in it, that you'll know its parentage." To use their own words they claim, "We have as solemn a service as the church." May God in his infinite goodness have mercy and open these blind eyes.

J. C. YOUNG.

MOODY IN MINNEAPOLIS AND ST. PAUL.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Dec. 16, 1884.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

DEAR BRO:—D. L. Moody has just concluded a series of four days of meetings equally divided between St. Paul and Minneapolis. I attended two of the meetings in Minneapolis, and all of them in St. Paul. At Minneapolis the meetings seemed pervaded with a blessed spirit, so that it was indeed good to be there; and although standing upon my feet all the time, I could imagine the feelings of the poet when he wrote the lines:

"My willing soul would stay
In such a frame as this.
And sit and sing herself away
To everlasting bliss."

In St. Paul the evangelist did not seem to have as much liberty; although the meetings were good, exceedingly good. In one of the meetings the Young Men's Christian association was made quite a bone of contention by the pastors. Previous to the coming of Mr. Moody the pastors held a preparatory meeting, in which one of the ministers prayed, uttering these words, "O God make me an honest man." I was struck with these words in his prayer, because upon a former occasion he had remarked to me, "What a horrible thing Freemasonry is!" I then said to him, "If you tell that to the people you will not get any more money for your support." He replied, "I know it, and do not mean to say anything about it." Perhaps it is unnecessary for me to say, he is by no means neutral upon the subject of Masonry. He says he knows nothing about it.

Another minister, a pastor, expressed his fears that there might be an accursed thing in our midst, as in the case of the Israelites at Ai, and hoped it might be put away. And that pastor has told me that he knew Freemasonry to be a great iniquity, such that God, in his own good time and way, would smite as he had done slavery, but he said that he would not suffer the subject to be mentioned in his church, not even to give notice of a State convention to be held in regard to secret societies, because, he said, some of the members of his church were Freemasons. Indeed, at that time his right hand man in his church was a most devout Knight Templar, who had, indirectly, solicited me to join the Masons. He was one of the most prominent Christians and government officials in the State. He is dead now, and lauded by this pastor as a most sublime Christian. How does that agree with the pastor's statement that that system of which his principal church official was a chieftain, was a great iniquity that God would, in his own good time and way, smite? How are we to conceive of God smiting an iniquity without smiting the workers of that iniquity? And how can God get at the churches to smite the iniquity of Freemasonry in them until he first smites such pastors out of the way? Does that pastor mean to provoke the Almighty to serve the nation for the iniquity of Masonry in the same manner as he did for the iniquity of slavery? It seems like it.

Another of our city pastors in his flowery Thanksgiving sermon, under the theme of "Commandment-keeping" throws a veil of charity (falsely so called) over some liar by saying, "we are all guilty of unveracities."

All of Mr. Moody's meetings except two, were held in one of the Presbyterian churches. On the Lord's day an afternoon and an evening meeting were held in the large theatre which the proprietor kindly gave for the occasion; it was filled to overflowing at both meetings. At the evening meeting one hundred and one arose for prayers; and such was the testimony of Mr. Moody's preaching that it seemed quite reasonable that they should do so.

In these meetings Freemason pastors were on the platform at Mr. Moody's elbow in the forefront of the battle. Now, it is fair to suppose that these Freemasons have taken the degrees of their order in due form, and if so, how gratifying it must be to him, whom Jesus called "a murderer and the father of lies" to see the great evangelist's right-hand man, a Masonic pastor, under seal of his infamous fifth libation, lead in prayer to the Almighty for the salvation of sinners. May we not imagine Satan calculating the chances of that Masonic pastor for getting some of the converts into his church that he may make them "two-fold more the child of hell than himself"?

One of the meetings, during Mr. Moody's absence in Minneapolis, was committed to the charge of the Freemason pastor of the Jackson street M. E. church. In prayer I made some allusion to the spiritual condition of a Freemason pastor under hoodwink and cable-tow practicing Satan's sun-worship and swearing to conceal it under penalty of being murdered; the attitude of Satan toward such; and the reproach of the church of God by reason thereof. The chorister, I suppose ordered by the Masonic leader, interrupted my prayer by singing. A little braggadocia was manifested on the part of one deluded into sympathy with the Masons; and the Freemason who led the meeting, in his closing remarks, admonished the people to avoid my teaching, and denounced me as a crank and a pessimist. But it was gratifying to observe at the close of the meeting that all were not in sympathy with those who bow the knee to Baal in the secret lodges. It will be quite easy for the people with "Ecce Orienti," or "Freemasonry Illustrated," in one hand and the Bible in the other to see, according to Webster's definition of "a crank," who the cranks are.

A few years ago it was remarked to an Anti-masonic lecturer, "We know now what Freemasonry is, why not let the subject alone?" The apt reply was, "If we do we shall leave others in the same ignorance that we were in, and the people unwarned of their danger." Surely, good enough reason for continuing the lecturers in the field and keeping up the circulation of the Cynosure. If pastors justify their silence in regard to Freemasonry and other secret orders by the attitude of Jesus Christ toward Judas Iscariot—Jesus knowing him to be in league with the devil from the beginning—we cannot think that Jesus ever called Judas Iscariot a good man. Therefore, let them beware how they call Masons good men.

We all have reason to be glad that Mr. Moody has been here. If only the 101 who rose in the theatre for prayers find the way of eternal life, what a great blessing it will be. His closing meeting was held last night in the Presbyterian church and eighty-three arose for prayers. I understand that the people in Minneapolis are very much awakened by the meetings. Yours truly, W. FENTON.

THE SITUATION.

[From a letter to the General Agent.]

OBERLIN, Dec. 12, 1884.

Peter walked the stormy sea like his "Lord and Master" because he looked at him and not the angry waves. So we walk by faith and are "in nothing terrified by our adversaries." Hope we may not, like that impulsive disciple, look down instead of up, at difficulties instead of our Almighty Helper, and so get a wetting for an admonition.

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform,
He plants his footsteps on the sea
And rides upon the storm."

He has his plan and works it out and we are enlisted in his army for eternity and have only to "obey orders," "not counting our lives dear unto us." The politicians leave him out of their plans—like Israel when they chose a captain to lead them back to Egypt.

I think the N. C. A. discerned the will of the Master in deciding their distinct calling to be the moral work of saving Christianity as a life in this land—by withstanding and exposing the revival of ancient, secret and seductive devil worship, led by modern craft and the masked despotisms and hypocrisies of Jesuitism. But government is of God and we must "vote as we pray" and plainly this department of God's administration is external and distinct if not separate, and requires an external organization to administer it. I could not but thank God for the spirit and wisdom of the Cynosure that led to the acceptance of the nomination of a seceding Mason by another prohibition party and all for Christ's sake. These two parties are one in spirit on the prohibition issue, and I hope this auspicious beginning of co-operation may continue and result in the larger strength of both. I think the Christian spirit and bearing of the N. C. A. in this joint testimony against the liquor traffic greatly honored God, and the blessed revival you are now enjoying is a precious token of it and a prophecy of still greater blessings.

I am glad you are coming to Ohio—the Lord help you in carrying out your program in the East and also the West. My heart aches at the blindness of the people while the folds of the serpent are tightening around their limbs and the blasphemies of the lodge are becoming more insolent—its lying legends accepted as truth and its spirit of violence lighting the torch of vengeance and sharpening the knife of the assassin. Even "the party of moral ideas" are bulldozing and threatening and justifying mobs equal to the worst days of Abolition. I am no "pessimist;" but I have read history, the history of God's administration over states and nations, and understand its principles and that he does not change them; that this present is the judgment and retribution day of that conglomerate person called Society, and that nations like individual sinners must "turn or burn" and become as Rome, Babylon or Sodom.

GEO. CLARK.

AUSTRALIAN MASONRY.

NATIONAL CITY, Cal., Dec. 10th, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I received your copy containing Mr. Roberts' letter from Melbourne, Australia, and was glad to see he had become a subscriber to the Cynosure. I know he will try to influence others to subscribe. I have forgotten the work to which he refers as being engaged upon, but I know it will be fearless in facts. Although never myself a Freemason like brother Roberts, still there is much in his letter that I can endorse, as to the conduct and bearing of Freemasons in Australian society; instead of brotherly love, relief, and truth, to many of its members in Australia, it was more like covetousness, drunkenness, luxury and sensuality.

That the principles of the order may be good, in some respects many good persons believe, and I know of pure-minded men of the order in Australia, who, like brother Roberts, can and do put their hands in their pockets, and give a sovereign at a time to worthy objects and persons, men who live and act as they think righteously towards their fellows. I have often heard them express their grief at the degradation of many of its members who have crept in for selfish motives, as was manifested by their conduct afterwards, and like all societies, from the same cause degenerate into licentiousness; and the only panacea is Christianity, pure and simple, in accord with Luke 6: 30–35; but even then, the evil and the good will be ever present, as the tares and the wheat must grow together till harvest. But I hold that Christians are responsible to some extent, especially wealthy, careless professors, for many tares to be seen among the wheat to-day. They certainly cannot be ignorant in these days of discernment, for in the days of Isaiah (see Is. 3: 9) the sins of the rulers and many others were openly depicted in their countenances, and again in Ezekiel 16: 49 we have evidence that history repeats itself. As a great writer has said:

> "Wherever God erects a house of prayer
> The devil always builds a chapel there,
> And 'twill be found on examination
> The latter has the larger congregation."

Without wishing to be unkind, or even thought so, I am under a burden, as one of the men foretold in Matt. 23: 34, to speak out the fact that another great evil is the admission of the alcoholic cup to the Lord's communion table. O, if friends only knew what a sin this is they would, I know, repent. Many do, but the evil has assumed such proportions that willing hands are almost powerless to grapple with it, and if so, are not our Lord's words, "When ye shall see the abomination of desolation stand where it ought not, let him that readeth understand," —are not these words being more than verified to-day? Are the ministers of Christ's flock feeding his sheep on husks or on the bread of life? Let every reader think kindly of me. I know it will not be popular thus to write, but the burden is on me. To me the voice says, "He that knoweth these things and doeth them not shall receive the greater damnation." As a preacher I have seen all these in Australia where I was suppressed; and even here I have been debarred from giving the warning note. Let none of your readers, Mr. Editor, think within themselves that this is unkindly meant, but we are living in one of the most dangerous states of society the world ever knew. The truth has been kept back, and as Sampson overthrew the lords of the Philistines, so will the Truth, though crushed to earth, burst forth from her long, pent-up prison-house and shine forth in the name of Justice, who stands now, as it were, afar off weeping. BENJAMIN JUDKINS.

PITH AND POINT.

BLAINE AND LOGAN.

I wish to be informed through the Cynosure of the truth, or where the proof can be had, that a law was passed in Illinois in slavery time, forbidding them to feed or lodge a negro, and called "Logan's Black Law," by Prohibitionists here. Republicans deny that there was any such law. Another question I wish to ask is, how many degrees in Free masonry has Blaine taken?

All the members of secret societies here, with very few exceptions, voted for Blaine and Logan. All the preachers in the English M. E. church and University here, from the D. D. and President of the University down, although professing to be for temperance before the campaign, went strong for Blaine and Logan, and even took the band stand and made speeches at a Republican rally; at the same time the Prohibitionists were speaking in the hall, and they have persecuted them ever since, calling St. John a bad man.—LOIS B. SMITH, Berea, Ohio.

Mr. Blaine is not a member of the Masonic or any other secret order, as we are informed.

What were known as the "Black Laws" of Illinois were a number of statutes adopted at different times from 1845 to 1853 and perhaps later. In the latter year John A. Logan, then a young man, was a member of the Legislature and introduced and carried the most audacious and barbarous of these statutes. The bill was to prevent any colored man from coming into the State, whether slave or free. Heavy fines were incurred, in default of which the person could be sold into temporary slavery which might easily be made permanent. The law mentioned above, "forbidding to feed or lodge a negro," was not an Illinois statute, but is probably a popular reference to the "Fugitive Slave Law" passed by Congress. During the war Mr. Logan learned better of slavery and probably looks upon this part of his early career with regret.

THE TARIFF AND RELIGION!

Wonders will never cease, they say; and again, nothing is more common than to find the accused become the accuser; or to see a counterfeit with all the pretenses of the genuine article. Now, when two opposite things are asserted, one must be wrong; and here is a sample: "Mr. Blaine added in his response to the ministers: 'The tariff, which proteets the American laborer in his wages, the American capitalist in his investments, the inventive talent of the country ih its enterprise, is the issue which lies at the very foundation of the prosperity of the American people, and the very foundation of the success of the Christian religion.' So we are taught that a tax is not only the foundation of the prosperity of the American people, but it is the foundation of the success of the Christian religion." My point is simply in regard to the expression that the tariff is the foundation of success of the Christian religion! Every Christian denies that. We are all apt to have dust in our eyes when the wind blows on dry days. So when politics dry up our "religion" we are apt to ascribe to them an influence far beyond their true value. When we remember that the real foundation of the Christian religion was a malefactor executed by the politics and religion of the day, and know that Jesus plainly said, "My Kingdom is not of this world," we may feel amazed that politics should now lead party men into such awful blunders as we find in the extract presented above. No, no; the Kingdom of Christ has no tariff! It gives freely all its manufactures to the whole world—only on this condition: Cast aside all your own manufactures of self-righteousness and be welcomed and accept those already made for you! Enter and abide in His visible Kingdom by His visible ordinances! Feed on the bread of Heaven, and use only the sword of the Spirit for the defence of the THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION!

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON I.—January 4, 1885.—Paul at Troas.—Acts 20: 2-16.
GOLDEN TEXT.—And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them.—Acts 20: 7.
[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Hindrances and triumphs, (vs. 2–7.) This period in Paul's life is peculiarly full of rich lessons to all laborers for Christ. On his first visit to Troas the people seem to have been unprepared to receive the Gospel, as he was prevented from doing any missionary work there by a vision which called him into Macedonia. But on his second visit (2 Cor. 2: 12) "he found a door opened unto him of the Lord." Carey worked patiently at his shoe-bench with a map of the world spread before him, while his plan for preaching the Gospel to the heathen was ridiculed and denounced by ministers and laity alike as wild and chimerical. Yet he pioneered the way for the Martyns and Judsons, and the seed of foreign missions which he planted in such discouragement is now a tree whose branches cover the world. However we may be mysteriously hindered at first "a great door and effectual" always opens to the prayer of faith. We are told that "he gave them much exhortation," the tenor of which may be inferred from his epistles. He never spared the particular sins of particular churches. He rebuked the Corinthians for tolerating licentiousness, and the Galatians for substituting Judaistic rites and ceremonies in place of a living faith—a lesson for the pulpit of to-day. He describes his state at this time when Jewish hostility continually "laid wait for him," in 2 Cor. 7: 5. When the door opens "there are many adversaries." But "think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you." It is surely nothing strange that darkness should hate light, that sin should oppose righteousness. Why should we be surprised at any outburst of hellish vindictiveness from the Masonic lodge with its savage death penalties and murderous record? or in the rum-power—a business which has sent in the last ten years, in the United States alone, 100,000 to the poor house, and made 200,000 widows and 1,000,000 orphans?

2. The deathly sleep. (vs. 7–12.) Eutychus has, perhaps unjustly, been made to point a good many lessons to sleepers in church; but there is a spiritual sleep which ends in a worse death. In every church we find these slumbering souls. The grandest opportunities pass by them unheeded. They hear no sound of mustering hosts, no bugle call to battle against the enemies of truth and righteousness. The worldling may slumber in careless indifference, but to every professed follower of Christ comes the command, "Let us not sleep as do others," "Woe to them that are at ease in Zion!" for when evils long tolerated bring down the wrath of Heaven on a guilty people, judgment may and often does "begin at the house of God." A greater miracle than the raising of Eutychus is the wakening of a soul from such deathly slumber. But with God all things are possible, and Mercy's warning cry can pierce even ears steeped in slothful slumber, "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead!"

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What was Isaiah commanded to do? Is. 58: 1. Should this apply to Isaiah and Paul but not to ministers now? What does it prove when a system or party maligns and persecutes its opposers? John 8: 39–44.

NOTES FROM PELOUBET.

We now resume the course of the history of the Church as given in the Acts of the Apostles at the point where we left it last summer, Lesson VII., Second Quarter, 1884. Paul was then on his third great missionary journey, and had spent nearly three years at Ephesus. Finally at the great Ephesian Games, in May, A. D. 57 the silversmiths, who made shrines of Diana and found their sales seriously lessened by the progress of the Gospel, stirred up the mob and made a great uproar, so that Paul left the city. He went first to Troas (2 Cor. 2: 12, 13), and thence to Macedonia, where we find him at the beginning of the present lesson.

"And when he had gone over those parts," i. e., of Macedonia, (ver. 1). Six years had elapsed since Paul had first visited Macedonia, and been beaten with rods in the market-place of Philippi. He would again visit those cities of Macedonia where he had founded churches, namely, Philippi, Thessalonica, and Berea.—Gloag. And he would preach the Gospel in those portions he had not hitherto visited. He travelled as far westward as the confines of Illyricum, the western borders of Macedonia (Rom. 15: 19), laying the foundation of future Christian churches in every principal town (Rom. 15: 23). It was here and now that Paul wrote his Second Epistle to the Corinthians. That he wrote the letter in Macedonia is evident from 2 Cor. 9: 2–4.—Abbott.

"And when the Jews laid wait for him." We are not informed as to the nature of this plot formed against St. Paul by his unhappy countrymen. Dr. Clarke supposes it was to obtain the money collected throughout the churches for the poor saints at Jerusalem.—Pierce.

"He purposed" Better, he determined, with Rev. Ver. As the scheme for killing him had been meant to be carried out at sea, the choice of an overland journey and a prompt departure made the forming of a new plan impossible to the conspirators.—Cambridge Bible.

"Tarried for us at Troas." The close personal connection of Luke and Paul appears to have dated from the years 51, 52. They were together from the time of the arrival of Paul at Troas (chap. 16: 8); they crossed over together into Europe, but when Paul left Philippi (16: 40) Luke was left behind, and, it has been supposed, made Philippi the centre of his work for several years. Here again, after a lapse of five or six years, they met. The rest of the Acts is told by an eye-witness of the various events recorded. We may therefore conclude with certainty that from this time (A. D. 57) till Paul was entrusted to the charge of the soldier at Rome (A. D. 62) Luke was continually with his beloved master.—Schaff.

"After the days of unleavened bread," the festival of the Passover, which no doubt they observed, not in the Jewish spirit any longer, but with a recognition of Christ as the true Paschal Lamb. See John 1: 36 and 1 Cor. 5: 7.—Hackett.

"Upon the first day of the week." This and the counsel given in 1 Cor. 16: 2 are distinct proofs that the Church had already begun to observe the weekly festival of the Resurrection, our Sabbath, in place of, or where the disciples were Jews, in addition to, their weekly Sabbath.—Plumptre. Gradually this Christian day supplanted their Sabbath, though for a time both days were observed. The Jews demanded that the Gentile Christians should observe the Jewish Sabbath, a demand to which Paul told them not to accede (Col. 2: 16.—Abbott.

"And continued his speech until midnight." The assembly was held at night; this was the ordinary practice among the early Christians. It seems that this brotherhood on "the Lord's day," after the day's work was ended, met together, partook of the simple evening meal, after which prayer and preaching of the Word followed; and before they separated each Christian shared in the solemn breaking of bread, in compliance with their dear Master's last command the evening before his death on the Cross.—Schaff.

"Over against Chios." The island well known under its modern name Scio for the dreadful sufferings of its inhabitants in the Greek war of independence.—Abbott. [It will also be remembered for the destructive earthquake of about two years ago which almost desolated the Island.—ED. CYNOSURE.]

REASONS WHY PAUL WISHED TO REACH JERUSALEM BEFORE PENTECOST.—(1) That he might report his mission and its results to St. James and the Elders; (2) deliver the amount of the collections (24: 17; 1 Cor. 16: 3, 4; Rom. 15: 25); (3) refute the calumnies circulated against him (21: 21); and (4) avail himself of the opportunity afforded by the presence of many strangers for making the Gospel known to a greater number and variety of people than would ordinarily have been found there.—Cook.

OBITUARY.

DIED, near Marion, Indiana county, Pennsylvania, November 30, 1884, of paralysis, William B. Sutor, aged 80 years. He was born in Washington county, near Pittsburgh, of Scotch Presbyterian parentage, and was the eldest of a large family, who spent their youth in subduing Western Pennsylvania forest. Later he was a lecturer in New York State, where he married an estimable lady who survives him. Returning to the scenes of his youth, he lived to a good old age, although for many years badly crippled by rheumatism. He was one of the earliest Abolitionists, and although too old to fight for the freedom of the slaves, he did good service in recruiting for the war which accomplished that end. He was an advocate of every worthy reform, and a bitter denunciator of the shams of the world.

CONCERNING YOUR NEWSPAPER

Give up many things before you give up your religious newspaper. If any one that ought to take such a paper does not, I hope some one to whom the circumstance is known will volunteer the loan of this to him, directing his attention particularly to this article.

Who is he? A professor of religion, and not taking a religious newspaper! A member or the visible church, and voluntarily without the means of information as to what is going on in the church. A follower of Christ, praying daily, as taught by his Master, "Thy kingdom come," and yet not knowing, nor caring to know, what progress that kingdom is making.

But I must not fail to ask if this person takes a secular newspaper. Oh, certainly he does. He must know what is going on in the world, and how else is he know it? It is pretty clear, then, that he takes a deeper interest in the world than he does in the church; and this being the case, it is not difficult to say where his heart is. How can a professor of religion answer for discrimination in favor of the world? how defend himself against the charges it involves? He cannot do it, and he better not try, but go or write immediately for some good religious newspaper; and to be certain of paying for it, let him pay in advance. There is a satisfaction when one is reading an interesting paper, to reflect that it is paid for. But perhaps you take a paper, and are in arrears for it. Now, suppose you were the publisher, and the publisher was one of your subscribers, and was in arrears to you, what would you think he ought to do in that case? I just ask the question. I don't care about an answer.—Dr. Nevins.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1884.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, uot in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and, savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.

4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.

5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.

7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.

8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.

9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.

10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.

11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.

14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.

15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

The Christian Cynosure.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 25, 1884.

There are upon the Cynosure list the names of a large number of two-months subscribers, many of whom receive the paper at the hand of some friend, by way of introduction. A spccial request is made to these friends to send a renewal for the year, without waiting for any further solicitation. In the eight numbers of the paper which have come to you, you have learned, we hope, to respect its sincerity, and to understand somewhat the nature of the dark power which casts its shadow over every American institution, and even over the Christian church. The hour demands the co-operation of every sincere patriot and Christian against this gigantic system. If you are in earnest in opposing the lodge you will need first the Cynosure. Please send your subscription before the New Year.

THE RICHMOND STAR has an article whieh eharges bishops with circulating a fraudulent "peaee-measure" for the General Conferenee at Fostoria, May next. An old law said, "Freemasonry, in any sense of the word, shall not be tolerated in our (U. B.) church." These cunning sophisters hold that this law, because it names only Masonry, admits all its brood! And so, they say, "Let us fall back on the good old law, and be at peace." The Chambersburgh paper makes the same eharge on these fradulent bishops. If Bishops Weaver and Glossbrenner are intended, they should be named. Paul named the apostle Peter when he attempted a like fraud: when he fellowshipped and disfellowshipped idolaters. And we are to follow Paul as he followed Christ. Will these beloved brethren remember how the Cynosure used to be blamed for rebuking such double-dealers?

"CURSED THINGS" meant everything which had been devoted to the uses of a religion without Christ. Gold, silver, garments, however curious or precious, the Israelites were to burn them. "Neither shalt thou bring an abomination into thy house, lest thou be a cursed thing like it: but thou shalt utterly detest it, and thou shalt utterly abhor it, for it is a cursed thing." (Deut. 7: 26) That the Lord * * * may multiply thee as he hath sworn unto thy fathers."

What wisdom or philosophy was there in this severe precept? Just this: Handling implements of idolatry would have made, did make, idolaters, as handling stolen goods makes thieves. Idolatrous tricks gave hosts of evil spirits, demons, aecess to their moral natures; turned them from the true God, and left them to vile appetites and beastly passions. Each man-invented religion, Masonry, Odd-fellowship, and what not, brings new oaths, obligations and worships; wrecks justice, property, marriage, and destroys nations.

REV. GEORGE T. DISSETTE, of Sabetha, Kansas, was a Mason and Methodist licentiate preacher who had done some service on circuits. When leaving Knox eounty, Illinois, he had expressed his dissatisfaction with some things in his lodge. He was told by a lodge offieer that there were members who would follow him and execute the penalties on him if he broke his Masonic oath.

This led him to investigation and renunciation of the lodge. He has lectured through North Kansas several years, as the way has opened, at his own expense. The Wesleyan church in Olathe would do well to invite Mr. Dissette to pay them a visit, or any other Christian society whieh is free from the entanglements of the lodge. The editor of the Cynosure is acquainted with Mr. Dissette. He is an interesting man and has an interesting young family. He writes for the Cynosure.

THE CONVENTIONS.

The six New England conventions were called for by Elder S. C. Kimball who is now on the march toward them. Prof. Bailey writes that the movement is stirring the friends throughout the country. Chairman Capwell utters himself in this number. Seeretary Stoddard has got up, by consultation, a "Request for a Call" for the sixth and last New England convention, to be signed promiscuously. He intends to put a printed form of this "Request" into several papers as a supplement. Will every friend of God and our country, into whose hands this printed "Request" may fall, paste it on a blank foolseap sheet, and put it in eireulatton without delay? May will be here before we know it, and a great work is to be done. If ten thousand names are sent in before January ends, Mr. Capwell will issue the call, and there will be no want of speakers.

Seeretary Stoddard expeets to return from his Ohio trip to attend to the eireulation of the call by the first of January. The first of our conventions at Aurora, Ill., Oct., 1867, was a Pentecost. Till 1872, there were no political meetings. That year the N. C. A. adjourned to allow a promiscuous mass meeting of voters. Such let our meetings continue. We have been blessed in them—religious meetings, yet providing for all who vote. The election is past. Let the dead past bury its dead, but "Go thou and preach the Kingdom of God." Ask everybody, old and young, who can understand it, to sign the "Request," and all who are able, to subscribe for the paper. Who will send in the largest list?

THE THIRD PLENARY COUNCIL.

This is a council, we believe, in whieh the Pope is represented by a legate. It met in Baltimore in November. The first Plenary (full, eomplete,) Council met in Baltimore in 1852, thirty-two years ago, attended by thirty-two arehbishops and bishops. The third, which has just been held in the same city, was attended by twelve archbishops, fifty-eight bishops, six mitred abbots, and thirty or forty other delegates of "Orders," beside eeclesiasties. The archbishops and bishops were "robed in purple vestments," and the others in black gowns. While officiating, saying masses for dead people in purgatory, ete., the celebrants out-spangled Knight Templar Masons, and out-titled them. These are all the "Babylonish garments" for which Achan was executed. Babylon was then the metropolis of earth's idolatries.

"After sermon, absolutions for the dead were given by four archbishops," says the Catholic Examiner, Nov. 22. "All the decrees were formulated in private sessions." They were then voted on in open council. "During the entire solemn session the Latin alone was used." Think of "decrees" formulated in secret and voted on in Latin, before an American audience. This beats Masonry and Mormonism. Mormons baptize for the dead. These priests absolve the dead.

In the "seeond solemn session," the successor of the bankrupt Bishop Purcell, of Cincinnati, preached on "The Priesthood." He said: "The priests are the mediators whose highest office is to offer sacrifice. But the Bible says, "There is one," (and but one) "Mediator between God and man," namely Christ, whose priesthood is perpetual. Heb. 7: 24. Then each of these priests was a rival, a counterfeit, and antagonist of Christ. At the close of this anti-Christ sermon, "The archbishop spoke of the sisterhood. He said they were willing to go anywhere they were sent, risking their lives in hospitals, and on the battle field; but no power will induce them to go to a place where they will never again see a priest." (Examiner, Nov. 22.)

Dr. Cumming, a celebrated English writer, says of the papacy, "It is one stupendous demoniacal possession:" and no American who reads the Epistle to the Hebrews understandingly, can fail to see, in this "Plenary Council," an exact instance and illustration of this truth uttered by Dr. Cumming; and that Masonry and Mormonism and all other man-invented religions, and parts of religions, are ehildren of popery, and inhabited by devils. Hence the cartoon of Puck, of the Pope and a Knight Templar, "YOU'RE ANOTHER," is simple truth and verity. The present epidemic craze for secret societies and the blazonry of popery are from the same source. So also is all mere worldly religion. False doctrines at Andover, which suggest a probation after death, and consequent prayers for the dead, and escape from purgatory are no whit better than these bishops' "absolutions," or Mormon "baptisms" for the dead. "Ye shall know them by their fruits." How many "Plenary Councils," fluttering in blazonry; how many "New departures" from Bible doctrine, would produce a penteeost revival, and make men cry out to be saved? Falsc doctrines, and false ceremonies are extremes which meet, with no midland of truth between them.

When the sincere, hard-working masses in the Roman Catholic church, who believe what truth they find there; that the Bible is God's word; that Christ is the Son of God, and the Saviour of the world, shall learn to separate the "Holy Catholic church" from Popery and Jesuitism, then "the redemption of the world draweth nigh." Lord hasten it.

WYCLIFFE'S FIFTH CENTENNIAL.

This is to be celebrated Dec 31st, now near by. And judging from the press notices in advance, it is to receive a wider and more thorough celebration than ever before.

Wyckliffe or Wiklif (his name is spelled twenty-eight ways)was born in the north of Yorkshire, England. The old mansion in which, or near whieh, he was born, about 1324, stands on a little wood-crowned cliff rising above the Tees, perhaps onee called Wye. At any rate he was John of Wyeliffe. His boyhood history is a blank. Even the precise day, and place of his birth are unknown. But he eame from North Yorkshire and early went to Oxford University. He was a brilliant seholar; went through two or three of the eolleges at Oxford; became Wardon of old Baliol College, and took his doetor's degree when about forty years of age. He died Dec. 31st, 1384, which brings his fifth centennial on the last day of the present month and year.

England was in serfdom to the Pope when Wycliffe beeame a priest. But he had a Hebrew Bible and could read it. He emancipated the Bible which had emancipated him, and by turning it into English and giving it into the hands of the common people, he rescued the English language from the eontempt of scholars, and turned, by the Scriptures and his own traets, two-thirds of the English people into "Lollards or Wycliffeites."

Besides the regular elergy, many of whom were good men, England was overrun with mendieant friars who were janizaries of the Pope. Wycliffe assailed these religious tramps without merey. As the English people beeame enlightened, "Peter's Penee" fell off. The Pope demanded arrearages of the king, and Wycliffe was one of the English Commissioners to meet the Pope's legates at Bruges to settle these popish claims for back pay. It was like Luther's visit to Rome. Wycliffe went back to England the friend of John of Gaunt, Duke of Laneaster, whom he had met at Bruges, and the enemy of the Pope, whom he believed now to be anti-Christ, and whom he styled, "The chief of purse-lifters and pick-pockets."

He was assailed by the Pope's minions, but was defended by the good Duke John. He died at sixty years of age; though not till he had been exeommunieated by elerieal tools whose worldliness and self-seeking his life had rebuked; and whose envy his learning and usefulness had inflamed. At the height of his fame and influenee, he said his highest ambition was to be "a teacher of simple men and women the way to Christ.

But if Wycliffe was the "Morning Star of the Reformation," his beams are still shining on us. Richard the II. had married and brought over the sister of the German emperor, the good Queen Ann. Many Bohemians followed her to England, among whom was Jerome of Prague who went to Oxford and became a disciple of Wycliffe, whose writings he took home. John Huss read and reeeived Wycliffe's doetrines, and when many of his books were burned by Bohemian priests, creatures of the Pope, Huss quietly remarked, "Fire eannot burn truth." But fire burned Huss and Jerome, lit by the Council of Constance one hundred years before Luther, who, while a young monk in the convent of Erfurth, found and read a volume entitled, "Sermons by John Huss." Thus he learned and taught Protestant Europe, that the man who looks to Christ for salvation has no need of priests. He is eomplete in Christ. Huss burned the Pope's bull in 1412; and Luther, following his example, burned another Pope's bull in 1520; and those fires shine yet. Heretics, sectaries, and baptized worldlings darken the gospel in the hands of Protestants, and make sincere, honest Catholics cling to the papacy as pious children cling to a drunken father. Let us hope that both Popes and priests and Protestants will cease to get drunk. Priests will no longer be wanted when men have found Christ.

Well may Americans celebrate the fifth Centennial of Wycliffe. The Council of Constance burned his books, and would have burned him. Thirteen years later his bones were dug up, burned, and the ashes cast into the Swift, near where it empties into the Avon. And an unknown poet wrote the prophecy:—

"The Avon to the Severn runs,
The Severn to the sea;
Thus Wycliffe's works shall spread abroad
Wide as its waters be."

December 31st inst., this prophecy will be fulfilled.

— Rev. C. C. Foote, after a pleasant visit of several weeks with his son-in-law and daughter, Rev. and Mrs. Geo. F. Milton at Winnebago, Ill., returned to Detroit, Monday, stopping over the Sabbath at Wheaton, where he happily addressed the children of the College Sabbath school. Father Foote's labors with children have been signally blessed of God with many conversions.

—Secretary Stoddard left Chicago last Friday, expecting to spend the Sabbath in Reynoldsburg, Ohio.

—Rev. F. R. Mastin, of Lanark, Ill., whose obituary notice appears in the last Wesleyan Methodist, was an earnest opponent both of the slavery of men's bodies and of their good sense and conscience in the lodge.

REFORM NEWS.

CAMPAIGN ORDERS.

WISCONSIN STATE MEETING.

From recent information received from Bro. Bancroft, it seems pretty well settled that the meeting is to be at Milton or Milton Junction, some time in January, 1885, provided, of course, the executive committee concur. If the first or second week in January is selected I can, so far as now appears, attend and shall be very glad to do so. Will members of the executive committee either fix the time and place immediately or write here authorizing me to do so in accord with the advice of Bro. Bancroft, who is personally looking over the ground? Will Bros. Wood, Britten and others of executive committee write me promptly, after reading this?

The third week in January is promised to New York, and Bro. Kimball is ready to begin a six-weeks' campaign in New England the last week in January. I wish then to visit the headquarters at Washington, and should be glad indeed to meet in convention with Ohio friends on my way back to Chicago, to cooperate with friends in the West in making our June anniversary the grandest and most potential meeting ever held in the interests of our reform.

WORDS TO NEW ENGLANDERS.

In conversation to-day with a gentleman who is a close observer and extensively acquainted in this country and some parts of Europe, he remarked, "The real strength of your reform is in New England, but it has never been cultivated and developed."

The remark struck me forcibly, and as being probably true. I know the friends we have there are staunch and most of them active workers. To call them a host would hardly do, but it may be safely said that they are "a terror to evil doers and a praise to them that do well." With Bros. Bailey and Kimball for leaders they have steadily advanced, and the way has been prepared for a more decisive and general movement. Bro. Kimball has planned and is working efficiently to bring this about. His idea of a series of conventions in the different States cannot, I think, fail to receive the hearty approval of every one interested in the progress of the work. There is in it economy of time and money, while it gives every one an opportunity to attend without going outside the State.

If the friends will co-operate as they should, each convention will be large and correspondingly influential, and an educational movement thus inaugurated will develop what strength there is in New England and unite the scattered forces for more decisive action. Will the friends rally and respond heartily to Bro. Kinball's earnest appeals to go up and possess the land for Christ and his ordinances of family, the State and the church, as opposed to the secret system and false worships of the lodge? I believe they will and that we shall have a half-dozen good conventions according to Bro. Kimball's plan with glorious results to follow. What say you, brethren, to a forward move all along the line?

THE REQUEST FOR A CONVENTION.

Read F. W. Capwell's letter in this number and you will catch the inspiration of activity from this indefatigable worker. Bro. Bailey at Washington and, in fact, the Lord's host all along the extended line of conflict respond to the action of the N. C. A with a hearty good will, and the individual sentiment is, Go forward. Last week's Cynosure contained on the 8th page a form for signatures of those desiring a New England convention to preceed the N. C. A. annual meeting. Bro. Bailey has spoken in last American on this subject and will have more to say in the near future. There is so far as known but one opinion, and that is favorable to the convention. Forms and details will very soon be settled, meantime let some one in each locality cut the form from the Cynosure, paste it on a slip of paper and circulate for signatures. The time will soon be here and what is done should be done quickly.

OHIO HEARD FROM.

Read again brother Strickler's letter in last Cynosure. A dozen such men would put the work in motion and make it interesting for the lodges. From my knowledge of the field I feel confident that aside from Illinois there is no State in this Union possessing more piety, talent, energy, wisdom and money that can be enlisted in the active work of reform than the State of Ohio. Yet as Bro. Strickler says, very little has been done directly against the lodge during the past two years. I well remember those grand annual reunions when the giants met in council, with such stalwarts as Dr. H. H. George, Dr. J. D. Carson, Dr. H. P. McClurkin, Dr. W. Wishart, Rev. J. K. Alwood, Father Taylor, Capt. J. M. Scott, Elder John Finney, Rev. W. Burr, Rev. D. Yant, and others like-minded—leaders of thought and teachers of men—to lead on the Lord's host against the empire of Satan. These still live—and most of them are yet active citizens in the Buckeye State—but they have lapsed into silence, or at least are heard from only occasionally and as individuals. Calm, deliberate, far-seeing men like those who were leaders in the anti-lodge movement in Ohio do not act or refrain from action without cause. They are not given to change on great moral questions. The thought that they have recanted, or ceased to believe in united active opposition to this anti-Christ is not to be entertained. Why then this inactivity and silence? Why no State conventions, as of old, with representative men from all parts of the State and the various denominations and political parties in the land? Will some of these brethren give us their reasons? There are many readers of the Cynosure in Ohio and more outside the State who would like to know. Is it for lack of a Wellington, a Bonaparte, or a Grant to set the battle in array and lead the host to victory? If so, why not act on brother Strickler's suggestion, meet in convention and choose a captain and then go forward. The times are auspicious, and the necessity pressing. Shall there be a rally and an onward movement in Ohio right away?

NEW YORK NOTES.

UTICA, N. Y., Dec. 18, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—As we move eastward we find the forces increasing all along the line. I called on Myran H. Clark while in Canandaigua, asked if he would subscribe for the Cynosure. "Certainly," said he; "I have been an Anti-mason all my life, and remember well the Morgan excitement," etc. Mr. Clark was Governor of the State when the issue was between Masonry and Anti-masonry.

At Shortsville I found D. Booth as much interested in our cause as ever. Rev. C. D. Brooks, of Geneva, manifested his interest by not only taking the paper himself, but persuading others to do likewise. Bro. S. Bedford, pastor of the Wesleyan church, Seneca Falls, gave us a cordial welcome. Some of his members send in their names for the Cynosure.

At Auburn I visited the State prison and requested an interview with Chaplain Searls. While we were waiting some twenty-five men were brought before the Chaplain, one by one, and questions like the following propounded to each: "Your age?" "Married or single?" "What church did you attend?" "Do you drink liquor?" "Is this your first offence?" etc., etc. Nearly all were young men, most of them single, and nearly every last one was addicted to strong drink. I did not hear the question asked, Do you belong to any secret society? I suppose that was forgotten. The Chaplain is a Methodist. Several men said they attended that church. He usually replied in a joking way that he met several of his brethren there. When asked if he was a Mason he replied that he had not been to a lodge for twenty-five years and did not take much stock in them any way.

My next stop was at Syracuse, where I met old friends; found brethren Wardner and Kinney as cordial as ever, notwithstanding the political cyclone. D. Kirkpatrick, brethren Merrick, and others encouraged me much on the way. Bro. Wardner handed me a pamphlet entitled "Accredited Masonic Salvation on leaving the Wesleyan office. On the train to Rome, while reading the pamphlet, a gentleman by the name of S. V. R. Brayton shared the seat. On seeing the pamphlet he requested a closer inspection. Handing it back he said, "I guess that's all right."

"I replied, I take it, then, that you are a Mason."

"You just bet!" said he. "I'm a member of the Monroe Commandery in Rochester, the best drilled Commandery in Rochester."

We were soon talking on the square, and spoke of the temples in Philadelphia and New York. Said he, 'The Philadelphia boys got on their high horse pretty big before they returned from the conclave in California. They are noble boys."

He said he would like sell his K. T. outfit cheap; it cost him $70, but he'd be willing to sell it for $20. I suppose he wanted to buy some more whiskey. I thought he had enough already and did not purchase. Time and space will not permit me to relate the entire conversation.

At Rome, Dix and other places in this county we found friends and secured subscriptions. Bro. McDougal, pastor of the Free Methodist church here, is holding extra meetings. I spoke, at his request, last evening. Some came forward at the close, seeking the Saviour and were found of him. The harvest indeed is great and the laborers are few. How I wish that some young men who are consecrated to God would come to this State and work. There is room enough. God will find their bread and butter. Should any one read this who feels that God wants him to work here, he will please write our State President to that effect, F. W. Capwell, Dale, Wyoming county and he will be assisted as far as we are able.

LITERATURE.

THE LIFE OF REV. JOHN FETTERHOFF, one of the early fathers of the United Brethren in Christ, written by himself; pp. 284.

These uneventful annals of a pioneer in gospel labors are most interesting to those with whom he has a personal acquaintance, but the excellence of character and simplicity of manners of the Christian veteran who tells us of his early life and struggles and later victories in the field of noblest conflict against the direst enemy, merit a wider attention. Born in the last century the subject of the book grew up with the United Brethren church, imbued with the spirit of her principles and partaker of the rewards she has received from her Lord; but nowise a sympathizer with those who bring in heresy and disorganization with their anxiety for popular favor. The book has a brief introduction from Rev. W. O. Tobey, and will do good among a large class of readers.

BIBLE SALVATION and POPULAR RELIGION CONTRASTED. By Albert Sims, minister of the Gospel; pp. 139. Price 30c. Published by the author. Uxbridge, Ont.

The author of this little work will be recognized as a contributor to the Cynosure, and the book does not differ from his articles, but shows a uniform, clear and honest conception of the Christian life, and is fearless in applying the principles of that life to the practices of many who call themselves religious. The lodge, tobacco, fashion, Sabbath desecration, dancing, etc., are among the dangers noted as to be feared by the church. Disciples of Christ would do well to aid in circulating this little volume after reading it themselves.

The January number of the North American Review presents no very famous names among its contributors, but it offers a wide variety of unusually readable articles. We are now so safely over the crisis of the Presidential election that men of all parties can consider calmly Bishop Huntington's essay on "Vituperation in Politics," and it is to be hoped that what they learn from it will not be forgotten four years hence. Under the title, "The Reunited South," Henry Watterson presents the Southern and Democratic view of the political situation as it now stands. Another question of universal concern, which may soon make itself a national issue, is that of labor and its compensation; and Col. Hinton, in "American Labor Organizations," shows with what equipment it will take the field. But the article that the literary reader will first turn to is Frederic Harrison's brilliant and incisive discussion of "Froude's Life of Carlyle;" while the religious or philosophical reader will find in Courtney's "Socrates, Buddha, and Christ," specific statements and quotations of those parallel doctrines that are so often vaguely alluded to. For the scientific reader, Mr. Proctor discusses learnedly "Herschel's Star Surveys," and Prof. Le Conte presents and explains some curious facts in relation to "The Evidence of the Senses." Mr. Mulhall's paper on "The Increase of Wealth" is a successful endeavor to render large masses of figures popularly intelligible.

Judge Tourgee's financial embarrassment is coupled with physical infirmity. He has sunk $110,000 in a vain attempt to put his magazine, Our Continent, on its feet, and as a result has been compelled to sacrifice his home and to assign the profits of his last book, "An Appeal to Cæsar," and his other brain work for the year to come for the benefit of his creditors. His literary productions are having a large sale, and he has lecture engagements for months ahead, but the receipts, above his expenses, all go to meet his financial obligations.

"The Trouble With the Stage" will be discussed in the January Century by a writer who claims that the managers first need reforming. Washington Gladden will write of "Christianity and Popular Amusements" in the same number, and George W. Cable's article on "The Freedman's Case in Equity," which will also appear, is said to be a timely contribution to current literature in the light of recent discussions in the Southern papers. Mr. Cable, who is a Southerner and an ex-Confederate soldier, calls upon the white people of the South to make the position of the black race not that of "freedmen" but of "free men."

Choice Literature for December has an excellent and varied selection largely from the English reviews: Wurzburg and Vienna, Goethe, Greek Cities Under Roman Rule, Honey Dew, Economics, Unwritten Elements of Our Federal Constitution, Progress of Social Science, Chinese Valley of the Ili, Vaccination, The Story of John Wyclif, Recollection of Canning and Brougham, Carlyle's Life in London, Mr. Gladstone, Thunderbolts.

THE HOME.

PATIENT WITH THE LIVING.

Sweet friend, when thou and I art gone
Beyond earth's weary labor,
When small shall be our need of grace
From comrade or from neighbor,
Passed all the strife, the toil, the care,
And done with all the sighing,
What tender truth shall we have gained,
Alas, by simply dying?

Then lips too chary of their praise
Will tell our merits over,
And eyes too swift our faults to see
Shall no defect discover,
Then hands that would not lift a stone
Where stones were thick to cumber
Our steep hill-path, will scatter flowers
Above our pillowed slumber.

Sweet friend, perchance both thou and I.
Ere love is past forgiving,
Should take the earnest lesson home—
Be patient with the living.
To-day's repressed rebuke may save
Our blinding tears to-morrow;
Then patience—e'en when keenest edge
May whet a nameless sorrow.

'Tis easy to be gentle when
Death's silence shames our clamor,
And easy to discern the best
Through memorie's mystic glamor;
But wise it were for thee and me,
Ere love is past forgiving,
To take the tender lesson home—
Be patient with the living.

GRACE AT TABLE.

With something of surprise, I must admit, did I find myself reading the following slip, for, owing to early education, I had considered the theme to which it relates as a fixed matter. And I am not aware that I ever studied the point, with a view of giving a consecutive and intelligent answer before:

"Why do Christian people ask a blessing at table? Why before eating, any more than when partaking of any other privilege from God, as sitting down to read a book or going to a concert, or singing a song?"

The custom seems to be passing out of fashion. I was never taught that it had any binding force. What about the habit of returning thanks at the close of a meal? I love to ask a blessing where I know all the table are sympathetic. Nor do I feel easy at intermitting it, even when I know some are not. If this be more than a mere custom, and if it means something let us get at its full significance.

One thing is sorrowfully evident, the customs of our fathers as to family religion are changing much. "The old is better." When our country was young, households were gathered together morning and night for prayer. Now, the hurried life we live seems to eat out all the wish for such things.

One of the most beautiful images that ever rose upon my imagination was suggested to me by a chance delay for two days among the lakes and mountains of the Trosach's Glen. I happened to make the inquiry, what became of the villagers, so suddenly disappearing at nightfall from the streets; and a sandy-haired Scotchman replied: "Most of them would be at prayers about this time!" And I looked up into the fair blue sky, and thought how fine a thing it would be to have a resting-place, high enough just to hear the murmur of voices, as they read a verse about, and sang one of the old Psalms, before the impressive hush in which the father offered prayer. How grand would be the swell of sound, when a whole village was going on its knees before God!

Prayer in the family is the one thing to be looked after, at the altar or the table; that act in which the head of the household is the high-priest for his home sacrifiee. Bishop Burnet, in his history, tells us that in the days of our ancestors England was as true as Scotland in this duty. He says that when a person came early to the door of his neighbor, and desired for a moment to speak with the master of the house, it was as common a thing for the servant to tell him with freedom, "My master is at prayer," as it is now to say, "He is not up."

Even in the annals of New England there used to be told the story that, when Lord Dartmouth, after whom one of our colleges was named, was once going on a hunting excursion with King George, he kept the entire cavalcade for a half-hour at his door, courtiers and hounds waiting, and his simple apology, as he at last came forth, was, "I was paying my morning homage to my heavenly King!"

It has fallen to my lot to journey somewhat widely over this world, east and west, and while I admit that the "Cotter's Saturday Night" is not obsolete in Scotland, and in England, a decorous observance of the forms of family religion is kept up, and in our own land many a father is found faithful; yet I am constrained to say, that the Mohammedans are the only people who seem never to be ashamed of their religion. They will pray at the prescribed hours, whether the rest of the people are "sympathic" or not.

Our children are living a shallow life compared with that which gave us our training. We had few books, and some of them were dull and hard. We had no newspapers or music. And Puritan Sabbaths have become a proverb to many for their severity and ruggedness. I would we were all worthier of our start. That sort of life, after all, made manly men and womanly women. It wrought out character in as fine a pattern as ever shone in strength and beauty. Oh, it is a pity to let even one so small a custom as grace at table fade out of use! That pause of decorum, when all are quietly seated, and even the baby closes her big eyes, and folds her little hands, when the father rises to his office as a "king and priest unto God," and thanks him for hearing the prayer for daily bread he knows the children offered; oh, how full of might and meaning it is! Ah me, shall I ever forget that first meal, when home for a visit, just after I had become a Christian in the distant village where I was a teacher, my father turned suddenly to me, delegating his intercession for the moment to me, his son! And I am sure all of us will remember the majesty of elder brother's manhood, when, on the evening of my dear old father's funeral, he did not wait for me, nor suffer me, minister though I was, to summon the broken circle, but calmly and modestly drew forth the Bible, and assumed his primacy at the honored family altar.

Something was said just at this point, about there being a few texts which might be in order. It was easy to find 1 Cor. 10: 30, 31. There the word occurs: "If I, by grace, be a partaker," means "by saying grace." So in the parallel verse, 1 Tim. 4: 5. So in the explanatory passage, Romans 14: 6. Then we were reminded by one of our intelligent teachers, that Christ is never recorded to have eaten without invoking a blessing. When he fed the five thousand (Matt. 14:19,) "he looked up to heaven, and blessed and brake" the loaves. When he fed the four thousand (Matt. 15: 35), "he gave thanks." When he ate with the two disciples near Emmaus (Luke 24: 30), he "took bread and blessed it." And at the institution of the Lord's Supper (Matt. 24: 26), he "blessed" the bread, and "gave thanks" for the wine.

Another reference was made to the Apostle Paul's example, when he came ashore from shipwreck (Acts 37: 33–35), and partook of his first meal. Although he had been almost famished for fourteen days, and although it was evident that this poor prisoner was in company with many who were not "sympathetic," he "took bread and gave thanks to God in presence of them all."

Our time passed away in this study of God's Word so rapidly that the hour vanished. But I am sure the impression was deepened in all our minds, as to the need and the glory of family religion. Grace at meals was only one part of a great household system. If one wanted to keep up that old form of thanks at the end of the meal, there would be no harm in it. A recognition of God's mercy was always in order. But entire freedom of conscience remained. Particulars might differ, but the general aim of the household should be to glorify God.

So far from fashion's interfering with the ancient and honorable custom, I have observed in Great Britain on many occasions, that it is a mark of decided ill-breeding to omit grace at table. On public feast-days the ceremony is quite elaborate. In the houses of genteel people, the guests often stand behind their chairs until the blessing is asked. Even among godless people, the practice is retained. It may only be a form, but the form is decent. And I have never noticed an absence of seriousness or becoming gravity, even when I knew the company was decidedly unsympathetic.

Perhaps the most remarkable instances of this I ever knew have been on some of the ocean steamers. When we crossed in the "Helvetia," the captain, by whose side I sat, invariably, himself, asked the blessing at every meal. And a sedate, respectful gravity attended the exercise. Upon the "Spain," the captain always called upon me for the giving of thanks, and in every instance caused the covers to remain unlifted. When the weather was rough, so that he had to be on duty, he sent audible and public word to me by the head steward: "The captain's compliments, sir, and will you be so kind as to say grace in his absense?"

These magnificent ships were both of the National Line of Liverpool. All honor to those true gentlemen on the sea.—Dr. Robinson.

WRITE TO THE BOYS.

If we had the ear of mothers in the country, whose boys have gone awaa to the cities, and to the great city, and who are wondering how they may help them to keep pure and true among the temptations of city life, we should say this to them,—Write them a mother's love-letter every week. We know, by personal experience, how mother's letter keeps her before the young man's eyes and safe in the young man's heart. We know how those letters keep on building a hedge round a young man so high and so thick that foul conversation and evil enticement cannot get through. We do not believe that the devil can get through. We do not believe that the devil can get near the mother-guarded youth.—S. S. Chronicle.

HOLIDAY LIES.

There are among professing Christians, families of children who have been taught to entertain the foolish idea that on Christmas and New Year's night some imaginary persons called Kris Kingle and Santa Claus enter the house, by some mysterious way, laden with toys and sweet-meats to deposit in the waiting stocking.

The parent who fosters such an idea is a threefold loser. 1st. He loses the confidence of the child when the fraud is detected. 2d. He loses the thanks of the child. 3d. He loses an opportunity of pointing his mind to God as the giver of all good gifts.

An instance comes to my mind of a minister of the Gospel officiating at the Christmas festivities of a Sabbath school, who stated in his public address that one of these mystic personages had loaded the Christmas tree with its dainty presents. Of course, he did not believe it but I am not sure that the same could be said of his younger auditors.

It were surely better never to tell such fabulous things to the young, and if they chance to hear them from others, train them to test the sayings by the exercise of common sense and see their folly.

"They say" is never sufficient proof of a statement, yet I might go on to mention a score of foolish signs and superstitious notions that prevail among young and old on no other testimony.

Now, the believing these falsehoods, though the most apparent, is by no means the most deplorable evil of the course. Children are thus taught to take on credit without any test the most foolish and unreasonable statements; and in just the same proportion that a doubtful stock of ideas is collected, is the disposition and the power to apply the balance of reason and the measure of common sense dwarfed.—United Presbyterian.

BIBLE READINGS FOR THE YOUNG.

WASH AND BE CLEANED. Read 2 Kings 5.

My Father, if the prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldest thou not have done it? How much rather, then, when he saith to thee, Wash, and be clean? 2 Kings 5: 13.

1. By whom, and to whom, was this wise counsel given?
2. Why did Naaman prefer the rivers of Damascus to the waters of Jordan? Rom. 10: 3; 1 Cor. 1: 21.
3. Why could the waters of Jordan alone cleanse his leprosy? Acts 4: 12; Zech. 13: 1.
4. What does the wonderful result of his bathing in Jordan represent? 1 John 1: 7; John 13: 8–10.
5. What great things would sinners rather do than come to Jesus? Luke 18: 11,12; Micah 6: 6,7.

ROY'S TEMPTATION.

Roy had begun his student-life in the academy at A., resolved to improve to the utmost, the advantages that he was now to enjoy.

Here was a new field of trial to him, where new temptations met him. Two hundred and fifty youths were crowded into the institution, and among this number were found, of course, some wild, thoughtless, and even vicious boys who took delight in leading others into misehief.

Roy's room-mate, though he did not belong to the class we have mentioned, was a smoker; and the first day that Roy made his acquaintanee he met the temptation of a cigar.

"Have a smoke?" said his companion, at the same time offering him a cigar.

"Thank you, I never smoke," Roy answered after hesitating a moment.

"Have you never tried a cigar?"

"Never; and I don't mean to try one."

"I think you'd enjoy a good cigar. Almost all the fellows here smoke," replied his room mate. "You'd better begin."

"Well," answered Roy, "a poor fellow like me couldn't afford such an expensive habit, to say nothing about the evil of it. How much does it cost you annually for cigars, if I may ask?"

"I don't know; I never reckoned."

"Well, how much a day, should you think?"

"Twenty-five cents, when I buy them by the quantity," was the reply.

"Three hundred and sixty-five quarter dollars in a year; let me see how much that amounts to. Ninety dollars annually; enough to pay a good part of my school expenses. I think I will not form the habit at present."

His room-mate expressed some surprise at the amount, adding, however, "But I enjoy it."

"And I enjoy being entirely free from the habit," returned Roy. "It is a real pleasure to me to think that I am not a slave to tobacco."

"Do you think it is wrong to smoke?" asked his room-mate, who was a member of the church.

"It would unquestionably be wrong for me on account of the expense," replied Roy. "But aside from that, as a useless indulgence which the majority of physicians agree, I believe, in regarding as injurious to health, I do think that smoking is wrong. And I think that professing Christians, such as you and I, should set a good example in this as in everything else."

"Do you call smoking setting a bad example?"

"If smoking is a bad habit, then the practice of it must set a bad example," replied Roy. "I think that Christians ought to avoid all evil habits. If they don't, how can they expect that irreligious men will avoid them?"

"Sure enough," answered his room-mate, "I think you are right; but it is very difficult to be consistent."

"I don't agree with you exactly," replied Roy. "It is easier for me to abstain from smoking on principle and be consistent, than it would be to smoke and try to make it appear consistent. The latter is very difficult indeed."

His room-mate laughed good-humordly, but went on with his cigar, In a month from that time, however, he had renounced smoking. Roy's resolute stand against the habit set him to thinking, the end of which was his emancipation from tobacco. He became a more active Christian also, Roy's earnest spirit and consistent life leading him to draw nearer to Christ.

Roy's first term had not expired before he met another temptation, common in academies, and before which hundreds of students fall and are ruined. He was an officer of one of the literary societies, and one evening he had occasion to call at a brother officer's room on a matter of business. There he found six or eight school-mates assembled around a table, playing cards, a jug of cider occupying the centre of the table.

"Halloo, Robson!" exclaimed one; "just in time to have a game. Take a seat right here by me."

"Take a drink first," interrupted another, at the same time filling a glass.

"A drink of what—spring water?" responded Roy.

"Cider! cider!" was the answer by two or three voices, one adding,

"It's capital, too, try it."

"No, I thank you," answered Roy; "I never use intoxicating drinks."

"What! never drink cider?" exclaimed one of the number. "It is a temperance beverage. Cider would not intoxicate a fly."

"That is true," replied Roy, "for flies won't drink it. It will, and does, intoxicate men."

"Well, whether it's intoxicating or not, it is good," added one of the wildest boys of the company. "It's a wonderful help to Greek and mathematics."

"Hard study is better help," answered Roy.

"If you won't take a swig then, take a game of cards with us," interrupted the boy who first addressed him. "It is a splendid recreation."

"A game of ball, or a long walk in the bracing air is better recreation," replied Roy. "I never played cards in my life."

"Time you had then," remarked one.

"Too late to begin now," said Roy, "I have too much to do to waste my time in this way."

This last remark aroused the ire of the wild youth alluded to and he exclaimed:

"Too much of a bigot and saint to drink a glass of cider or play cards."

"Just as you please," answered Roy pleasantly. "You enjoy them; but I don't. You claim a right to your opinions, and I have an equal right to mine."

"That's so," remarked two or three who did not sympathize in this insult to Roy; "don't be a bear, Gilroy."

Perhaps all the company did not know Roy's position in respect to these things; but some of them did, and their object was to tease him. But they only had their labor and their pains. Roy remembered that he was a Christian, pledged before the world to be true to God. He did not dare to be untrue, for he feared God more than his companions. Drinking cider and playing cards, though not contrary, so far as he knew, to the letter of any law of the academy, were, he believed, contrary to the spirit of the institution, and above all to his duty as a Christian—to nothing whereby another might be led into sin or encouraged to continue therein; cider and cards are too often, he thought, the introduction to intemperance and gambling to be indulged in by one who desires that his influence should be on the side of truth and purity. And Roy found in Christ. in the joy and peace that flowed from him into his own heart, far more satisfying pleasure than any he could have derived from a glass of cidar or a game of cards with the most entertaining fellows of the academy. Nor was he ashamed to avow his principles and stand by them before his associates.—Selected.

A crowd of spectators were amused recently by the gambols of a large ape that was lording it over a number of small monkeys confined in a great iron cage in the Jardin des Plantes. Fruit and many other things were thrown into the cage, and the ape was always the first to seize them. Some one suddenly threw in a small hand looking-glass, with a strong wooden frame. The ape brandished this about like a hammer, but, suddenly perceiving the reflection of himself in the glass, he stopped, and for a moment looked puzzled. Then he darted his head behind the glass to find the other ape. Astonished at finding nothing, he apparently thought he had not been quick enough. He then proceeded to raise and draw the glass nearer to him with great caution, and then, with a swifter dart, looked behind. Again finding nothing, he repeated the attempt once more. He next passed from astonishment to anger, and began to beat with the frame violently on the floor of the cage. Soon the glass was shattered and pieces fell out. Continuing to beat, he was suddenly surprised to see his image in the piece of glass still remaining in the frame. Then, as it seemed, he determined to make one trial more. More circumspectly than ever the whole first part of the process was gone through with—more violently than ever the final dart was made. His fury over this last failure knew no bounds. He crunched the frame and glass together with his teeth, beat them on the floor, and crunched them again till nothing but splinters was left.

A man in the path of duty is twice as strong to resist temptations as out of it. A fish is twice as strong in the water as on the shore; but a four-footed beast is twice as strong on the land as in the water. The reason is, because the water is a proper element of one, and the earth of the other. Thy work is thy element wherein thou art most able to resist temptation.

TEMPERANCE.

TEACH THE BOYS.

In riding with our little boy, recently, we passed a brewery, and the occasion was improved to tell him how such a place makes drunkards of the men who work in it, drunkards of the men who drink the beer made in it. We told him how such a place robbed little children of food and clothes, and made mothers weep, grow ill and die. How it took the grain out of the mouths of the poor, made men so crazy that they often kill each other, sometimes their own wives and children, and ruined the souls of makers, sellers and drinkers. That poor boy will never forget what a brewery does to people. We mothers have object lessons enough if we only use them. We use "line upon line" with our girls, but let our boys learn the world for themselves. We don't begin early enough. Satan has the garden all grown to weeds sometimes, before we deem it late enough to sow the flower-seeds. The "street" educates them while they are out nights. They are not "out nights" if parents do their duty. Said a prisoner, "I had a good home education; it was my street education that ruined me. I used to slip out of the house and go off with the boys in the street. In the street I learned to lounge; in the street I learned to swear; in the street I learned to smoke; in the street I learned to gamble; in the street I learned to pilfer. Oh, sir, it is in the street the devil lurks to work the ruin of the young!" Sarah Wesley taught her boys to love the gospel, and they preached that gospel. The mother of Samuel J. Mills began her work early, talking and praying with them while in college, as well, and the American Board of Foreign Missions was the result. It is hard to erase a mother's writing from a boy's heart. It is easy for Satan to make his mark on a page where there is no writing.—Exchange.

ABSTINENCE FOR THE SAKE OF OTHERS.

With everything that tends to promote the interests of temperance, this journal is thoroughly and heartily in sympathy. And so hearty is its sympathy that it cannot assent to any attempt to bolster up the cause by illogical methods, by wresting Scripture out of its proper sphere and scope, or by any appeal not warrented by Christian precept, and life, and apostolic teaching. As we regard the subject, the Gospel basis of temperance is abstinence for the sake of others,—the application of the Pauline principle, "It is good neither to eat meat nor to drink wine, nor anything by which thy brother is made to stumble." Here the whole matter is placed on the individual conscience and responsibility where it properly belongs. It is with no small regret that we notice a disposition on the part of some persons to place temperance on the basis of an iron-clad command, by the citation of the isolated text in Proverbs. Our enthusiastic friends not only err greatly in this sort of work, but they do harm: with quite as much propriety 1 Timothy 5: 23 might be cited for moderate drinking of wine. Brethren! we want to bring up the young to leave wine and spiritous liquors alone. We want to induce them to this course not by giving them a specious "reason why" founded on an isolated text, and which will not stand the test of maturer years, but we want to place the cause on the basis of regard for the weakness of others, we want to plant it squarely on the golden rule, the highest law of love. Any wresting of temperance from its rightful place, is an offence against truth, and does serious harm to a noble and beneficent cause.—Christian at Work, December 4.

CENTENNIAL OF THE TEMPERANCE REFORMATION.

The Board of Managers of the National Temperance Society, at its regular monthly meeting. November 25, unanimously adopted the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, The celebrated essay by Dr. Benjamin Rush, of Philadelphia, entitled, "An Inquiry into the Effects of Ardent Spirits upon the Human Body and Mind," first published in 1785, was largely instrumental in awakening attention and stimulating to action the early temperance reformers, and was the introduction of literature as an educator upon the subject of temperance; and,

Whereas, Rev. Dr. Dorchester, at the meeting of the recent General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, procured the passage of a resolution recommending the observing of the event, as the centennial of the temperance reformation; now, therefore, for the purpose of giving effect to the recommendation, and with the view of securing concert of action, be it

Resolved, That we heartily approve the object, and call upon the friends of temperance throughout the world to unite in celebrating this event as the centennial of the temperance reformation at some date during the year 1885, which shall hereafter be agreed to, and earnestly urge all friends of the cause to assist in making this a mighty power for the better education of all classes of people upon the fundamental principles of the reform, and to pray for the ultimate deliverance of our land from the thraldom of the drink-traffic.

Resolved, That we solicit churches, temperance organizations, and communities generally to make "centennial offerings" for the circulation of a temperance literature especially among the freedmen.

Resolved, That a committee of seven be appointed by this Board, with power to make all necessary arrangements for the celebration, and to confer with other organizations, if deemed expedient, for the accomplishment of the object.

The National Convention of the W. C. T. U., at St. Louis, endorsed this proposition, and fixed upon Dec. 23, 1885, (the date of the Woman's Crusade) for their celebration.

—The ministers of the German Methodist church, in session at Aekley, have passed resolutions declaring that they rejoice in the reality of the prohibitory law; "that this law has already produced good results, especially in the rural districts; "that they emphatically endore the enforcement of the law, especially in the interests of the rising generation; and "that they are firmly convinced that the foregoing express the sentiment of a large portion of the Germans in Iowa."

Dare to be singular in giving large gifts. Give not only in proportion to your style of dress and living, but out of proportion to it! There are people who can give one-tenth only with great difficulty, but find their happiness in doing it. There are those who ean easily give one-fifth. Let them rejoice to do it! It is said that with his free-will offerings the pious Israelite often gave one-third of his income. Are there no "Israelites indeed" in these days? Let us keep our wants small. Let us give out of proportion to our neighbors—out of proportion to our style of living. That was the secret of the blessing pronounced on the widow's two mites—she gave out of all proportion to her means. A most essential factor in our duty to the heathen, is prayer. We cannot pray earnestly and intelligently if we have had but a vague and indefinite idea of a subject. Therefore add to your systematic giving systematic study!—Mission Studies.

THE CHURCHES.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER.—The topics suggested for the week of prayer beginning January 4:

Sabbath, Jan. 4—Sermons, The Good Fight of Faith. Eph. 6: 10; 1 Tim 6:12.

Monday, Jan. 5—Thanksgiving and Praise. Ps. 89: 107.

Tuesday, Jan. 6—Humiliation and Confession. Isa. 57.

Wednesday, Jan. 7—Prayer for the Church of Christ. 1 Cor. 4; John 14.

Thursday, Jan. 8—Prayer for Families and Instructors of Youth. Matt. 4; Eph. 6; Prov. 9: 1–18; 8: 12–36.

Friday, Jan. 9—Prayer for the Nations. Isa. 32; 40: 9–31; Ps. 68.

Saturday, Jan. 10—Prayer for Missions, Home and Foreign. Acts 10: 34–48; Isa. 55; Matt. 9: 35–38; 1 Thess. 2.

Sabbath, Jan. 11—Sermons, Waiting for the Lord's Appearing. Isa. 25; 91; 2 Thess. 3: 3–5.

—E. F. Ward, who went from Illinois with his wife to India as a faith missionary, is maintained largely by contributions forwarded through the Free Methodist office. He reports, in a letter dated Nov. 6, that he has baptized a Hindoo of the merchant caste, who came to a deliberate conclusion to serve Christ, after studying the matter in the Gospels and in tracts for several years.

—The union revival services at Wheaton opened for the fourth week at the College chapel Sabbath evening with a very large audience and a solemn and earnest feeling upon all present. The work is deepening and promises to be neither short-lived nor ineffectual in healing the un-Christian animosities which arose years ago through the hostility shown toward the College and its principles.

—The colored Baptists of Missouri, at their recent conference, pledged themselves to raise $1,000 for the Congo Mission. It is affirmed by the Rev. R. De Baptiste, of Benton, Ill., that the colored Baptists throughout the Union are heartily in favor of the enterprise looking to the evangelization of the Dark Continent, and are disposed to furnish the men for it and also to share in raising the means.

—There are sixty organizations and thirty churches represented in the Woman's Presbyterial Society for Foreign Missions in the Presbytery of Philadelphia, North, and the society have two lady missionaries in the field, fifteen scholarships, a number of schools in Mexico, training-schools in Japan and other places.

—The statistics of the Reformed Church in America, as given in the proceedings of the General Synod report: Churches, 520; ministers, 549; received last year on confessions, 4,388; infants baptized, 4,397; adults, 1,083; total number of communicants, 81,880; contributions for religious and benevolent purposes, $220,383; for congregational purposes, $938,190.

—Rev. T. B. Fuller, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Niagara, died Wednesday at Hamilton, Ont. Several days before he accidentally ran a three-cornered file into his hand. At first the wound did not give much trouble, but a day or two after it festered and gangrened, blood-poisoning setting in, from which he died.

—For the sake of obstructing the work of Christian missionaries, and to prevent Moslem children from attending their schools, the Mohammedans have enacted a rule that no Moslem shall be considered his own master until he is twenty years of age.

—Just at this time, as bearing upon the proposed French occupancy of a portion of Madagascar, it is well to call to mind that through the labors of the London Missionary Society's agents the language was first reduced to writing, and schools to the number of 900, with 50,000 children in them, have been established, and 60,000 people can read. About 300,000 people are in regular attendance upon public worship, of whom about 70,000 are church members.

Their 1,200 church buildings were mostly built by themselves with little aid from without. The transformations wrought are like those reported in the Sandwich and Hervey Islands, as perfectly marvelous as any on record. With this people English missionaries passed through fiery persecutions to these days of tolerance and Christian faith in the reigning family. The claims of France are a sheer usurpation. —The Gospel in all Lands.

—What a striking providence that the Chinese, one-fourth of the whole human race, have but one written language! In India a book has to be published in twenty different languages before it can be read by all the people. In China the same printed page is read over the whole empire; and not only in China, but in Japan, Corea, Manchuria, Mongolia, Thibet, Tonquin, Cochin China, the Straits settlements, and wherever Chinamen have gone.

THE LIBERIAN SCHOOL.

On Thanksgiving Day Edward D. Morris, the Quaker philanthropist of Philadelphia, issued a circular to the women of Liberia and other African countries, offering them a hand loom and cotton gin in exchange for the products of the fields. He says:

"Ever since I was personally among you, and witnessed your rude and slow process of ginning cotton by hand picking and carding and spinning it by the feet and hands, then weaving the cotton into strips three inches wide—on a loom weighing less than two pounds—I have been laboring to perfect hand machinery to rapidly and perfectedly gin, card and spin cotton all at one and the same time, one man turning a wheel. I am happy to say that I have succeeded to my entire satisfaction. When I made an exhibit of Liberian products at the late Cotton Exposition, at Atlanta, Georgia, I there found an old and worn-out machine—sent there not only as a relic of olden times, but as a curious contrast between the cotton machinery of the past and the present.

"Knowing the need of Liberia and Africa for improved machinery of that kind, I purchased the old machine, and now have ready a new and improved one to gin, card and spin cotton perfectly by hand. You will find it at work in my school, at Arthington, Liberia, Africa; and also a hand loom to weave cloth one yard wide, to take the place of your present loom weaving only three inches wide. This cotton gin and loom, operated by two men, will do as much work in one day as twenty men can do in twenty days by your present rude process. This hand-power machinery will do much to lessen your dependence on others, and will help one and all to develop the untouched riches of your soil, clothe the naked, feed the hungry and give you money to build and furnish Christian homes, school houses and churches."

The Christian of London, England, during a recent visit of Mr. Morris to that country mentions the good work of educating and evangelizing Africa, undertaken by Mr. Morris, thus:

"When Mr. Morris first visited Liberia he found that the principle article of cultivation was the sugar-cane, and as a natural accompaniment the manufacture of rum was carried on. Determined to remove this greatest curse of mankind, and the principal hindrance to missionary success—intoxicating liquor—from the land, he set about promoting the cultivation of coffee. Having satisfied himself by careful analysis and experiment that the native Liberian coffee is the best, he threw himself into the work with the ardor of an enthusiast, and at the Exhibition at Philadelphia, U. S., he had the satisfaction of seeing a medal awarded to Liberia for this product. But this is not the goal of Mr. Morris's ambition; it is but the means used for the accomplishment of his noble purpose, which is to bring civilization and education to Africa through Liberia. The natives, said he, thirst for education, and he related how a little boy brought him, as a gift, two young leopards a few days old, and begged to be taken to America to be educated.

"Mr. Morris is endeavoring to establish schools in Liberia; in these he proposes to educate the sons of the chiefs of adjacent tribes, who are all anxious for education. Coffee-planting is to be a feature of the school system, and he believes that when these lads return to their homes, and succeed to the government of their respective tribes, they will promote coffee-planting among the people as the first step towards civilization. Wandering tribes will thus become stationary, and the great cause of tribal wars, the trespassing of one chief upon the land of another in search of food, will be avoided. The building of schools and mission houses will naturally follow, and native African missionaries are now ready to go forth to teach and to preach, and to convey the Gospel to their benighted brethren."

NEGRO EVANGELIZATION.

Bishop Thompson, of Mississippi, has undertaken zealously the evangelization of the 650,000 negroes of that State. He finds that "they are, in far greater proportion than their white neighbors, 'church members' or 'professors of religion.' Nominally this religion is prevailingly Methodist or Baptist, so-called. The religion taught in these 'colored churches,' while not much worse, in some respects, than what is taught in white congregations of the same names among the 'poor whites' of the mountains of Tennessee, Georgia or even Kentucky and Virginia, is not only a caricature of Christianity, but even of the accepted tenets of the respectable denominations whose names they bear. With the negro it is a dualism, God and the devil, about equal, contending for him, and the name of Jesus a sort of fetish to save him from the devil. It has rarely, I think any moral value whatever. The common experience, I believe, is that it has no influence on character. It consists in shouting, spasms, convulsions, and 'getting religion,' or 'getting through.' At the same time, there are a quarter of a million of negro children in the common schools of Mississippi. Half a million of public money is spent upon them yearly. There are also three universities and one normal school for the education of teachers—all State institutions for negroes. And the negroes, I am glad to say, are using them. But in their advances in education this fact is met, that the younger class are becoming disgusted with the old plantation religion, the Voodoo caricature of Christianity. Some of them are even calling themselves, in imitation of imitation of white men's conceit, 'agnostics!' Now, an ignorant negro population would be a sufficiently dangerous evil; but what shall we say to a semi-educated negro population under the leadership of men who have thrown off a superstition which they mistook for Christianity only to become Atheists?"

In these facts, Bishop Thompson finds a powerful argument for the most earnest and intelligent efforts to maintain religious privileges among the colored people in the South.—Christian Statesman.

A CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Wm. F. Davis, of Chelsea, Mass., the evangelist whose labors among the lumbermen of Northern Michigan were so blessed of God last year, spent the summer at his home, but not inactively, as his semi-annual Record shows. On the Sabbaths he labored on the streets of Boston, meeting some opposition as he says:

"On Sunday afternoon, the 20th of July, the police interrupted our service on the Common. We improved the walk from the Common to the station house to preach Christ to a moving audience of about two or three hundred souls, and to many curious listeners along the crowded thoroughfares. Another brother remained behind and preached Jesus to the people who remained on the Common. So that this opposition turned out rather to the futherance of the Gospel.

"No other serious interference with the free and peaceable worship of God in the open air on the public grounds occurred during the rest of the summer. Pastor W. T. Perrin, of the Monument Square Methodist church in Charlestown, and Bro H. L. Hastings, editor and publisher of the Christain, aided us in these Common services by preaching sermons full of the word of God and power of the Spirit. The sympathy of many citizens of Boston and adjacent cities has been expressed in behalf of the preservation of the immemorial liberty of conscience in public religious worship, on public domain, hitherto enjoyed in this country; and it is to be hoped that the day is far distant when our liberty-loving people will exchange their ancient freedom for the religious tyranny prevailing in Russia, in Spain, and in Austria."

The mission in the pineries continues and Mr. Davis receives contributions for carrying on the work. The interesting record of his work will be sent to all who write for it to Wm. F. Davis, Mt. Washington, Chelsea, Mass.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

—Blaney Lodge of Masons, No. 271 of this city, lately choose D. C. Cregier as its master, who was presented with a gavel made of oak taken from old Fort Dearborn, and mounted in silver. The gavel rests in a leather case upon two cedar brackets made of a part of the temple of Nebuchadnezzar, at Babylon, and is said to be over 2,500 years of age. The brackets are touchingly appropriate. How Commissioner Cregier must worship these relics of old Nebuchadnezzar's idolatry. But Nebuchadnezzar was turned out to grass and Cyrus burned up and destroyed Babylon. So must it be with abomniable Freemasonry.

—The United Workmen order is not oblivious to the seductions of politics. The newly elected Coroner in this city, Henry L. Hertz, is a member and the lodge had a glorification over his election, closing with a dance.

—In the official organ of the United Grand Lodge of Colon and Cuba for October 1st, appears an invitation from that body to all Masonic bodies of Spanish nationality, in America and the Peninsula, which govern symbolic lodges, to a Spanish-American Masonic Congress, to settle with binding force the landmarks and certain governing laws of Masonry, including jurisdiction. Venezuela is suggested as a central point for assembling.

—The total membership of the United Workmen lodges in the world is said by their organs to be 142,537.

—It shows the tendency of the secret orders of late years toward warlike equipment when Brand, the so called Odd fellow "Generral" urges that the "Uniform Rank" in that order elect officers who shall be competent drill masters.

—Arrangements have been made, say the daily papers, by the seven tribes of Independent Order of Red Men, from the North Side, to hold a public installation of officers at the Turner Hall, on North Clark street, on Saturday, January 3, at which time and place seventy officers will be duly installed in their respective places in a body. It is intended to make the occasion a grand one, and every member of the order in Illinois is invited to participate in the festivities following. There will be a grand ball, and the Red Men's Singing Society, the "Rothmaenner Liederkranz," will do its utmost to make the affair a great success. Tickets of admission will be complimentary.

The Scottish Rite Masons of 33rd degree have held their biennial session at their new Temple, 432 Third St., N. W. The allocution was pronounced by the "Most Puissant Sovercign Grand Commander," Gen. Albert Pike, and on Oct. 23 the temple was formally dedicated with the grandest Masonic honors. On the Altar of Obligation, which stood in the center of the room, were the Christian Scriptures, the Hebrew Penteteuch, the Mahommedan Koran, and the Persian Zend Avesta. Upon these lay two swords and a Kadosh dagger, and above all, the Grand Constitutions of Freemasonry. On the Altar of Incense, after it was dedicated, incense was offered, with music and Masonic prayers. It was in every sense of the word a heathen ceremony, and had it taken place in Pekin or Timbuctoo, would not have been out of character with its surroundings.—H. H. H. in Berea Evangelist.

GLORIOUS FRATERNITY.—A proclamation has been issued from the office of Grand High Priest Ladd, of Illinois Royal Arch Masons, under date of Nov. 29, embodying the resolutions adopted at the thirty-fifth annual convocation of the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of the State held in Chicago, Oct. 30, relative to the invasion of the Grand Chapter of Quebec by the Grand Lodge of Mark Masons of England. The following order is issued relative to the matter: That all fraternal intercourse between this grand chapter, its subordinate chapters and members thereof, and the Grand Lodge of Mark Master Masons of England, is hereby suspended. All the officers and members of the aforesaid bodies and all Mark Master Masons are ordered to refuse admission into their chapters and lodges, and to abstain from holding Masonic intercourse with Masons hailing from the aforesaid Grand Lodge of Mark Master Masons of England, or from any lodge holding or claiming allegiance thereto, until further proclamation from the Grand East. And it is further ordered that the representative from this Grand Chapter near the Grand Lodge of Mark Master Masons of England, and the representative of the said Grand Lodge of Mark Master Masons near this Grand Chapter, do forthwith resign their respective offices and return their commissions, as such, to the grand body from which they emanated.

A NEW PAMPHLET.

A WOMAN'S VICTORY;

OR

THE QUERY OF THE LODGEVILLE CHURCH

BY JENNIE L. HARDIE.

This simple and touching story which was lately published in the Cynosure is now ready for orders in a beautiful pamphlet. It is worth reading by every Anti-mason —and especially BY HIS WIFE. Get it and take it home to cheer the heart of your companion who may desire to do something for Christ against great evils, but is discouraged from making any public effort. PRICE, FIFTEEN CENTS. Ten for a dollar.

A Wonderful Woman,

A Wonderful Life,

AND

A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Flizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

Her book is neither fiction nor founded on fiction, but is an interesting narration of facts of a most thrilling character, as every one will find and testify who will get and read her book, now on sale at the Cynosure office, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill. Price, cloth, $1,75; half Russia, $2.25.

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Wit hman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

cloth.....75 cents.

THIS is a pleasant surprise in many ways. The author is Rev. W. T. Meloy, of the United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and the book is published by the Board of Publication of his denomination. It is a love story, not "fascinating," but with so much of genial interest that the reader is in no danger of laying it down unfinished. * * * The moral purpose of the book is to describe and vindicate Christian character, in its more heroic aspects, and it is a success. We congratulate the author and the United Presbyterian Board of Publication on this literary lily of the valley.—The Interior.

"LUCILLE VERNON" is evidently not an ideal sketch, but the fictitious names used represent to a great extent real men and women of flesh and blood. The characters of many of them are by no means attractive, but are perfect counterparts of querulous, obstinate and parsimonious professors who are thorns in the flesh of many a pastor in all the churches. But as in all the churches, there were also good and true men and women at Lansington, who upheld and encouraged the pastor. * * * In its author will be recognized the worthy pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and a welcome contributor to these columns.—United Presbyterian.

IT belongs to the class known as the religious novel. It is a love story written in the Pansy style, and so constructed as to teach sound moral and religious principles, in connection with quite an interesting narrative. Indeed, when the writer sat down to examine it, he commenced as a critic on the sharp lookout for blunders, but soon he became absorbed in the story, and forgot altogether his critical duties. He also noticed that when the members of his family commenced to read it, they had but little time for anything else until it was completed. Tried as a work of art by the practical test, it must be regarded as a success. Its influence will doubtless be good in correcting false views, and in helping the reader to sounder principles and to a better spirit. * * * Some may think some of the scenes depicted are not true to nature, but the critic would be likely to find, on inquiry, that the very incidents which he would select as unnatural are actual facts. "We often find that truth is stranger than fiction."—D. A. W. in the Christian Instructor.

The heroine, who becomes the bride of the pastor of the church at Lansington, is a wonderful exemplification of how a woman who is a true wife and help-meet may throw her life and energies into the great work of saving souls; aiding, by gentle words and sympathy, wise counsel and brave endurance, the husband having charge of a congregation where the Demon of Misrule held full sway. We follow with interest the history of the wife and husband through their hours of despondency and discouragement to the happy ending, where religion, harmony and peace have gained the ascendency and the good man and wife find their reward.—Pittsburgh Daily Telegraph.

EDUCATIONAL.

Hon. S. A. Smith has donated $50,000 to McGill University, Montreal, to be employed in holding separate classes for the higher education of ladies. This makes the total amount contributed by Mr. Smith $100,000, for what has long been felt as a want at Montreal.

A schoolmistress, while taking down the names and ages of her pupils and their parents, at the beginning of the term, asked one little fellow, "What's your father's name?" "Oh, you needn't take down his name; he's too old to go to school to a woman!" was the innocent reply.

Bishop Warren, in his Philadelphia Centennial address, made the following statement in regard to the denominational educational institutions of this country: The Protestant Episcopal church has 12 colleges, with $8,700,000 endowment; the Congregationalists, 28 colleges, with $9,000,000 endowment; Presbyterians. 41 colleges, with $7,000,000; Baptists, 46 colleges, with $10,300,000; Methodists, 52 colleges, with $11,000,000 endowment.

Rev. A. D. Mayo, an advocate of education at the South, says: "The first American free school was opened in Virginia; the first Sunday school in our land was started by John Wesley, in Georgia, and Maryland claims the honor of the first free high-school for young women. The original idea of our popular State University belongs to Virginia, and the first college diploma given to a woman was conferred in Georgia."

New Zealand, with 532,000 population exclusive of aborigines, reports about 87,000 pupils enrolled and 66,000 in average attendance, under about 2,000 teachers, and about 1,000 children in industrial schools Provision is made for normal instruction in four schools, with 147 students; for secondary instruction in twenty schools, and for superior instruction in four colleges, the last established in 1882.

The most obvious cause of the failure of formal education is the neglect of natural laws. We are in too much of a hurry. Instead of adapting our teaching, as nature does, to the child's developing powers and growing needs, we ply our little pupils with knowledge about which they do not and cannot care, with the inevitable result of disgusting them with learning, and delaying their mental development.—School Guardian, England.

WHAT RUINED THE SCHOOL.—McGee College, now used at the Holiness College at College Mound, Mo., was built at a cost of some $35,000, by the Cumberland Presbyterians. It dwindled away, was deserted and finally sold for a few hundred dollars to the holiness people. An old preacher of theirs, in speaking to them said: "What ruined this school? It was plug-hatedness, and gold-headed-canedness, extravagance, high salaries, etc., that done it. The Lord took it from us, and gave it to a people bringing forth the fruits thereof."

Bats and owls haunt hundreds of colleges and churches throughout the land. Methodism boasts of building a church a day and about that number are practically if not actually deserted. Hundreds of churches stand empty, so far as any religious life or power is concerned. Many never have any religious services in the finest part of the rural districts of the land.

Masonic "plug-hat-edness and gold-headed-canedness," and other deviltry, is at the root of the desolation.—Fire and Hammer.

OVERWORK IN GERMAN SCHOOLS.—After forty-two years' experience it is now virtually conceded in Germany that physical exercise is not a sufficient antidote to brain pressure, but that where the evil exists, the remedy must be sought in the removal of the cause. Official action with reference to over-pressure has been taken in Prussia, Saxony, Wurtembergh, Baden, Hesse, and Alsace-Lorraine. The commission appointed by the stadtholder of Alsace-Lorraine recommended that the number of study-hours should be restricted to twenty-six a week for the lowest classes of the gymnasia, and to twenty-eight and thirty-two for the higher; that the hours of home study should be eight, twelve and eighteen a week, progressing from the lowest class to the highest; and that six hours a week should be devoted to general physical exercise, including swimming, open-air sports, skating, and excursions. While the existing conditions will be somewhat ameliorated by these decrees, they do not seem to have brought about a final solution of the difficulty. Last year a petition upon the subject, signed by eminent teachers, physicians and other citizens, was addressed to the Prussian Chamber of Deputies. After setting forth the deplorable effects of the excessive strain upon the nervous system of scholars, it appealed to the patrotism of the deputies to put an end to the abuse, which, the petition asserts, "threatens little by little to reduce the cultivated classes of socicty to a state of moral weakness that shall render them incapable of great and manly resolution."

"GOING DOWN HILL."

How a Venerable Iowan Evaded the Greatest Difficulty which Besets the Aged.

Burlington, Ia., Hawkeye.

An account is going the rounds of the press of a woman who was so afflicted with rheumatism for fifteen years that her entire muscular system became rigid, and for all that period she was kept alive by gruel forced between her teeth.

A prominent New York physiciau was once asked what rheumatism was. He replied, "God only knows." He was undoubtedly right, because rheumatism seems to spring from a different cause in every individual case. If its origin is a mystery, its effects are too well and too widely known, for there is scarcely any season of the year when some persons are not more or less affected by it. In general, however, it prevails mostly among the aged, making their last days hard to bear. A prominent physician once remarked in our hearing, "If the aged could escape the tortures of rheumatism, their last years as a rule would be quiet, peaceful and painless."

Apropos of the above, Mr. W. DeGens, of Pella, Ia., sends us a communication which ordinarily we would not publish except at so much a line. But his experience has been so remarkable that we think we are justified in giving place to it. He says:

"Dear Sir:—I am 78 years of age. My life has been active. I am well known in this town, and what I say I do not think will be doubted by any one who knows me. Up to a year or two ago, I was the possessor of splendid health, and hoped I should wear out my life gradually and gracefully. Two years ago, however, I was overcome with that curse of old age, rheumatism. When it first prostrated me the pain was so acute I thought it was neuralgia, which medical authorities tell me indicates a low state of the system.

I fancied that this attack was the beginning of the end. I sent for a good doctor, who treated me with electrical and other agencies, but I grew worse. He finally said my case was a serious rheumatic one. For six months I could not use my limbs at all, and was handled by three strong persons, like a helpless child. Then came a period of better feelings, but re-action followed, and for six long months of pitiful suffering I was confined to the bed. For over a year I groaned in agony. I tried all reputable lotions, liniments, plasters and preparations in vain. At this stage, my friend, Elder Overcamp, came to see me, and upon his urgent recommendation I began to use Warner's safe rheumatic cure, a few bottles of which gave back to me the use of my limbs. I am now sleeping without pain, eating without distress, and feel as spry as I did when I was 60 years of age. I cordially recommend the preparation to all persons afflicted as I was, and especially to the thousands of aged men and women whose last days are embittered by this affliction."

Mr. DeGens' letter is endorsed by Elder Overcamp, who says he is a member of his church, and his case to him is surprising and marvelous. Mr. F. W. Brinkhoff also endorses the statement in similar terms.

There is no doubt that this is a true recital of the case, and Mr. DeGens' experience should be an encouragement to all others suffering as he did, to use the means he so successfully employed, for nothing better, if indeed, as good, can be had in the market.

FARM NOTES.

ALUM FOR FOUNDER.

A gentleman once told the writer of this that he had completely cured several cases of founder by the use of alum. He put one tablespoonful, finely powdered, as far back in the animal's mouth as possible as soon as making the discovery that that the horse is stiffened. Not only does he claim that he has cured several severe cases, but strongly affirmed that he had never known the remedy to fail if given immediately after the trouble has developed itself.

FEEDING CLOVER HAY.

A correspondent who has been troubled by coughing horses, says that from observation he has become convinced that the manner of feeding clover hay has been the entire cause. His custom, like that of many others, has been to let the animal draw the hay down through a rack, thus stripping off the fine dust which was drawn into the lungs in respiration and produced the cough. He believes the remedy for this trouble to be in giving the animal his feed in the natural way, i. e., allowing it to gather the food from the level of its feet. Since changing his racks to mangers the writer says he has had no further trouble with coughing horses.

EGGS IN WINTER.

Give fowls warm drink every morning, and see that they have an abundance of gravel. Concoct a pudding for them two or three times a week, not oftener, with the following ingredients: Place an old pail out at one side, and into it throw the meat scraps that are good for nothing else and egg-shells, beans, hominy, bread-crusts, corn parched very brown, coarse meal siftings, and then when the day arrives to serve up this dish, take the water in which you have parboiled your pork and beans, or other greasy water, stirring into it bran sufficient to thicken well, allowing it to cook a few minutes, pouring the whole over these saved-up scraps. Let it stand a short time after it is thoroughly stirred, and feed while warm. Aside from this, give warm drink every morning and you will have plenty of eggs.

ABOUT SHOEING.

The Horse Shoer says: Man has cut away the frog because he thinks that the animal will be injured if the frog touches the ground. He has then cut a deep groove at the base of the frog. This is to give a "well opened heel," as he is pleased to call it. He has scarred a deep notch in the toe for the purpose of receiving the "clip" of the shoe. He has scooped away the sole to "give it spring." This is evidently a conservative relic of the time when nails were not used, and the shoe attached by three pointed clips hammered over the edge, one in front, and one on either side. Then he has improved the whole of the outer surface of the hoof. As the Creator has furnished this part of the hoof with a thin, hard, polished plate, forming a sort of varnish which is impervious to wet, the farrier, as a matter of course, rasps it all away up to the crown. And as the Creator has placed round the crown a fringe of hair which acts as a thatch to the line of junction and throws off the rain upon the water-proof varnish, he cuts this away with his scissors. Lastly, the Creator having given to the horny hoof a mottling of soft, and partially translucent, brown, gray-blue, yellow, black and white, never exactly the same in two hoofs, much less in two horses, the farrier takes a blacking pot and brush, polishes up the hoofs until they look like patent leather boots, all four alike, and then contemplates his work with satisfaction. In his own words, he has "turned out a finished job of it."

If corn is thoroughly dry before being cribbed, it may be put together in very large quantities; but if not, then the crib ought to be narrow and open. There is no need of having an open crib take rain, says the Kansas Farmer. Let the siding be four inch boards with two corners diagonally opposite, chamfered off at right angles; put the boards on horizontally a half inch apart. The lower outer edge of every board extends down as far as to the upper inner edge of the next board below, although the boards are half an inch apart This prevents rain from getting into the crib. The beveled edges of the boards overlap and yet do not touch. At same time it affords good ventilation.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The bill for the admission of the southern part of Dakota as a State passed the Senate by a vote of 34 to 28, on Tuesday.

In the presence of the Cabinet, diplomatic corps, and prominent persons at the White House, Tuesday, President Arthur touched the electric button which set the machinery of the New Orleans Exposition revolving. The attendance at New Orleans was large, and addresses suitable to the occasion were made, the speech of President Arthur, opening the show, being telegraphed from the White House and read to the assemblage in the Exposition building.

Tuesday the House of Representatives passed a resolution providing for a holiday recess from the 20th of December until the 5th of January.

Lieutenant-General Sheridan has been selected by the joint Congressional commission as marshal of the day for the ceremonies attending the dedication of the Washington monument.

The opposition to the Spanish treaty of reciprocity with Cuba and Costa Rica in the country at large, particularly on the part of those interested in the cultivation and manufacture of sugar and tobacco, is daily becoming more manifest. Senators and Representatives are receiving letters by the hundreds protesting against its ratification. The opinion appears to be gaining ground that the Senate will refuse to approve it.

Chief Justice Waite is ill and confined to his bed. He was Monday absent from his place on the Supreme bench for the first time since assuming the duties of his office.

Representative McAdor, of New Jersey, introduced a joint resolution providing for the appropriation of $250,000 to be distributed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and expended under his direction by the proper local authorities of New York City, Brooklyn, Jersey City and Hoboken to prevent, by proper quarantine and sanitary measures, the entrance of cholera into this country, and to prevent its spread if it should take a foothold.

COUNTRY.

At a convention Thursday at Des Moines, Iowa, of representative temperance people, it was decided to call a State convention for Jan. 21 to consider the outlook for the prohibitory law.

It was 14 above zero at noon Friday in Petersburg, Va.—the coldest day in ten years.

The velocity of the wind on Mount Washington Friday night exceeded 100 miles an hour and the mercury was frozen. The spirit thermometer marked 42 below, and was still moving downward. The weather is intensely cold in New York and New England.

A snow blockade prevailed Thursday in Portland, Oregon, and telegrams from Iowa, Wisconsin, Illinois and Indiana towns gave readings of the thermometer varying all the way from 10 to 30 degrees below zero.

Heavy ice is running in the Missouri and Mississippi rivers, and fears are entertained at St. Louis lest the river may gorge south of that city, and prevent navigation to Southern points.

The motion of the defense in the Crouch murder case at Jackson, Mich., to dismiss, was denied Friday by the judge, and Holcomb's counsel proceeded with the call of witnesses.

The county poor house, near Lapeer, Mich., was burned Thursday night, the clothing and supplies being destroyed. The inmates, who were driven out in the intense cold, suffered severely. An insane woman perished in the flames, and another ran a long distance before being captured.

Investigations by Bradstreet's commercial agency show that in twenty-one States there are at the present time 316,000 persons out of employment.

Upon instruction from Mr. Blaine, his attorneys at Indianapolis Tuesday dismissed the libel suit against the Sentinel newspaper. Mr. Blaine felt confident that a fair trial of the case could not be had in Indiana, and that further prosecution of the case would be futile.

From March 24, 1855, to April 30, 1884, the Illinois Central Railroad has paid to the State of Illinois the sum of $9,648,649.41.

For the year ended Nov. 30, 3,252,175 barrels of salt were produced in Michigan—the largest in the State's history.

In a fight with deputy marshals in Hall county, Georgia, Tuesday night, three manufacturers of "moonshine" whisky were killed.

A hurricane at Buffalo Monday last caused heavy losses. The sea-wall was washed away, and the lower portion of the city submerged, rendering many families homeless and destitute. Falling chimneys demolished two school-houses, and the cupola of the grape sugar works was carried 300 feet and dropped through the roof of the gas work. Two men were seriously hurt, railway tracks were washed away, and a canal boat was sunk.

Hog-cholera in Nebraska has caused a loss of probably $500,000, the loss in Sarpy county alone amounting to $75,000.

P. J. Slocum, school teacher at Horse Cove, Ky., refused to leave town, though threatened by anonymous writers, and Saturday night a mob called at his house. The teacher opened fire and the invaders fled, leaving one of their number dead and another badly wounded, several of their horses being also seriously injured.

The Catholic orphan asylum was burned in Brooklyn Thursday. Two persons were killed by falling from the building and the charred bodies of 22 chidlren and two grown persons were discovered Sunday. Tons of rubbish and timbers are yet to be removed, and there are fears that other corpses will be found. The roster of the little ones shows about 120 as missing, but most of these are supposed to be housed in the neighborhood.

Lieutenant Abercrombie has just returned from Alaska, where he has been engaged in government explorations. He explored the Yukon river for 2,700 miles, and reports rich placers for a thousand miles up, paying $50 a day to the man. The season is short, and mining difficult. He says the fisheries are the finest known.

FOREIGN.

A powerful Anglo-Dutch company has signed a contract for cutting 15,000,000 meters of the Panama canal on the Culebra section at a figure under 8 francs per meter—the work to be finished within two years. A large force of Europeans will be ordered to the work.

In the German Reichstag a motion was made to create a second assistant to Bismarck in the Foreign Office, and notwithstanding it was strongly favored by Bismarck in a speech, the motion was defeated by 119 yeas to 140 nays.

BUSINESS.

PUBLISHERS' DEPARTMENT.

A letter just received, without any money enclosed to pay arrears, reads:—"I am hard up; please stop sending the Cynosure. Besides, I never subscribed for it."

The writer was one of a number whose subscription had expired previous to the N. C. A.'s purchase of the Cynosure, in January, 1883, but whose name was on the subscription list. He has continued to receive notice during the last two years that he was in arrears, but the above is the first word he sends to the office about the matter. If he did not order the paper in the first place, we do not know who did. We commend to him and a few others the article below, on what is fair, from the Christian, Boston:

WHAT IS FAIR.

Occasionally a subscriber, after receiving a paper a year, more or less, after the term of subscription had expired, writes, refusing to pay for the papers already received, because they were not stopped when the subscription expired.

As we do most of our business with persons whom we have never seen, we are obliged to trust to their sense of fairness in such matters; though sometimes we like to have them look at the matter from our point to view; and this is about the way we state the case to such subscribers.

We are always ready to discontinue papers when ordered so to do; but most of our subscribers wish their papers continued, and would be very much displeased if we should discontinue them without express orders. Many have been offended with us for thus discontinuing their papers, even after we have waited some time for the pay.

The decisions of the courts have made it the duty of persons receiving papers to notify publishers if they wish them discontinued, and also to refuse to take them from the post-office. If they fail to do this, they are responsible for papers which they receive, and no publisher is required to discontinue papers, even if ordered so to do, unless arrears are paid up.

The reason for this seems obvious to us. Whoever takes a paper and has the benefit of it, it would seem should pay for it. Now we have purchased materials, printed papers, paid postage, and sent them to a subscriber's address. He has received them, used them, or disposed of them, so that he could not return them in good order if called for; why then, should he not pay for them? Every paper has had on its address label a date stating just when his subscription expired. A glance at any one of these labels would have shown him the exact state of his account, and a postal card containing his name and address, and requesting the paper discontinued, would have cost him only one cent, and would have received immediate attention. The subscriber did not send it. If he had requested the post-master to order the papers discontinued he would have done so without expense, or if the subscriber had simply refused the papers, it would have been his duty to have informed us of the fact. The subscriber has done none of these things, but has received the papers, read them, had the benefit of them, and now declines to pay for them.

Suppose you keep cows and sell milk, sending it to different persons every week, and suppose I, a stranger, should request you to supply me with milk, paying for it a year in advance, without telling you to stop delivering at the end of the year. You send me the milk until the year expires. I am using the milk all the time, and find no fault with your milk, and say nothing to you about discontinuing the supply. You keep sending the milk six months longer. I receive the milk without objection, and use it, but at the end of six months, when you send me the bill, I tell you I do not consider myself under any obligation to pay for the milk I have had and used for the last six months! The milk has come, I have not refused it, or complained of it, but have received it, and drank it, but consider myself under no obligation to pay for it. Would you not say that my ideas of obligations were somewhat peculiar?

What would be thought of the honesty of such a man as that? Yet there are respectable persons who seem to take precisely the same position with regard to paying for a paper, and publishers leave the matter to their sense of right, and so lose large amounts. Is it strange that they earnestly hope that different views of the subject will yet prevail?

This is our view of the subject; is it not a fair one?

If Senator Blair of New Hampshire failed to get a recognition for the temperance movement from the Republican nominating convention last June, he has succeeded in persuading his fellow Senators to vote his bill for an investigation of the liquor traffic. The commission will be composed of seven persons, not more than four from one political party, to serve without salary and report to the President within eighteen months after appointment. They will be selected with a view to an honest, impartial and thorough investigation, and are to inquire into the relations of the liquor traffic to revenue and taxation, and its general, economic, criminal, moral, and scientific aspects in connection with pauperism, crime, social vice, the public health, and general welfare of the people, and also to inquire as to the practical results of license and prohibitory legislation for the prevention of intemperance in the several States. Senator Blair deserves the thanks of the nation for his present success which was reached by a party vote—24 to 16. May it be pushed with more energy than his Education bill, which, requiring the vote of the House, is likely to fail.

A St. Louis paper is responsible for the statement that Dorsey paid R. G. Ingersoll $100,000 for defending him in the Star Route suit in Washington. This is published as Dorsey's own statement, and is not unlikely when we remember how much more was paid by the Government to the prosecuting lawyers, who made so disgraceful a failure. But if Ingersoll has been receiving such fees he has no need to go about lecturing against the Bible at a hundred dollars or more a night. It is at least a hopeful sign that he is not drawing such crowds as heretofore. At Indianapolis a personal friend, shocked beyond endurance at Ingersoll's blasphemy, interrupted him with a rebuke in the midst of his discourse and then left the hall. Mr. Bell, the evangelist, mentions three cases within his knowledge where a reaction from Ingersollism has led men to a humble trust in Christ.

The Freemasons do not do all the lying for the secret orders. They are posting their membership as 14,000,000 the world over, which is ten times their actual number. After the same style the labor lodges report 40,000 men out of employment in Chicago, and in the country 1,750,000 men out of work who depend upon their earnings for a livelihood. If we take the ordinary estimate of one able-bodied man to every five inhabitants, it will be seen that if these lodge figures are correct they mean that one man in every three in Chicago is out of work. Ex-Mayor Powderly of Scranton, Pa., "Grand Master Worker" of the Knights of Labor, gives us the figures for the country. He would have us believe that the proportion of unemployed is nearly one in five. The extravagance of these estimates is their own refutation.

HENRY WILSON.

A few weeks since in calling attention to the petition of Mr. Leeds, a Friend, to the Philadelphia city council against pernicious literature, the Cynosure urged that the theatre posters shold be included in such a protest. It seems that about the same time the Congregational ministers of Chicago sent a note to Mayor Harrison protesting against the open and shameless theatrical advertisements to be seen in all parts of the city. Immodest and indecent pictures, they declare, are displayed in show-windows, on fences, walls and bill-boards, appealing to the basest passions of all classes. But we have not learned that any attention has been given to their protest. Let them not be discouraged, however, in this good work. The theatres assume, with the saloons, that they are not to be interfered with in their efforts to break down the Sabbath and prostitute the morals of the young. Let them learn their mistake.

Secretary Frelinghuysen wrote a letter to the Senate last week urging the adoption of the treaties with Spain for reciprocity in trade between this country and the West Indies, and with Nicaraugua for the construction of a ship canal. He answers the objections of the sugar and tobacco growers of the States and shows that the benefit to the whole country will be great and the prospective loss to producers will not reach their estimates. The Nicaraugua canal, he says, would open a trade which during the last twelve years would have given us $147,000,000 revenue. The treaty with Nicaraugua is regarded very favorably. That country cedes a strip of country six miles wide with the ports of Greytown and Brito at the Atlantic and Pacific ends. The canal proper will be sixty-one miles long, though the whole length is 181 miles, the San Juan river and lake furnishing navigation for the remaining distance. This route has been carefully examined by American engineers, and General Grant was much in favor of it, being made president of a provisional company for its construction. It is said the government can construct it in five years at a cost of from $45,000,000 to $65,000,000. The treaty now before the Senate has revived Captain Eads' ship railway scheme, and a model has been erected for the benefit of Congress. The communications from the State department show that these treaties are part of a comprepensive plan for the immense extention of American trade with the South American States and the debates upon their passage, together with the action of European powers, will be watched with extreme interest.

HENRY WILSON.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

[Read at the dinner of the Massachusetts Club, in Boston, on the seventieth anniversary of the birthday of the late Vice-President Wilson.]

The lowliest born of all the land,
He wrung from Fate's reluctant hand
The gifts which happier boyhood claims;
And, tasting on a thankless soil,
The bitter bread of unpaid toil,
He fed his soul with noble aims.

By the low hearth-fire's fitful blaze,
He reads of old heroic days,
The sage's thought, the patriot's speech;
Unhelped, alone, himself he taught;
His school the craft at which he wrought,
His lore, the book within his reach.

He felt his country's need; he knew
The work her children had to do;
And when, at last, he heard the call
In her behalf to serve and dare,
Beside his Senatorial chair
He stood, the unquestioned peer of all.

Beyond the accident of birth,
He proved his simple manhood's worth;
Ancestral pride and classic grace
Confessed the large-brained artisan,
So clear of sight, so wise in plan
And counsel, equal to his place.

With glance intuitive, he saw
Through all disguise of form and law,
And read men like an open book;
Fearless and firm, he never quailed,
Nor turned aside for threats, nor failed
To do the thing he undertook.

How wise, how brave he was, how well
He bore himself, let history tell,
While waves our flag o'er land and sea,
No black threads in its warp or weft;
He found dissevered States, he left
A grateful Nation, strong and free!

WHO KILLED COCK ROBIN?

OR DID HE COMMIT SUICIDE?

BY GEORGE W. CLARK.

I see many Republican editors quote, and seem to justify, and even exult, over the burning of Gov. St. John in effigy by disappointed and maddened Republicans, as though this flagrant act of revenge was a discredit to Mr. St. John, instead of a disgrace to the mobs which perpetrated the outrage.

It seems strange that these editors should so soon have forgotten the hanging and burning in effigy of the Abolitionists by the slave-holders and their pro-slavery mobs; the mauling of a Sumner in the Senate chamber of the United States; the haltering of a Garrison through the streets of Boston; the burning of a McIntosh at the trunk of a tree in Missouri; the destruction of James G. Birney's press in the river at Cincinnati; the shooting down of a Lovejoy at Alton, Ill., while defending his own press, and his right to use it in defense of freedom; and the more recent martyrdom of a Lincoln for his principles and noble defense of liberty. Was it the fault or to the discredit of these men that they were thus outraged and murdered? Or did it stay the onward march of the cause of freedom? Or will such outrages help the Republican party?

Pray what had St. John done that he should be burnt in effigy and his name thus blackened and his persecutors thus canonized? Mr. St. John has proved himself to be a sincere, earnest and consistent Christian and temperance worker, and he has the entire confidence and support of the true and tried temperance and prohibition workers throughout the country, especially of those who are governed more by moral principle and honest devotion to the cause than to the mere success of a party! He was unanimously nominated by a National convention of 600 as good, true, and able men, and as intelligent as any body of men who meet in the United States for moral, religious, or political purposes; and who had just as good a right to nominate and support a representative of their principles and measures as any other class or body of their fellow citizens. They had surveyed their ground thoroughly, they knew what they were about, and they kew their man well. They were not a body of wily politicians scheming for the success of a party without principles, but a body of sober, thoughtful, Christian patriots intent on a great and grand purpose, the overthrow of the wicked, sensual and devilish liquor traffic in this country—a business causing more human degradation, depravity, crime, suffering and sorrow than all other causes combined, and which menaces more seriously than all other evils the undermining of our social, civil and political fabric. St. John, in good faith, accepted the nomination thus tendered, and the issues and responsibilities it involved, and so ably, consistently and honorably conducted himself throughout, and so faithfully represented the principles, and so gallantly bore aloft the banner of the noble party that nominated him as to give universal satisfaction to all the tried and true friends of the cause he was chosen to represent; and the moral effect of the large vote given for him as such a representative will be everywhere felt throughout the country, an omen of triumph to the right and overthrow of the wrong.

The pretended "issues" between the old parties ("tweedledum and tweedledee") sink into insignificance compared with this vital question—whether the over-shadowing liquor crime and curse with all its horrible and revolting consequences shall continue to be legalized, popularized and thus perpetuated by LAW! or, whether it shall be prohibited and put under the BAN OF THE LAW.

Both the old parties utterly ignore this question, and vie with each other in their selfish and cowardly subserviency to the heartless and consciousless liquor power, and just as completely and absolutely as the slave power ruled and run the Whig and Democratic parties, just so now does the liquor power rule and run the Democratic and Republican parties of to-day! Neither of these have moral principle or moral courage enough to take square and manly issue with this giant power, but both court its favor for its votes! "Liker and terbaker" are the "staff of life" with the Democratic party, the "meat on which that Cæsar feeds," and the hellish saloons are the steam engines by which the Democratic machinery is run. To ask that party, therefore, to aid our cause would be like asking "Satan to cast out Satan!" But an open foe is better than a false friend, better than a secret enemy!

The Republican party, though of deeds glorious in the past, is now the most dangerous foe to Prohibition because of its loyal record, and its present semblance of superior morality, respectability, patriotism, etc., while it thereby deceives, misleads, absorbs and perverts to the support and continuance of the license system, and thereby the liquor scourge, a large class of the better educated, temperance and religious element of the country, an element which should naturally, and would otherwise readily and heartily unite and combine its moral and political force and power with the Prohibitionists, for the overthrow of this great enemy of the purest, holiest, noblest and most sacred things on earth, this greatest of our National crimes and curses, the liquor traffic.

For twenty-four years, while in power, the Republican party has "sanctioned and sanctified" the liquor business wherever it has had authority, admitting the importation of intoxicating poisons into all the ports of the United States, licensing their sale in all the Territories of the United States; legalizing more than a thousand drunkeries in the District of Columbia and sanctioning these sinks of iniquity in the very Capitol of the Nation; and, under the plausible name of "tax for revenues," taking a bribe from liquor sellers all over the country, thus giving its sanction to the wicked business even in States where the traffic is prohibited by State laws.

The Republican party openly advocates and defends this stupendous fraud and swindle, the license scheme, which legalizes and sustains, and thus makes respectable a traffic which would otherwise be considered and denounced as infamous and detestable. Mr. Blaine, with never a suggestion of its evils and dangers to the country, or the importance of its abolition, cooly contemplates its legalized continuance, and then distributing the (infernal) revenue derived therefrom among the several States, a virtual bonus for the indefinite perpetuation of the crime, pauper, and misery-breeding business. And Mr. Logan's proposition, still more repugnant to every moral sense, also contemplates the same legalized continuance of the iniquitous traffic; and then appropriating the "revenue" to the education of the people's children! sublime moral statesmanship this! This is the party, these the principles, and these the candidates Prohibitionists are anathematized by because they could not vote for them!

Mr. Blaine seems to be a politician of most wonderful flexibility and convenience to his party. To get the support of the liquor men he totally and studiously ignored the liquor question, making no allusion to the subject in any of his political addresses during the campaign. In his previous letter on the distribution of the "liquor revenue" among the several States, he treats the question as a "national one;" in another place he makes it a "local" one. But when he comes to the "local" point at his own polling place, he "dodges" the issue—the constitutional banishment of the liquor curse from his own State!

Now, in view of all these facts, in the name of common sense and common consistency, in the name of conscience and common honesty, how could temperance men and Prohibitionists vote for this party or its candidates? To vote for either the Democratic or Republican parties in their present servile relation to the liquor power would be to abandon our principles, turn our backs upon our own organization, abnegate our moral and political power, and surrender to them, and give a new lease of life and hope to the liquor business. This would be to stultify and make ourselves a laughing stock before the whole world. Thank God, the Prohibitionists have not done so inconsistent, foolish, wicked and suicidal a thing. They have voted in the fear and love of God, and they have not, like the Republicans, thrown away their votes, their time, their money and their opportunity. They have entered the wedge. They have planted the cedar. They have forced the issue. They have

> "Sown the golden grain to-day
> For the harvest of to-morrow."

But now the great question is, "Who killed Cock Robin?" A class of professed temperance men who threw away their votes on a pro-license party say the naughty Prohibitionists did it, and they "will never do anything more for temperance, out of spite; are going to have the canse set back twenty years!" Reforms don't go backward. Probably the Almighty has something to do with the "cause" and will take care of it, and he may have something to do with the Republican party for its whoredom with the liquor harlot, as he did with the Whig party for its whoredom with the slavery harlot.

It is plain that the Republicans have nobody to blame but themselves for their defeat. They knew their subserviency to the liquor interest was such that Prohibitionists could not vote for them. As they sow they must reap. Alas! they died of their own hands, committed suicide. The righteous only have promise of a resurrection to life.

Detroit, Mich.

A SOUND CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

Elder C. E. Rowley, editor of the Holiness Conservator, has published an account of his Christian experience which bears the Gospel marks of genuineness. We can only give a few extracts. He says: "I was led out for the salvation of sinners and the sanctification of believers. Now, I was a new creature; I was taken into fellowship with my Lord, and he had blessed me with such a view of himself, that I was continually praising him and magnifying his glorious name. Of course this brought me some opposition, but I was too joyful in my God to pay any particular attention thereto.

"In a little holiness meeting at Pleasant Valley, a few miles from town, I publicly and forever renounced the Masonic lodge, seeing very clearly that I could never again enter its dark portals, as, in fact, I never had done since God forgave me my sins a few months before. At this aetion my Masonic brethren (?) were very indignant, and soon I began to receive official summonses from the lodge, there to appear and answer for my misdemeanors. Of these, however, I took no notiee, and probably I was expelled from the order—a bit of reproach (if it might be so regarded) I was not careful to avoid. The Lord had, indeed, saved me from all man-fearing and man-pleasing spirit.

"And now, (Nov. 25, 1884), though more than nine years since the Lord fully saved my soul, I am glad to say the anointing abideth. Hallelujah!

"I am sure I desire nothing but to lead souls to Christ, and to build up the Redeemer's Kingdom. I would rather see a soul converted, or wholly sanctified, than to own the world. I am willing, yea, glad, to endure toil and suffer reproach for Jesus' sake."

MASONIC LODG—IC.

BY RECANTOR.

A Mason made this sapient dodge
When urged, of late, "All nature scan,
And you will find despite her plan
That she's herself a secret lodge."

"She hath her signs and passwords, too,
Her mystic grips, her bonds and ties,
Her secrets hid from common eyes
But open to a favored few:"

"Her ante-room and guards before,
Her tylers with their unsheathed swords,
Her port-holes and her whispered words,
Her friendly wardens at the door;"

"And to her timid ones she saith,
'Pursue your guide and fear no evil,
Within my Lodge there is no devil
Nor sense of sin nor dread of death.'"

"Our Lodge is founded on the Word,
Nor was it built by human hands;
Though scattered o'er earth's fairest lands
It owns and names one common Lord."

"More ancient than the Christian church,
And on a freer, broader plan
It makes one brotherhood of man
And gives the good for which all search."

Then said I, "Mason, mystic brother,
If Nature is herself a Lodge,
Explain the fine, sophistic dodge,
Why should you Masons make another?

"If not forbid, I pray rehearse
The vows of 'entered, past and raised,'
And tell precisely how is phrased
The manifolded oath and curse.

"And tell, if not with dread opprest,
If hers will not be oathbound mutes,
Plucks she the tongue out by its roots
And heart from forth the heaving breast?

"And gives she to the angry waves
The mangled flesh, which none may know,
Beyond the reach of cable-tow
The culprits their dishonored graves?"

WEEK-DAY SERMON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

Now that the supernatural element, which is at the bottom of all true religious experience, seems to be once more asserting itself as a visible factor in the life of the Christian church—when the marvelous increase of "faith cures" are convincing the most doubting that God's promises mean the same thing to-day that they did yesterday, it may be in order to consider the subject of "impressions."

Mrs. F. has frequently told me that there are people with whom she could never introduce talk of a religious nature without an instant feeling of embarrassment and constraint, as if between them there was a great gulf fixed, unspanned by any electric wire of a common spiritual sympathy. And Madame Guyon has related in one of her letters, how a seemingly devout and earnest seeker after truth—really a spy from the papal party—called several times to converse with her; and though she had not a suspicion of the man's real errand, all that delightful freedom with which she was wont to talk on the themes most dear to her was suddenly checked—congealed like a streamlet under December frost; and he departed with his mission unfulfilled, foiled by that watchful Spirit who had thus strangely sealed her lips with the protecting seal of silence.

"My husband once had a remarkable experience of this kind," said Mrs. F. He stayed over night during a quarterly meeting with a family, all of whose members were personally unknown to him. When nine o'clock came, the head of the household invited him to conduct the family devotions. Mr. F. took the Bible and read a chapter, and then he knelt, but he could not pray. He tried repeatedly, but no words would come. He rose from his knees and said to the wondering family, "There is some thing wrong here, some sin which is grieving the Spirit and must be put away."

"They say there is a skeleton in every house. There was a skeleton there,—a family disagreement over some property. But they had covered it up so well that nobody guessed the bitterness and strife and heart-burning that there was under such a fair outside. They confessed it to Mr. F., and they sat up all night talking the matter over, and trying to come to a mutual understanding. It was no play-work. The hard feelings had been cherished too long to die easy. But they laid the axe at the root of the tree. They put away the thing that was hindering God's blessing, and were ever afterwards as happy and united a family as could be found."

"Then you believe in impressions, Mrs. F?"

"When they are plainly the work of the Holy Spirit. Mr. F. and I talked the subject over, and tried to get all the light upon it that we could from Scripture. In this case the result showed that Mr. F. was guided by the Spirit to make peace in a divided family, while perfectly blind himself to the way in which he was being led. These impressions for which we cannot account may often keep us from errors and mistakes, and from useless wasting of our words and efforts. I believe there is a hint of this in Christ's charge to his disciples, 'If the house be not worthy let your peace return to you.' But to have this constant guidance we must keep in the shadow of the cross. Away from Christ, 'impressions' are like the will o' the wisp. They will lead us a fool's chase over the bogs, farther and farther away from the firm, solid foundations of Christian faith. And yet it ought to be a grand incentive to us on our heavenward way—this promise of a constant, loving, watchful superintendence over every step. 'He shall give his angels charge over thee,' is the promise, but it is only made to him 'that dwelleth in the secret place of the most High,'"

Madame Guyon may be supposed to represent an exceptionally high type of piety, but is there anybody on earth who needs this fine instinct which is "a discerner of spirits, and knows when to speak, and when to be silent, more than the mother of a large family? So of the Sunday-school teacher. His or her class cannot be treated in the gross, by set rule. Natures may there meet as widely sundered as the poles, and without the spiritual clairvoyance there can be no intelligent teaching of Bible truth. And what the mother and Sunday-school teacher need, ministers and missionaries and reformers need, and in short every Christian who feels he has a work given him, and purposes to do it. If like the apostle John, his daily walk is a constant leaning on the Saviour's bosom, he will always have in his soul "an upper room," whose sacred hush shall be a shrine for the still, small voice of the living Oracle which "shall teach him to profit, and lead him by a way he knoweth not."

LETTER FROM WESTERN ASIA.

ADA BAZAR, Nov. 25th, 1884.

How often the Lord works deliverance in a way we expect not. That Greek brother mentioned in my last, has been employed as colporteur in Constantinople. His wife, after three years of separation, is now living with her husband, reading the Word of God, learning to sing hymns and attending services with him. Thus the enemy has been disappointed.

Another Greek young man from a neighboring village appears to have become truly renewed by the Spirit. His greatest foe was his own mother. She tried in every way to hinder her son from reading the Bible. Once she scolded and cursed him for not having been to the Greek church. He always endeavoured to soften her heart by the most dutiful conduct. At last she relented. A few Sabbaths ago she was in our chapel. She was much impressed, and when she went home she said to her son: "Now let all my curses be dissolved and come to nothing."

I have visited a few villages north and south of Ada Bazar and preached at all the stations. In former years when I visited these villages, most of the people having never seen a Protestant before, with terror the women used to look for a way of escape as if they had seen a devil; the only explanation some gave to inquirers was, that we were Freemasons—meaning that we were a sort of secret infidels. But now they receive us very kindly. In one of the villages I baptized two children and in another one. Administered also communion, and two women were admitted to the membership of the church. One of them was from another village, walking five miles. She is the only evangelical Armenian in her village. Another solitary light burning in a dark place is a man whom I met in another village. The power of the Gospel is notably manifested in the case of this man. He was a drunken sot and lost in every way. But when he heard the Gospel he was much impressed. The Holy Spirit has led him to repentance and his character is now entirely changed. His influence over Turks and Armenians is great. They hate him, but they are afraid of him, because of his righteous character. The only discouraging thing in these villages is, the inability of our people there to support their institutions. They are few and among them there are those who do not try to give for religious purposes. But the field is great and needy, and I trust our American Board will not withdraw and leave them to help themselves.

Rev. Mr. Pierce, of Bardizag, is actively engaged in his high school. The school thus far, has been successful, and this year has 70 boarder students. Mr. Pierce invited lately, the pastors, preachers and delegates of the churches in the Nicomedea station to have a religious conference. Religious and social topics were discussed and earnest addresses were made.

Pastor of the Evang. Ar. Church.

CONSECRATION.

AN ADDRESS TO CHRISTIANS BY D. L. MOODY.

There is no better way of being consecrated than by being engaged in God's work. "He that watereth shall be watered also himself" (Prov. 11: 25). It is impossible for a child of God to keep his heart warm without work. Reading the Bible is very good; so is prayer; but if we do not carry out the instructions of the Bible in active work, I am sure there will be no real life. When Christians are not willing or ready to work, life becomes stagnant. "Be ye doers of the word, not hearers only, deceiving your own selves" (James 1: 22).

I suppose there is no place in the world where people are given to hearing as in Scotland. But what the Master wants is to have us go out and work for him. You cannot have true faith without works, any more than you can have fire without heat. I have been amazed to find how few of God's people are really ready for his work. How many there are who have been in the church for ten or twenty or forty years; yet if the minister should ask them to go and visit some one, and talk and pray with them, they would say, "Please send some one else, but don't send me." One-tenth of our church members are doing all the work, while the other nine-tenths do nothing. I believe this state of things is doing more to retard the cause of Christ to-day than anything else. I would like to make a pilgrimage round the world to find a body of Christian people who are ALL at work.

In Paul's letter to Timothy (chap. 2: 21), he speaks of vessels "sanctified and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work." We should study to be ready for every good work, not to be narrow-minded and think that all the work that is worth doing is the little part in which we are engaged. We should study how we can be more efficient workers in the vineyard. We should study not only the Word of God, but human nature, so that we may know how to reach men.

What is an army good for, if it is not ready for work? An army of a thousand men who are thoroughly disciplined and prepared, can rout a hundred thousand soldiers who are not ready. That is about the condition the church is in at the present time. Instead of one chasing a thousand, it takes about a thousand to put one to flight. Perhaps in a church of 500 members, there will not be one conversion in a whole year. There is something radically wrong.

How many men have been reached and saved just by a word spoken at the right time. Some people say, "Well, it is not my work; it belongs to the minister." The work will never be done until it gets into the hands of the congregation as well as the minister. If we were to unite the pulpit and pew, the church would be a vital power in the world. Every man and every woman that loves the Lord Jesus Christ ought to be at work in the vineyard. Men excuse themselves by saying they have not been appointed. If you were to see a man fall into the river, you would not wait until you were appointed by a committee before you tried to save him. Another man says, "It is not my parish." Suppose the good Samaritan had said: "This is not my parish; this man does not belong to my nation; let him die." John Wesley's motto was: "The world is my parish"—wherever there was a lost soul whom he could tell of Christ and heaven. That is the spirit we want to have.

I find some people who say: "Oh, I do not belong to here; I come from Edinburg, or Glasgow, or somewhere else." Well, I belong to America; but we all belong to the world, and the world is perishing for want of a Saviour. We want to preach down self and preach up Christ. Until every man and woman believes that they have a mission, so long will it be before the world will hear the Gospel message. Preaching is just testifying. A good many women could be reached by you godly women, better than by all the ministers in the land. Let the poor mothers be called together, and have a kitchen meeting. Let the Christian mothers set to work, and be ready for every good work.

The idea that a man has necessarily to be converted under a sermon in a church, or in some particular way, has no ground in Scripture. Those we read of in the New Testament were converted in all kinds of ways and all sorts of places. Zaccheus was converted up a tree. The most of those converted during Christ's life were not found in the synagogues or the temple, but on the highways, wherever he met them. What we want is to get back to the primitive days of Christianity.

In Rev. 14: 13, we read, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth. Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." Suppose you were to die to-day, is there any work that will follow you? Could these words be honestly written on your tombstone? Have you set a stream running that will flow on after you are dead and gone? Do you know anyone that would come to your grave and say, "Here lies the man or woman who led me to the Lord Jesus Christ?" That is the best monument we can have, living monuments of our faithfulness to God. In Genesis you often read of a man who lived so many years, and then it is said, "He died." The cradle and the grave are brought close together. He simply lived and died; so with a great many so-called Christians.

God has a work for every one of us to do. It is a false idea we have that some one else will do our work if we do not do it. No; no one can do my work. Everyone has got to give an account of his own stewardship. Perhaps you say, "I have never found out what my work is." Well, I believe there is no man living who can tell me what my work is; I must get it from headquarters—from the Master himself. If you are really anxious to know what it is, you will soon find it out. God will lead you into the field. I believe every man's life has been planned by the Almighty, away back in the counsels of eternity.

Salvation is a gift, but if we are to get a crown we have to work for it. If I am faithful I get a crown; if I am not, I lose my crown. In Corinthians we read about the foundation standing, but our works being burned up. I believe a good many will get into heaven as Lot got out of Sodom—they will barely be saved, as "by the skin of their teeth." They will have no abundant entrance; they will have no crown, because they have never earned one.

One thing is plain—that we as parents have got a work to do in our homes. I am amazed to see how little is done there. Satan has rocked the church to sleep while the children are wandering and going astray. Fathers and mothers! where are your boys to-day? A man in our country felt as though he ought to speak to his neighbor, whose son was wandering. He said, "Do you know that your son has got into bad company, and has been seen drunk?" The father did not believe it. A little while after, he thought he would sit up for his son's return home, and waited for him till past midnight. At last he went to open the door, and, to his great sorrow, he found his son drunk. He was so indignant that he ordered him away, slamming the door in his face; he told him never to come back again. By and by his mind went back to the past, and he said to himself, "What have I done for my boy? I have never prayed for him. I have set him a bad example at home by having the drink on my table." He got on his boots and overcoat, and started out, walking up and down the streets, hunting for his boy. At length he got a policeman to help him, and ultimately found his boy and had him taken home. The next morning he confessed that he had not done right, and asked his boy to forgive him. The boy's heart broke, and it was not long before the whole family were brought into the kingdom of God.

Many a father and mother are seeing their children going to ruin, yet they do not labor for their salvation. Let us not rest day or night until our children are brought to Christ.

"Bring him to me," said the Saviour (Mark 9: 19). The disciples had no faith, and the scribes gathered round and began to question them. What do we see to-day? Are not infidels rejoicing over us because our children are going astray? They say, "Elder So-and-so, Minister So-and-so—look at their sons and daughters see how they have gone astray." The world is cavilling at us. What is the trouble? It is the want of faith in the church of God. It is time to be in earnest for the salvation of those who are dear to us. See how infidelity is coming into the church of God. There are hundreds of fathers and mothers who do not believe their children can be converted until they come to manhood and womanhood. Satan must first sow the tares until there is a great harvest of evil; then they can say they are so far gone that they cannot be reached. Let us begin in our own homes and toil until our churches are saved.

A PSALM FOR NEW YEAR'S EVE.

A friend stands at the door;
  In either tight-closed hand
Hiding rich gifts, three hundred and three score:
  Waiting to strew them daily o'er the land
Even as seed the sower.
  Each drops he, treads it in and passes by:
  It cannot be made fruitful till it die.

O good New Year, we clasp
  This warm shut hand of thine,
Loosing forever with half sigh, half gasp,
  That which from ours falls like dead fingers' twine:
Ay, whether fierce its grasp
  Has been or gentle, having been, we know
  That it was blessed: let the Old Year go.

O New Year, teach us faith!
  The road of life is hard;
When our feet bleed and scourging winds us scathe,
  Point thou to him whose visage was more marred
Than any man's; who saith
  "Make straight paths for your feet"—and to the opprest—
  "Come ye to me, and I will give you rest."

Yet hang some lamp-like hope
  Above this unknown way,
Kind year, to give our spirits freer scope
  And our hands strength to work while it is day.
But if that way must slope
  Tombward, O bring before our fading eyes
  The lamp of life, the Hope that never dies.

Comfort our souls with love—
  Love of all human kind;
Love special, close—in which like sheltered dove
  Each weary heart its own safe nest may find;
And love that turns above
  Adoringly; contented to resign
  All loves, if need be, for the Love Divine.

Friend, come thou like a friend,
  And whether bright thy face,
Or dim with clouds we cannot comprehend—
  We'll hold out patient hands, each in his place,
And trust thee to the end.
  Knowing thou leadest onwards to those spheres
  Where there are neither days nor months nor years.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS:

OR

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR.

BY E. E. FLAGG, AUTHOR OF "HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

CHAPTER VI.—Concluded.

Stephen read this from the slip of paper which he held in his hand, and then paused for a moment before adding: "Gentlemen, you have now the witness of his own mouth that he cares less to protect the homes of the nation than to protect a party, and more for the votes of the liquor interest than the wail of its murdered victims. But their cries have entered into the ears of the Lord God of Sabaoth, and

'E'en now from lone Mount Gerizim and Ebal's starry crown,
We call the dews of blessing or the bolts of cursing down.'

The question of the hour confronts us. As free American citizens what answer shall we give? Shall we put our necks under party yokes and cower before the crack of party whips, or shall we assert our blood-bought right to vote as we choose, asking no consent from political demagogues? It stands before us like the Sphinx, and it will not down at the bidding of fear or interest. That question has got to be answered. Every election day it will stand by the ballot-box sterner and more awful till we are compelled—a word for slaves, not for freemen—aye, compelled to answer it one way or the other. Oh, for a voice that shall go forth to-morrow from every voting precinct in this State, and sound like the trump of doom in the ears of 'them that build a town with blood and establish a city by iniquity,' but clear as the clarion of victory and tender as the voices of pitying angels in the hearts and homes made desolate by the liquor traffic: 'Down with this giant abomination, down with legalized robbery and murder under the name of license! But up with the snow-white banner of Prohibition! Fling it wide to the breeze with the name of the noblest of her leaders blazoned upon it, the name of Col. Gail Hicks. And may God forever speed the right.'"

Stephen stopped, his whole frame quivering like a racer's at the goal. His ingenious flank movement had succeeded. Those who had hoped to see the meeting end as it had at one time threatened to, in a ridiculous fizzle, were doomed to disappointment.

"If he didn't floor them fellows handsomely, now," chuckled Martin Treworthy. "A sight of their faces was worth all the specie in my tin box."

"Well, I must say I'm disappointed in Colonel Morrison," replied Nelson, discontentedly. To stand up for prohibition and Putney in the same breath is 'good Lord and good devil' with a vengeance."

"Oh, it only shows how well the Masonic lodge is educating our politicians," returned Martin, with a grim smile. "The result is, they stay politicians. They can't grow into statesmen under lodge training no more than the dwarf trees that I've read the Chinese raise in thimbles can grow into real oaks and elms."

"But all our public men are not Masons," objected Nelson.

"No; but the lodge influence goes everywhere like malaria, and they can't help breathing it in, and then good, simple souls wonder what ails Congress that we have such crooked goings on—back salary grabs, and Credit Mobilier schemes, and Star Route swindles, and nobody knows what else. They can't imagine why there is so much boss rule and party spirit and so little patriotism; so much cheating of the government and so little common honesty; so much practical infidelity and so little practical Christianity. Now, Nelson, you are a sensible fellow on the whole, and I want you to look at this thing just as it stands. The lodge takes three dollars from each of its members where it pays out one to help them in return. What is that but a lesson in swindling? Then it puts on a great show of piety and religion, and calls it benevolence. That is lesson in hypocrisy number two. It demands obedience to all its laws and requirements, and no questions asked. There is lesson in boss rule number three. It refuses to expel a traitor to his country—Jeff Davis or Benedict Arnold, it makes no difference which—because treason is not a Masonic sin. There is lesson in disloyalty number four. It tears Christ's name from his own New Testament and preaches another gospel. There is lesson in infidelity number five. And so I might go on to the end of the chapter. Will politicians trained in such principles, think you, sacrifice a jot of their self-interest to put down all the saloons in the land? Do men gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles? Do you think we can have the lodge in every city and village and town and not have to take the fruit of the lodge along with it? Can we sow the wind and not reap the whirlwind? Yes; if history and the Bible can go back on their own records and contradict themselves. But that ain't a thing they are likely to do in a hurry, thank the Lord! not even to please the politicians."

Nelson Newhall turned away in gloomy silence. His sanguine hopes of an overwhelming prohibition vote had fallen to zero. Even the young lawyer's fiery eloquence had failed to make the meeting any thing but a wet blanket on the prohibition cause, and he felt uncomfortably sure that the leaders, for reasons of their own, had so intended it from the beginning. Like King David, he was ready to say in his haste, "All men are liars." He was besides conscious of feeling half impatient with his old friend, which added a slight touch of compunction to his sense of discomfort, for he loved and reverenced Martin Treworthy, and only wished he was not such a fanatic on the lodge question. Were there no paramount issue to be met it might be well enough to discuss it, but prohibition was the question of the hour, and it was nonsense to think that any other issue could be prior to it in magnitude or importance.

So reasoned Nelson Newhall. Whether he was right or wrong the sequel of this story will show.

CHAPTER VII.

A NEW FACTOR IN POLITICS.

The morning of election day rose in a chill mist, a perplexing, uncertain mist which might roll away by nine o'clock A. M. and leave a clear sky, or might with equal probability grow denser and darker and finally settle into a downright storm. In one sense it was very appropriate weather, for it exactly represented the political sky as it appeared to many a voter—Nelson Newhall for one. His first conscious thought on waking was the election, and yet for ordinary politics he did not care the snap of his finger. It is only as we look at them through the small end of our object glass, that is to say, the lens of our own private hopes and fears, that political questions assume large proportions. Nelson Newhall was a common working man to whom the suppression of the liquor business had grown to be a vital subject, for it meant not only release from a constant, wearing anxiety, but the temporal and eternal welfare of one to whom he was bound by ties that in their protecting tenderness were almost maternal.

He sprang out of bed and began hastily dressing himself, making as little noise as possible that he might not waken his still sleeping brother. But the latter stirred and began to cough. In an instant Nelson was bending over him.

"I hoped I shouldn't disturb you, Tom. I will get you a spoonful of your cough medicine and then perhaps you will go to sleep again. It is very early yet."

He measured out a spoonful of the syrup and administered it as deftly as a woman; then he built up the fire which seemed to share in the general depression and needed much coaxing to boil the chocolate or toast the bread, for Nelson always prepared his own breakfast and his invalid brother's before going to work. Tom, though much better, was still feeble. On bright, warm days when his cough did not trouble him much he would drag himself down stairs and sit in the sun, finding amusement in the society of their landlady's children; and she, a buxom, motherly, Scotch-Irish woman, cheerfully agreed "to look after him a little," while Nelson was absent in the shop.

"He ain't a bit more trouble than a chip sparrow, Mr. Newhall, and he keeps the children so still I'm sure it is a real favor to me to have him round. I had a brother once that was something like him—the quietest, gentlest soul that ever God made, if he didn't know quite as much as most folks. Many's the time I've wished I was as near the kingdom as poor brother Sandy."

And good Mrs. McGowan wiped away a tear with the corner of her apron while Nelson responded gratefully: "Tom has but one failing, and you know what that is, Mrs. McGowan. But I don't think he is half as much to blame as the men who make and sell the cursed stuff, or those in power who are willing for the sake of a little more revenue to license it."

"Just what I've always stood to, Mr. Newhall. I say that money got in that way is blood money, and if it is enough to make a man lose his soul, I can't see for my part how government can take it and expect to prosper."

Mrs. McGowan was a woman and unversed in political subtleties. Furthermore, she was a good Presbyterian who made a conscience of reading her Bible straight through in course—not skipping one of its terrible burning words against those "who decree unrighteous decrees," "who build up Zion with blood and Jerusalem with iniquity;" and the reader must excuse her if she had not yet attained to the broader and more enlightened views of some of our modern statesmen.

Martha Benson, when she stitched the burial robe for the murdered innocent whose little life had gone out in such cruel tortures, felt every holy instinct of womanhood rise in revolt against this awful traffic in human anguish. And as womanhood is pretty much the same the world over, the sacred fires of a noble indignation and a brave purpose to do what they could were burning in many other hearts—that fire from the Lord which first kindled the Woman's Crusade, that flashed like a meteor and was gone, yet not before it had kindled in its turn a flame that has gone on increasing till now it lights the whole country from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

—Among the Liberian products sold by Edward S. Morris of No. 4 Merrick street, Philadelphia, is a pure Palm Oil of excellent quality which is valuable for many uses. One of these is an an application in case of garget on inflammation of the udder which is frequent among cows in calving time, especially blooded animals. Owners of such stock have sent Mr. Morris recommendations of the highest character of its value in such cases. The Palm Oil Soap made by Mr. Morris deserves also hearty recommendation. By the sale of these African products he maintains a school for native children in Liberia.

—Rev. J. W. Butler of Mexico, says: "There are now 264 evangelical congregations in Mexico, with 30,000 permanent adherents. Men and women who never saw a Bible till they had spent half their money and half their lives in the Roman Catholic church were now becoming the Christians who would go through fire and water for their religion's sake. Recently fifteen of them had been imprisoned and persecuted, but not one recanted. One congregation of 125 members, none of whom earned over thirty cents a day, have lately raised $60 for the erection of a church. They were so generous in religious matters that they had to be restrained, or they would give away their very food and clothes."

WILL THE UNITED BRETHREN FELLOWSHIP THIS "MINOR" ORDER?

DOVER, ILL., Dec. 24, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—There lies before me the October number of the Early Dawn, a paper published on Sherbro Island, West Africa. You will imagine my gratification, when I tell you that for two or three years I was its editor, publisher and contributor. After remaining in suspended animation for eighteen years it has reappeared, larger, brighter and better; and under the management of Rev. D. F. Wilberforce, a native pastor and presiding elder in the United Brethren church, but who was, when I left there, but a small school boy.

I write more particularly to call attention to some phases of modern heathenism that afflict not only Africa but our own land as well.

The great obstacle in the way of the evangelization of that great continent, and which are ably opposed in the paper before me, are slavery, polygamy, intemperance and secret societies. They are the natural outgrowths of heathenism, and it is not greatly to our credit that we have gotten rid of but one of them.

That you may get a brief view of how people in Africa think of secret societies, I will give you a short extract:

"A special meeting of the Sherbro branch of the Sierra Leone native church, held at St. Matthew's church, Bouthe, Sept. 25th, at seven P. M., and was opened by reading Scriptures, singing and prayer, etc. Rev. J. Robbin, chairman; Rev. D. F. Wilberforce, Mr. B. G. Porter, J. P. Parkinson and Mr. W. Hughes were the speakers. The last said that he regarded cannibalism as the most baneful and pernicious evil and superstition now raging among the inhabitants of the islands. This man-destroying practice is carried on by organized societies having esoteric doctrines. From the evidence given in the police courts we could glean somewhat of these societies and their members. To ensure success in the perpetration of their foul deeds they disguise themselves in the hides of panthers and leopards, or the skins of some marine animal, assuming at the same time the habits of the animal in whose skin or hides they are dressed. The suppositious animal bears so close a resemblance to the original that a connoisseur can hardly detect the difference. In this guise men prowl or float about by night and day to attack and kidnap those whom fate or chance put in their way. Some of the unfortunate victims they sell into slavery; the limbs of others are torn apart with rude force to make, they say, the rice and cassadda pass when taken at meals. Further than this is inviolable secrecy. Not death itself can prevail on this accursed brotherhood to reveal more of their deeds of darkness."

Rev. Mr. Robbin said that "no form of protection, coercive or deterent, can put a stop to cannibalism on these islands. For an affectual cure, the remedy must be applied to the root of the disease which is the unnatural appetite for human flesh; and this can only be removed by the power of Christianity."

I see it is suggested that the U. B. church shall so amend its dicipline as to exclude from membership Freemasons only. It has occurred to me that it might be a little awkward if those African brethren should find that they must either admit these man-eaters to church fellowship—if they applied—or else violate the discipline of the church. I have wondered too, if all secretists realized to what base purposes their system was devoted.

H. H. HINMAN.

R. LOGGAN AND ST. JOHN AT HOME.

The Topeka convention was a grand success. There was a good attendance of delegates. They were harmonious and enthusiastic in all their proceedings, and effected a thorough State organization and planned for thorough work. John P. St. John was the man. He delivered a most masterly speech, over two hours long, showing the origin of the State Temperance Union as non-political. He gave the noble sayings of Griffin, Legate, and Campbell, that the only sure way to find success was the narrow way of fidelity to prohibition, without regard to any political party, and that they must not take one step backward; and he had followed their advice. But they had changed. They had left out the prohibition principle in their State platform, and employed their lecturer, Mr. Campbell (who was sitting there before him), to organize Republican clubs, and paid him out of the money raised to assist in prosecuting saloonists, that had been raised from Sabbath school children, and mothers and wives who washed and sewed for drunken sons and husbands, and from men of every party (Mr. Campbell dared not deny), and Mr. Griffin in his paper (which St. John read) said, "We have made our concessions, now make yours—yes, elect us to office, and we will bow to the Constitution and laws."

St. John said, "I am not here to call these men traitors, or Judases, or Benedict Arnolds, or to say, they ought to be burned or hung to the lamp post in effigy." He also gave an account of the earnest appeal to the Chicago Republican convention and analyzed the national platform.

The old Senate chamber was well filled, with the gallery, and not one hiss or groan; but the most enthusiastic clappping of hands and stamping in approval I ever heard; and three rousing cheers at the close for J. P. St. John. He grandly breasted the wave of opposition at the Capital of his own State. It is broken, and I think will rebound with crushing effect upon his opponents. I cannot give you much idea of the force and effect of this speech, but it is to be published.

R. LOGGAN.

BULL RUNS AND PROVIDENCE!

BARABOO, Wis.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—It seems to be in order to gather up the "I told you so's" of the campaign, and one item in this line is the claim that Prohibitionists have lost ground by not voting for Blaine and Logan. In what way can it be construed that a vote for them would have been in the interest of prohibition? Not directly by any possibility for—

1. The last Republican National platform commenced by re-endorsing all of the previous declarations of the party, which covered the Raster resolution of 1872, which was as direct and positive a whisky plank as is that of the Democratic platform. This method had the merit, to politicians, of being a dodge on its face, but it logically held the party to the liquor traffic.

2. As to the persons nominated. Mr. Blaine made a direct and positive proposition to make the income of the liquor tax a "permanent source of revenue to the States." This could only be done through the support and extension of the saloon system. In accordance with this he could not consistently vote for prohibition in Maine, and he did not; such a course would strike at the "permanence" of the revenue.

3. Did the danger in not voting for Blaine lie in the vindictiveness of the Republicans if defeated? To conciliate such persons by voting against your own principles, is like conciliating a burglar by giving him all of your valuables.

If prohibition is set back it is because of the vindictiveness of Republicans.

There has been no change of State administration not even in New York. Massachusetts is still Republican and has all the prohibition which inheres in that party.

Now, how far are we to buy off burglars with our treasures and politicians with our principles? I could only vote the Republican ticket in Wisconsin by voting for whisky men on well defined whisky principles. The party has ruled in this State for twenty-four years and there is no vestige of Democratic legislation in it. It is all for license and it positively refused to submit the question to the people. If Democratic rule could be ano worse it remains to be seen. The Republican party demanded our votes in tones which implied threats if we did not give them, but the they promised us nothing in case we did give them.

It strikes me that many Republicans are Prohibitionists only so far as they can make it subserve their partisan interests. They not only subject their own temperance principles to that party, but they would compel all other Prohibitionists to do the same thing. Their party is their god, and all other interests must be subordinated to it.

I remember very well when we voted for Fremont on the issue of the non-extension of slavery. Almost every advocate of that measure would begin by saying, "Now I do not propose to meddle with slavery where it exists, but I am opposed to its further extension." This seemed so just and simple that we almost doubted about God's ruling in the universe when it was announced that our "Path-finder" was beaten and Buchanan elected. We can now see that God had decreed the overthrow of slavery where it existed and the first important step was to get our young Republican party out of the way. Slavery could only be destroyed as a war measure. The success of Buchanan led to the war, and made its overthrow possible.

I remember, too, the agony which followed the first battle of Bull Run. We can now see that if we had gone "On to Richmond" and crushed the rebellion in seventy-five days, slavery would still exist in the South. So we can see that "God's ways are not our ways." I have faith to believe that God has thoughts of good towards this nation, and this Republican Bull Run is doubtless an important step in this direction. The election of Blaine would have been construed as an indorsement of his principles on the liquor question and would have established the traffic firmly for many years to come.

If the Republican party aims to set back prohibition through vindictiveness the next thing in order will be its Waterloo.

"HARK! FROM THE TOMBS A [JOYFUL] SOUND."

NATIONAL CEMETERY,
RALEIGH, N. C., Dec. 19th. 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Through the kindness of some very dear kind friend, I have been receiving the Christian Cynosure for several weeks past; and the more I read it, the more I like it, and feel that it is one of the grandest and most highly appreciated gifts I have ever received; and for the same, I feel sincerely grateful, and pray that God may greatly bless the giver, and pour upon him, or her, the choicest blessings of heaven. I am not a Rev. but simply a humble, active layman, who desires to do good, and believes in doing it with all my might. For the last twelve years I have been laboring gratuitously for the Lord; I have been well repaid, however, in rich blessings from on high. Hallelujah! The South needs a host of fearless men, full of faith and the Holy Ghost to enlighten the people, for we do not get the truth here so plain and pungent as you do in the West. There is no public discussion here in reference to the nature of secret societies; in fact there is an ominous silence upon this, and nearly all other questions of similar nature. Amidst the deadness, formality, and general silence that exists, we need a mighty shaking up, and I pray God to send some one this way to help along the battle. I understand that a Holiness Band from Ohio, with a large tent, are coming here in the spring.

I am a native of Pennsylvania. At the battle of Gettysburgh I was badly wounded, losing my right eye, and the use of my right arm, and while in the hospital, I had nine operations performed on my arm and hand, but through all this, a merciful God has graciously spared my life, and to-day I am in the battle for truth and righteousness, and expect to fight it out on this line until the Master calls me home. God bless you, and all lovers of the truth. I inclose herewith 50 cents for the Lord.

I have an appointment on Saturday night and Sabbath, in the country; in fact my services as an evangelist are continually in demand. Pray for me.

Yours in Christ, DAVID L. SCHIVELY.

QUESTIONS FOR SECEDERS.

SEYMOUR LAKE, Mich.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I would esteem it a great favor if you would let a seceding Mason have a corner in the Cynosure to ask a few questions.

I give my blessed Saviour all the praise in redeeming me from that soul-destroying system Freemasonry. None but those who have been hood-winked and cable-towed can fully realize the fearful hold Masonic oaths have on the mind. When God called me from the lodge he called me to work and try to save others. Now this brings me to my questions:

1. How am I to work to accomplish the most good?

2. Is it right, in Masonic lectures, to work the degrees; do we not, in a measure, become partakers of their abominations?

I ask this question not in a fault-finding way, but for light. As I understand Masonry, the obligation makes the Mason. In fact but for this Masonry could not exist. Could all the demons of the bottomless pit form a more diabolical lot of oaths than is found in Masonry? They make a man a liar, a false-swearer, a perjurer and a blasphemer.

Will some seceding Mason give me his views on this matter? May God help us who have come out from the lodge to so let our light shine that others may see our good works. My earnest prayer to Almighty God is that his blessing may rest on the National Christian Association and all others interested in this glorious reform. D. BENJAMIN.

OUT-LAW THE LODGE.

GROVER, Ottawa Co., Kan., Dec. 16, 1884.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Our county legislator will meet the Representatives at Topeka the first week in January. He is anti-secret in principle and offers to introduce any bill we may reduce to writing. Secret societies are running almost everything in politics and business to suit themselves. When building became a little scarce here this fall it mattered not how low were the bids coming from men who did not belong to any of the lodges, Freemasons came in ahead; got the best contracts at the highest prices. A school-house to build here was to be let to the lowest bidder. One bid, coming from a man who was not a Mason, but a good mechanic, was $20 lower than any other, but a Freemason got the contract, simply because he had Masonic friends on the school-board.

Some say it is absurd to suppose a few Masons can run the business and politics of the land. Last week when the court impanneled the jury, four were called out of Logan township, of whom three were Freemasons. This is a common occurrence. The lawyers are Masons, the judges are Masons, the jurors are Masons, and the majority of our government officers are Masons. They lay the corner stones of our public houses; they decorate our soldiers' monuments; they make out the programme for nearly all our public occasions. They watch carefully every minister or public speaker, every religious body or public assembly, and woe to that body or individual who dares to interfere with or say aught against them. Next day they will be published in the papers as a set of charlatans, ignorant, coarse and rude; the prey of superstition, barbarism and selfishness, and the Antis shall have no chance to reply, because the secretists control the public press; and the editor well knows that it is, "Woe is me if I speak against them! This looks very much to me as if they run things their own way and to their own liking. Therefore, we feel like bringing the matter before the Legislature for their consideration and careful investigation.

For this reason we request you to frame a suitable bill, publish it in the Cynosure, and ask that a copy of it be presented so every legislature in the United States. May God bless you in your great work. Yours fraternally, J. C. BERNHARD.

NOTE.—We hail the above request as an omen of good. More than ten years have passed since any effort has been made in our legislatures to outlaw the lodge. Daniel Webster, the great expounder of the Constitution, wrote that Masonic oaths "should be prohibited by law." No higher human authority is needed for the constitutionality of such prohibition. Some years since the following petition was circulated widely in several States and caused a commotion when sent to the legislatures. It is good to use again, and copies can be supplied from this office to all who will send for them:

PETITION

To the Honorable Legislature of the State of.....

We, the undersigned citizens of.. .....County, respectfully ask your honorable body to make it lawful for a party not a member of any secret society, in litigation with a party who is a member of such society, to inquire into the fact, whether witnesses offered by such party are members of the same or other similar secret society; and to show cause for believing that membership in such secret society will bias the witnesses for or against the parties in litigation; and that in all such cases it may be made the duty of the court to give in charge to the jury that they are to determine the degree of credibility to be accorded to the testimony of such witnesses.

Also that in all cases, criminal or civil, the right of peremptory challenge of jurors who are members of any secret society shall be granted to all parties in litigation who are not members of such societies.

And that membership in any secret society by the presiding officer of a court shall be held as a sufficient reason for change of venue whenever demanded.

PITH AND POINT.

"GRAND LODGE ABOVE" DISCOUNTED.

I will give you an instance that occurred at a Masonic funeral not long since. After the minister had finished the services at the church and at the grave, then the Masons took the matter in hand and sent the man to Grand Lodge above. What an assumption in them to say in effect that the minister could not do the work effectively! They must put on the finishing touch. The minister not belonging to the clan, said that the good man got the start of the Masons, as he went before the Masons sent him.

In these parts the Masons leave off sending to the Grand Lodge above, as there has been so much said about their practice of sending rum-sellers and drunkards to that place.—I. J. GILBERT, Derby, Conn.

NOT CONTROLLED BY THE LODGE.

I have received several numbers of your paper, and have distributed them among my brethren. I belong to the Primitive Baptist denomination and have preached for many years against the secret orders of the day,—or rather of the night. I like the sentiment of the paper; but I am not able to take the paper and pay you for it. I think I will get some of my brethren to send and get some anti-secret books. My association numbers about six hundred. The Masons have full sway over every church body but the Primitive Baptist, and they are mad because they cannot control them.—J. C. SHELTON, Brooksville, Ala.

The paper is sent to Bro. Shelton for a year through the kindness of some friend who is interested in disseminating the principles of reform. We are glad to know that the gift has come into good hands. Let us hear often from Brooksville.

GET UP MEETINGS FOR THIS BROTHER.

Hard times have come and I have discontinued every paper but yours: so here is a money order for $1.50 to induce you to continue your visits another year. Also give notice that I will lecture anywhere within my reach (thirty cable-tows) at reasonable rates. The Red Men had a feast here the other night. Should like to have some tracts bearing on that secret den. Some of us would like a State convention to be held here. This place is a stronghold of secrecy; being the seat of the State University it would be a good point for a meeting. —A. MAYN, Bloomington, Ind.

KEEPING ST. JOHN WARM FOR 1888.

I feel good over the results of the election and will say a word of encouragement. When the Masons burned St. John and Pincom in effigy in West Branch I got word early the next morning that the Masons came from Springdale and helped to excite the boys to burn the effigies they brought with them. In a day or two it was laid to the door of the Republicans, but they deny it and the Democrats declare it is an outrage and scandal on the place. Any one can see who did it and what for. The good Masons are angry at a good man and show their murderous oaths. They made an effort to conceal their hand by burning the Quaker preacher and temperance lecturer for a cloak to deceive. Light breaks the hood-wink by making prohibition national, and we are getting more than we asked or expected when we voted for St. John. God rules. I will try to get some subscribers.—D. J. WILSON, West Branch Iowa.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON II.—January 11, 1885.—Paul at Miletus.—Acts 20: 17-27.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ.—Acts 20: 21.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The characteristics of a faithful pastor. Vs. 17-21. We note (1) unweariedness in his ministry. "With you at all seasons." Heat or cold, rain or shine found this brave soldier of the cross at his post. Satan takes no vacation, and there can be no great pastoral success without at least equal zeal and earnestness. (2) Humility of mind. Said Dorothy Pattison, "When you want to lead any one to Jesus, remember you must point, and take care not to stand in the way yourself." Humility like St. Paul's who could call himself "the chief of sinners," or like Newton's who could say when he saw a condemned criminal on his way to execution, "There, but for the grace of God, goes John Newton!" is in no danger of committing this fatal mistake. It is no strange paradox that the purest should thus see themselves in the vilest light, for the higher we climb the mount of redeeming love, the deeper looks the abyss of sin at our feet; and in proportion, the greater the Saviour's atoning work and a lost world's need of him. (3) Scorn of personal ease. His constant travail with souls, and the deadly hostility of enemies rendered his path only less thorny than that trod by his Divine Master; but the promise of Eternity's joyful Harvest home, with its abundance of golden sheaves is made only to those who "sow in tears." (4) Courage to preach the whole truth. "I kept back nothing" through timorous fear or mistaken prudence. What an example to the time serving preacher of to-day, who fears to preach against secretism or intemperance, or handle any moral question till he is quite sure on which side his congregation stand! It is a strange anomaly when the shepherd instead of leading his flock to green pastures and still waters, lets the flock lead him down spiritual declivities of ruin and death. (5) Pastoral visitation. That this duty is so much neglected by the modern pulpit may partly account for its loss of revival power. (6) Soundness of doctrine. A pure Gospel of faith and repentance undiluted by any theories or methods of human wisdom.

2. The characteristics of a true reformer. Vs. 22-27. (1) Faith. The path of reform is always dark. He who gives his life to put down iniquity must go on as St. Paul did, unknowing what may befall him. (2) Unflinching courage. "None of these things move me." The prophetic intimations from city to city of "bonds of afflictions" but fire his ardor like a racer who sees the goal in sight. (3) Honesty in declaring all God's word. Said Wycliffe, the Morning Star of the English reformation, "To live and to be silent is with me impossible; the guilt of such treason against the Lord of Heaven is more to be dreaded than many deaths." This was the true Pauline spirit, "pure from the blood of all men;" and a new baptism of this spirit is what the church now needs. She is the world's one reforming agency and when she ceases to be "protestant" against all forms of sin or error the salt has lost its savor.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What commands does the Bible give ministers? Titus 1: 13; 2; 3: 1, 2; 2 Tim. 1: 13; 2: 1–3, 15; 4: 1–5. What encouragement to reformers? Deu. 31: 6; Josh. 23: 10; 1: 5; Ez. 2: 6; Is. 43: 2.

NOTES FROM PELOUBET.

"And called the elders." Originally among the Jews the elders were either the heads of tribes or the oldest and most judicious of the people. Hence the name came to be applied to office, and was the title of the rulers of the syngagogue on whom devolved the conduct of religious affairs; the prayer, reading, and exposition which constituted the service. The name was transferred to the corresponding officers of the Christian church. The term bishop (overseer) was applied to the same office as in this lesson (verses 17, 28). Every church had a number of elders, and there was no set distinction in the New Testament between a teaching and a ruling elder. Presbyter is simply the Greek word which is translated elder. The elders of the church at Ephesus were the preachers and officers of the church.—From Schaff's Bib. Dic.

"Ye know, from the first day that I came." Four years before this. Happy is he who can thus begin his address by appealing to the conscience and recollections of his hearers.—Bengel.

"With all humility of mind." Lowliness of mind. Neither refusing minor and seemingly insignificant work, e. g., in personal conversation as at Athens (chap. 17: 17), nor hesitating to engage in manual labor for his own support and that of others (ver. 34), nor arrogating to himself to be a lord over God's heritage (1 Pet. 5: 3). Observe that to know our own fidelity and to call others to attest it, is not inconsistent with true humility. But also observe that Paul never does this for self-praise, but only as a means of stimulating others to similar fidelity. —Abbott. This was the same Paul who before Felix and Agrippa boldly declared the truth in Christ and sternly rebuked sin, so that Felix trembled. There is no connection between humility and pusillanimity, though one may sometimes be mistaken for the other.—Wm. Denton.

"Repentance toward God." These two make up the sum of all Christian doctrine—a change of heart and then a return to God and faith in the Lord Jesus. The one cannot be separated from the other. True faith cannot exist without the sorrowful heart. Again, repentance without faith in Christ is without comfort or hope, and ends too surely in faint-heartedness and despair. All efforts at self-redemption have been found again and again utterly useless.—Schaff. Repentance may not lead to faith, but repentance toward God, the sense of sin as against him, brings with it a conscious need of a mediator and an atonement, and so leads to faith towards the mediator between God and man (2 Cor. 5: 20, 21; 1 Tim. 2: 5).—Abbott.

"Save that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city." By the mouth of inspired prophets (chap. 21: 4, 11), also, perhaps, by his personal experiences of bonds and afflictions. See chap. 9: 23, 29; 13: 50; 14: 5, 19; 16: 23; 17: 5, 10, 13; 18: 12; 20: 3 for such experience prior to this time.—Abbott.

"I am pure from the blood of all men." The form of expression is striking and memorable. It is borrowed from the crime of murder, and the method by which guilt is ordinarily brought home to the criminal. In many cases conviction depends on blood being found on the clothes of the murderer. Thus in effect he invites the elders to look to their hands and garments to make sure that there is no blood on them.—Arnot.

"For I have not shunned." Literally, for I shrunk not back. No fear of unpopularity, and no anxiety to say only smooth and pleasant things had kept him from declaring all of God's truth; not only the pleasant and hopeful, but the terrible; not only the promises of God, but His threatenings; not only his pleasure in virtue, but the blackness and ugliness of their sins in His sight.—Pl.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1884.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

The Christian Cynosure.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JANUARY 1, 1885.

OUR HOLIDAY GREETING.

We wish all our readers, "A Happy New Year," cordially and fervently. The Cynosure some sixteen summers since undertook a task, to human eyes, one of the most hopeless. Slavery was a most fearful "stronghold" to attack. But when Garrison launched his Liberator in 1832, West India slavery was tottering to its fall, which came two years later; and Friends, Covenanters, United Brethren, with other sects were Mr. Garrisons' pioneers. Then again, slavery was local; Masonry girdles the globe. True, there werc an old guard of Morgan Anti-masons who felt the fang and sting of the lodge serpent, and they were to us as Moses, Caleb and Joshua. But our paper, as one of our first lecturers said, was taken up and sustained by "the best men and women on the globe," and we may add, the most courageous. Slavery confronted us; the lodge knifes us in the back. Braddock was brave when he had his foes in sight; but it took a Washington to fight foes, hid like snakes in the tall grass, and shooting poisoned arrows from leafy coverts. We fight like Ajax, in mist, and like the Grecian warrior are fain to cry out:

"Grant me but light, and Ajax asks no more."

The country, says B. T. Roberts, is held under a "reign of terror" by the midnight lodges. But the Cynosure has been upheld by those who verify the words of Shakespear:

"He that hath light within his own clean breast
May sit i' the center and enjoy bright day."

And the Cynosure is no longer lone and single, but the center of a bright constellation of Anti-secret prints which are to increase until the American heavens are aglow!

THE CONVENTION.—We regret, since all approved of circulating a call for a final convention in New England, that no call is put in circulation. We know that Secretary Stoddard intended to have a request for a call in type and send it out as a supplement in papers friendly to the reform, before he left for Ohio. Reformers in England have long and successfully used this method of concentrating and confirming popular sentiment against abuses. Under Cobden and Bright petitions against the corn-laws were taken into Parliament as heavy as two stout men could well carry: and Miss Willard has used this method with signal success. Delay is dangerous.

MR. JOHN DORCAS, in the American, says, "If he (St. John) is with us as an American party, he must so declare himself before I will support him again."

Mr. Dorcas is right. A party is ruined if it supports men who will not endorse its principles. Our support of St John was an exception of this plain rule. When Senator Pomeroy withdrew, we had no candidate, and had not time properly to make one. St. John had been voted for at our Chicago convention. He was with us on prohibition, and clean of the lodgc. For seventeen years, he had neither attended a lodge, paid a due, nor returned a grip: and said before witnesses he should never do so again, and that he stood on evcry plank of our platform. Had he come to us after accepting for the Prohibitionists, they would have accused him of treachery.

"WHEN THE COMMANDMENT CAME, SIN REVIVED." When God revives righteousness, Satan revives sin. Is God responsible for the sin-revival? Surely not. No more are we responsible for what happens when wc apply prohibition to liquor, by praying, tcaching and voting against it. "Wickedness proceedeth from the wicked." And there is always a revival of sin, when there is a revival of righteousness. We must not do evil that good may come, but wc must do good whatevcr comes.

THE PLENARY COUNCIL in Baltimore, in November, in its pastoral letter says, "There is one characteristic which is always a strong presumption against a society, and that is secrecy." Yet in that council all thc decrees were formulated in secret sessions, with closed doors, and though voted on in open council, wcrc read and submitted in Latin, a dead anguage, which thc multitudc did not understand.

In the little rural township of Farmington, N. H., in the north and stony part of that stony State, the rural inhabitants were cutting a huge boulder which obstructed the road, near the poor old log cabin where Henry Wilson was born. The cabin is long since gone. The thought occurred to the citizens to make that boulder a monument to mark the birth-spot of one so loved and honored. So they cut down the boulder and removed a part, leaving a perpendicular face to the road, on which is cut in strong, plain letters: "Hcnry Wilson was born near this spot." The device is simple and beautiful.

LOGGAN ON ST. JOHN.—Read and re-read Mr. Loggan's article on St. John's Topeka convention. Mr. Loggan was appointed Kansas State agent, vice Paul Feemster resigned to take the pastorate of his Pearlette church. We first met Bro. Loggan seventeen years ago, at our first convention, in Aurora, Ill. He came all the way from Plattsmouth, Neb., to attend that meeting. He belongs to the United Brethren, and has been presiding elder. His estimate of Gov. St. John is very valuable as he is a man of matured years, large observation and strong natural understanding. Read his article on the Topeka convention.

HENRY WILSON.

SENATOR AND VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

This great American was born in Farmington, N. H., February, 1812, and died in the National Capitol, Washington, D. C., Nov. 22d, 1875, in his 64th year. Measured by events, centuries were crowded into the period of his active life. He was born in the year of our war with England. Want rocked his cradle. Intemperance impoverished his home, and embittered his young life. At the tender age of ten years, he was "bound out" to work till one and twenty. Even before this he had "worked out" to win back a little of that bread which the liquor-selling took from the family for strong drink.

Thus Mr. Wilson was "chosen in the furnace," and read his first lessons of reform by the light of its fires.

The first book he ever owned was a New Testament, given to him for reading it through, by a sister of Hon. Levi Woodbury. As soon as he was out of his indentures, which he honorably worked through, he sold his six sheep and yoke of oxen which was his stipulated compensation at the age of twenty-one, and his first thought was further education. He went to Stratford Academy with money in his pocket, but with patches on his knees. When sneered at for this piece of economy, he replied to a taunt, "I may yet be President of the United States, and you will pay taxes to clothe me then." His first speech at the close of the academic term was on the question, "Ought Slavery to be Abolished in the District of Columbia?" He had already visited Washington and seen the notorious slave-pen of Williams, where he saw families torn asunder and sold to different bidders. His speech was greeted by some with hisses. He lived to move in Congress the abolition in the District, and twenty-five years after that speech, which old people still remember, he went back to that same academy as a Senator of the United States; and was applauded by those who had hissed him as an Abolitionist when a boy. This Stratford Academy has since been favored with the principal-ship of our friend Professor Kimball, well known to the readers of the Cynosure,. Mr. Kimball may yet follow Mr. Wilson to Congress.

In 1850 the infamous fugitive slave law, called the Fillmore Bill, was passed, and the lamented Webster the 7th of March before, had made the speech so fatal to his fame. Mr. Wilson, then in the Massachusetts House of Representatives, openly denounced both. By a bold movement which Chase executed in Ohio, Mr. Wilson united the Democrats and Free-Soilers; elected Mr. Boutwell governor of Massachusetts, and Charles Sumner to the United States Senate. Mr. Sumner wrote him April 25th, 1851:

"To your ability, energy, determination and fidelity our cause owes its present success. For weal or woc you must take the responsibility of placing me in the Senate of the United States."

This coalition returned Mr. Wilson to the Senate of Massachusetts that year, and madc him president of that body. He received the Senate's thanks for the "ability and impartiality" with which he presided.

In 1854 the bottomless pit seemed to have been opened, and its smoke darkened the political heavens. A craze called "The American party," the members of which were sworn when questioned to say, "We Know Nothing," thus veiling their principles and proceedings in profound secrecy, sprung up like mists from a morass, and seemed likely to cover the country and control its politics. It staggared politicians by its victories at elections where it struck like lightning upon its opponents before they saw the cloud from which it sprung. Like all such "works of darkness," it promised without intending to perform any of its promises. It would clean the country of priestcraft, and yet was itself the essence of all priestism, leading the masses by rings within rings, secrets within secrets, degrees above degrees, making its rank and file who paid the dues sworn underlings to unknown superiors.

Mr. Wilson joined this hypocritical clan in self-defence, and before long utterly overturned them and dissolved it: though it was that party which sent him to the Senate of the United States in 1854, two years before the birth of the Rcpublican party at Pittsburg. In a letter he says:

"When I arrived at Washington I was courted and flattered by voters and statesmen; even told that I might look to any position if I would aid in forming a national party. I saw men elected by the friends of freedom were ready to go into such a movement. I was alarmed. I saw that anti-slavery men must give up their principles to go into such a movement, or fight for the supremacy of their principles—drive off the Southern men; or break up the party."

"The next Congress will be the most violent one in our history. I hope our friends will meet the issues bravely: and if violence and bloodshed come, let us not falter, but do our duty, even if we fall on the floors of Congress."

In the Metropolitan Theatre, New York, May 8th, 1855, before a vast crowd, he said, and repeated in many towns and cities:

"If there are men in the free States who hope to triumph in 1856 by ignoring the slavery issues now forced on the country by the slave propagandists, I say to them, that the anti-slavery men cannot be reduced or driven into a party that ignores the question of slavery in Christian and Republican America."

"Resolve it; write it over your door-posts; engrave it on the lids of your Bibles; proclaim it at the rising of the sun and the going down of the same, and in the broad light of noon, that any party in America, be that party Whig, Democratic or American, that lifts its finger to arrest the anti-slavery movement, to repress the anti-slavery s entiment, or proscribe the anti-slavery men, shall surely begin to die, [loud applause] it will deserve to die; it will die; and by the blessing of God, I shall do what little I can to make it die." [applause loud and long continued.)

The pseudo-American party mct in Philadelphia, June 1855, and though Mr. Wilson had not assailed it, they attempted, but failed, to exclude him. He fearlessly declared that slavery must and would be opposed; that no plea of nationalizing their party would or could induce them to wavc their principles. A delegate from Virginia approached him with a pistol and denounced him as the leader of the Abolitionists. Mr. Wilson replied. "The gentleman's threats have no terrors for freemen! I am here and now ready to meet argument with argument, scorn with scorn; and, if need bc, blow with blow; for God has given me an arm and a right to protect my head." On the 12th of June the Know Nothings presented a pro-slavery platform, true to its despotic nature and secret instincts. Mr. Wilson said:

"The adoption of this platform commits the American party unconditionally to the policy of slavery; to the iron dominion of the black power. For myself, sir, I tell you now and here, that I will trample with disdain on your platform. I will not support it. I will support no man who stands upon it. Adopt that platform and you range against you every thing that is pure and holy, every thing that has the elements of permanency in it; the noblest pulsations of the human heart, the holiest convictions of the human soul, the profoundest ideas of the human intellect, and the attributes of Almighty God!"

"When in its hour of weakness I united with the American party, I told them that my anti-slavery opinions were the matured convictions of years; that I would not modify or qualify these opinions or suppress them for any consideration on earth. You shall not proscribe anti-slavery principles, measures or men without receiving from me the most determined, unrelenting hostility."

"Reject this platform, adopt the proposition to restore freedom to Kansas and Nebraska, and to protect actual settlers from violence and outrage; simplify your rules; make an open orgaization; banish bigotry and intolerance; place your movement in harmony with the humane progressive spirit of the age, and you may win and retain power, and elevate and improve the political character of the country. But adopt this majority platform; commit the American movement to the slave-perpetualists. and you will go down before the burning indignation, and withering scorn of American freemen."

The rallying cry in the secret halls of the Know Nothings was, "No foreigners to hold office: Americans to rule Americans." On this point Mr. Wilson said:

"Sir, the American movement is not based on intolerance, bigotry, or proscription. If there is any disposition to oppress or degrade the Briton, Scot, Celt, German, or men of any other clime or race, or to deny them the fullest protection of just and equal laws, it is time such criminal fanaticism was sternly rebuked."

"Every attempt to interpolate into the American movement what is contrary to the theory of Democratic institutions, or the command of God, 'The stranger that dwelleth with you shall be unto you as one born among you; and thou shalt love him as thyself,' will baffle the wise policy which strives to reform. I loathe the idea of opposition to foreigners, simply as foreigners."

This anihilated that party, rightly named "Know Nothing,' but falsely called American. And his abhorence of secret organizations was not confined to the Know Nothings. The writer of this sketch visited Mr. Wilson at his home in Natick: and as he had refused wine, even when dining with John Quincy Adams in his visit to Washington when a youth, and kept his temperance principles unbroken through life, the writer asked him if he belonged to the Good Templars?

"I joined the Good Templars, years ago," said Mr. Wilson, "but I moved to publish their ritual. I am opposed to secret organizations."

But to transcribe the excellences of this wonderful man would require a volume instead of a sketch. During his whole life he was a devout and reverent believer in the Bible; but he was baptized, and joined in celebrating Christ's death in advanced life. He was a consistent opposer of duelling, and when Brooks who had come up behind Sumner in the Senate, and nearly killed him, challenged Mr. Wilson for calling his attack "cowardly," Wilson replied:

"I characterized your assault on my colleague as brutal, murderous, and cowardly. I thought so then. I think so now. I have no qualifications to make in regard to those words. * * * I have always regarded duelling as a lingering relic of a barbarous civilization which the law of the country has branded as a crime. While, therefore, I religiously believe in the right of self-defence in the broadest sense, the law of my country and the mature civilization of my whole life alike forbid me to meet you for the purpose indicated in your letter."

This grand reply and the universal admiration which it excited not only terminated the intended murder of one man for condemning the cowardly assault on another, but intensified the popular odium for duelling, and contempt for duellists.

One lingers, loath to end the sketch of a life like this. Mr. Wilson died at his room in the Capitol, of apoplexy, Nov. 22d, 1875, with a single attendant by his bed. He rose at midnight, walked his room, took up a little book, "The Changed Cross," and read from it; slept again till three; waked again, and alluded cheerfully to his improved condition; turned over on his left side, and without a struggle ceased to breathe.

His obseques, at Washington, Boston and Natick were such as mourning nations give to a great man fallen. He lived till slavery died; and died when his country lived.

HENRY WILSON AND THE "BORDER RUFFIANS."—On the 18th and 19th of February, 1856, Mr. Wilson made in the Senate one of the great speeches of his life, a masterly defense of the outraged people of Kansas. The arsenal of the United States in Western Missouri had been broken open and cannon, ammunition and muskets stolen. The robbery was charged upon the free settlers of Kansas. Mr. Wilson defended them from the slander and with courageous vehemence laid the guilt at the door of the pro-slavery Freemasons. "Sir," said he, "if the freemen of Kanses had broken open that arsenal, and had stolen from it even a gunflint, you would have had a proclamation from your governor and your President, and the army of the United States would have been called upon to put them down. But it was the organized men of the blue lodges in western Missouri who did it. They have been, and now are, permitted to violate all law with impunity."

—We have received from friends copies of sermons upon the political outlook, delivered by Rev. E. Frank Howe, of Peoria, Ill., and Rev. Warren G. Partridge, Cooperstown, N. Y., for which thanks are heartily returned. Selections from these able discourses would be printed in these columns were there not a pressure of original matter upon the same topic.

—The Tribune-Republican of Denver, Colorado, printed, Dec. 15th, a lecture by Dr. Bliss, we suppose of the same city, on the strength of the rum power and from whence it is derived. The speaker boldly declares the obligation of the secret lodges constitute a stronghold of the saloon-keeper which ought no longer to be ignored.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman, whose letter from Dover, Ill., will be read with interest by U.B. this week, was at Princeton on Wednesday last, and had arranged to speak in the Swedish church on the 30th. He will also speak in the Swedish church at Wyanet. He hopes to speak also in the Baptist church or Free Methodist hall in Princeton. He considers the outlook for reform work good in spite of cold weather, politics or hard times.

—Rev. A. Mayn, whose postoffice address has been at Promise City, Iowa, for some time, has returned to Bloomington, Indiana, where he will respond to calls for lectures against the lodge. If the calls are tardy, we suggest that Bro. Mayn do not wait for them, but push out into the snow and rouse the people.

—The last Sabbath Recorder of Alfred Center, N. Y., contains an essay read Nov. 28th last, before the Ministerial Conference of Seventh-day Baptists, at Albion, Wisconsin, by Elder N. Wardner, entitled, "Ought Christians to Connect themselves with Secret Societies?" Elder Wardner maintains the negative of this proposition with ability and force. This publication is of peculiar interest to Wisconsin brethren as the State meeting is to be held at Milton, in the chapel of the College sustained by the Seventh-day brethren.

HOME MISSIONS IN THE SOUTH.

Among the men well known to the Christian people of the United States is Rev. John G. Fee of Berea, Kentucky. In the times which tried men's souls he was faithful to the cause of Christ and of humanity. He did not forsake the church because many of its members were untrue to the cause of human freedom; nor forsake the slave because to maintain his right was to peril reputation, property and life. He is now in his old age devoting himself to the same cause which claimed the labors, prayers and sacrifics of his manhood. Living in Berea, Kentucky, he is endeavoring to keep at work among the poor and ignorant people of the surrounding country ministers who will preach the religion of Jesus Christ and bear testimony against the evils of secret societies and denominationalism.

There are a number of faithful, trustworthy men who are willing to devote themselves to this cause if the actual necessities of life can be supplied to their families. To do this requires about one hundred and fifty dollars, in addition to what can be collected on the field. Two of these brethren are now at work and are expecting Bro. Fee to send them $300, of which sum he has forwarded eighty-five. I recently had the privilege of sending to this dear brother, ten dollars as a contribution toward the support of these two workers, and it occurs to me that there are at least twenty of the Cynosure readers who will gladly join me in this work and at once pay out of the Lord's treasury a like sum to encourage the hearts and strengthen the hand of those who are seeking to diffuse the light of the Christian religion among those needy people.

WHAT SHALL WE DO WITH HIM?

Is the title of one of the popular lectures of the day. It is a plea for the education of the black man and might well be a plea for the education and Christianization of the ignorant masses of the South, both white and black. Can money be expended more economically than to keep in the field a pious, devoted man at an expense of one hundred and fifty dollars a year? It seems to me that a mere statement of the case should bring means for the support of scores of such men, provided they can be found. There are hundreds of men who could without difficulty, without sacrificing a single comfort, keep such a man continually in the field and share in the glorious reward which God grants to such labor for the poor and neglected. I earnestly hope that the hearts of Christian men and women who read these lines may be stirred to liberal and speedy giving for this pressing need.

Money can be sent by draft or postal order direct to Mr. Fee or to the undersigned, who will gladly forward it and acknowledge contributions through the columns of this paper.

Yours in the love and service of Jesus.

CHAS. A. BLANCHARD.

WISCONSIN STATE CONVENTION.

The State Convention of the Wisconsin Christian Association meets in the College chapel at Milton, Rock county, on Tuesday evening, January 13, and will continue through Wednesday and Thursday, the 14th and 15th. Able speakers will be present to address the convention and a special effort will be made to make it of great profit, not only to pronounced Anti-masons, but also to those who have given more attention to the temperance reform.

NOTES FOR VOTERS.

—A letter to the Chicago Lever from Olathe, Kansas, the home of St. John, says: "This little town cast 140 votes for St. John, and no one would dare attempt to do him violence here."

—Reports from sixty-one counties and townships in the North which cast 2,049 St. John votes, show that 1,136 voters were formerly Republicans and 1,084, Democrats. Burn St. John's effigy, somebody!

—It is answer enough to the Republican slanders that St. John received a large bribe from the Democrats to say that not one of these slanders is published with the name of the author behind it. None dare become responsible for so manifest a lie. It is all "rumor" and "report." On the other hand Senator William H. Barnum of Connecticut, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, who would know of such a bribe, if any one, says that not only was St. John paid nothing by the Democrats, but there was never a word passed with him direct or remote concerning his campaign. This is enough for reasonable and honest men; if any persist in believing the slander, they willfully class themselves with those who love a lie. (Rev. 22: 15).

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

REYNOLDSBURG, Ohio, Dec. 22d, 1884.

The morning and evening congregations here were fair yesterday considering the weather. I gave some attention to the secret orders in the evening, and my remarks were apparently well received. I am to discuss the subject more at length this P. M. Rev. Geo. Richey, of Pataskala, delivered a series of lectures here some years ago, which have borne fruit. Both the speaker and his words are kindly and gratefully remembered by the friends, and should this "father in Israel" chance to come this way again he will receive a most cordial welcome.

Only three copies of the Cynosure come to this office, but they are read by a number of persons who take special interest in our position on the lodge question, but are not so fully in sympathy with the third party movement, and other features of the American platform, as in most United and Reformed Presbyterian congregations and families. Pastors, elders and parents keep a watchful eye on the literature that comes within reach of the young people, and there are a number of zealous anti-secretists who are equally ardent temperance men and Republicans, whom I hope to secure as readers for the coming year. There are three or four "third party" friends here, and I am authorized to say that with scarcely an exception this U. P. congregation is heartily opposed to the lodge and the liquor business, but a majority feel grieved over the turn of affairs in the late election, honestly believing that the road to prohibition lay through the election of Blaine and the triumph of the Republican party.

I have been making inquiries and taking observations with the following results. Situated ten miles from Columbus and three miles from a railway, with a population of some three or four hundred, this is a "finished town." It has a Masonic and an Odd-fellows lodge, five churches that have a name to live, and one that is "twice dead and plucked up by the roots." A fine structure for educational purposes adorns the place, and I am told the departments are under successful and experienced teachers, and receives a liberal patronage from the country round about. I called yesterday on Prof D. J. Snyder, the superintendent, a member of the M. E. church, and said to be a 33d degree Mason. I have seldom met with a more cordial reception from any one or been more kindly treated than by this reputed member of the "Supreme Council" and "Sovereign Grand Inspector General." How such a man of genial manners and cultured intellect can remain in connection with the degrading, blasphemous system of Masonic despotism and pagan worships is a mystery.

TUESDAY, Dec, 23d.—The congregation last evening was good, the fraternities being well represented. The order was above criticism and attention excellent. The collection paid my railway fare and left six cents for incidentals. Four yearly subscribers, two new, and many hearty hand shakes and good wishes with the best of entertainment, were certainly enough to make a well-disposed mortal happy. I am now awaiting a train for Utica, where I expect to meet familiar faces. J. P. STODDARD.

A SUGGESTIVE CASE.

A friend related to me the following case which, with slight variations, has many parallels. Mr. Elliott was a Christian and staunch opponent of all secret orders. His son became enamored of the harlot Masonry and wished to rest in her spiritual embrace. The father objected, and so decided were his convictions that he told his son that if he joined the lodge he would disinherit him. Matters remained in statu quo until the good man died. Within one week from the deccase of his father, the son united with the lodge, and within eighteen months from the time he became a member he had squandered his inheritance, (consisting in part of a fertile, well-stocked farm of 148 aeres) and was a poor, dissipated wreck, without God and without hope in the world. The fruits of a useful, self-denying life were given to pamper, strengthen and popularize those curses the father had vainly sought to destroy, and the idol of his earthly love was crushed to rise no more. If retrospect is permitted to mortals who pass within the vale, how strangely changed must have been the feeling of that father as he witnessed the course of his son! J. P. STODDARD.

THE HOME.

THE NEW YEAR.

In the silence and darkness of the night
The Old Year steals away,
And quietly the New Year takes his place
Before the dawn of day.

Half conscious of his presence, we awake
And joy to find him here;
Friend calls to friend, and merry children shout
"Happy, happy New Year."

We think not of the snow, the piercing colds,
Or bitter winds that blow,
The sun is coming northward through the storms,
Although his pace is slow.

Our thoughts run on before him, and the Spring
With violets is here,
The roses we already scent afar;
Our hearts are full of cheer.

O, happy human hearts! your thoughtless joy
Honors God unaware;
'Tis the instinctive utterance of trust
In his unfailing care.

MR. BINGLE'S OLD COAT.

"Splendid!" said Mrs. Bingle, pulling the collar up and the skirt down, and setting the pocket flaps, as farmer Bingle tried on his new overcoat. "Real silk-velvet collar!"

"Yes, and such a piece of cloth! Forty-five dollars for the whole thing."

"Forty-five dollars!" echoed Sam and Jim admiringly.

"Yes. Seventeen for the tailorin' and trimmin's, and twenty-eight for the cloth. It'll do me till I'm gray."

"What are you goin' to do with the old one, pa?" asked Jim.

"It's a good coat yet," said Mrs. Bingle. "Sam'll be grown into it by two years more."

"First-rate coat. But—I was thinkin' some of givin' it to Parson Graves. You see, it'll go on my account for the year, and I won't have so much to pay on his salary."

Mrs. Bingle measured with her eye how much Sam would have to grow before fitting well into the roomy coat, and decided it might be at least three years, in the course of which time, added to the seven during which it had been doing duty on Sundays and great occasions, it might begin to look old-fashioned, and Sam might object to wearing it, that young gentleman having already begun to develop a taste for clothing which came reasonably near fitting him. So it was agreed that Parson Graves should have the old overcoat.

Accordingly, on the next Saturday, when the farmer with his wife was about to drive into the country town, he asked at the last moment,

"Now, where's that coat?"

"Bless me!" cried Mrs. Bingle, "I've been so busy over the butter and eggs, if I didn't clear forget about it! Sally, Sally," she ran into the house calling to the girl who helped in the kitchen, "run up to the spare chamber and take that overcoat that hangs there, and some of them papers that lays on the shelf, and wrap it up well and bring it to me."

Sally brought it, and the huge bundle lay in Mrs. Bingle's lap as she rode.

"It is a good coat," she observed, half-regretfully smoothing with her finger a corner of the cloth which peeped through a hole in the paper, and began revolving in her mind the possibility of Sam's growing into it in two years. "Sam won't be likely to get any ready-bought coat half as good as this."

"Like as not he won't," agreed the farmer, "but never mind. It's more blessed to give than to receive, you know."

The Bingle household awake the next morning with the impression that something of an event was impending in the family, which impression became, with full wakefulness, defined into the remembrance that the new overcoat was to be worn for the first time on that day. There was, however, no undignified haste nor trifling in the matter. The morning chores were done, morning prayer conducted with its time-honored lengthiness, and then the farmer leisurely shaved himself as usual, at one of the windows of the great kitchen, before saying, in as indifferent a voice as he could command:

"Jim, run up stairs and get my overcoat."

Jim went, but delayed until his mother had put the last touches to the bow of her bonnet strings, a process which was almost invariably interrupted by her husband with the remarks that they would be late for church, before he was heard shouting:

"I can't find it."

"Where are you lookin'?"

"In the closet in your room."

"It's in the closet in the spare chamber," called his father.

Another long delay, and then Jim came down stairs without it.

"I tell you it's on one of them pegs in our closet," said Mrs. Bingle, "I'll go myself. It's dark, and he can't see, but its there, for I put it there myself."

"No," said Mr. Bingle, calling after her, "it's in the spare chamber closet. I put it there."

She was heard stepping briskly from one room to the other, then back, and then back again. Then down the stairs, when she stood before them in silence, on her face blank consternation, and on her arm—the old overcoat!

"When did you hang it there?"

"I don't know—the day after it came, I guess. The old one always hung there; so I took it down and hung the new one there."

Mrs. Bingle sank into a chair.

"It's gone."

"Gone to Parson Graves!" The boys stared, open-mouthed, unable at first fully to take in the calamity.

"But you can get it again," at length Jim said, hopefully.

"Of course!" said Sam. You can tell Parson Graves it was all a mistake, and it was the old coat you meant for him, and of course he'll change back."

But the farmer shook his head, ruefully.

"No, that won't do. It's done, and it can't be undone," he said with a groan. "Don't one of you never let on about its bein' a mistake."

The family and the old coat were late at church, thus missing the sight of the entrance of the new coat, but it lay over the arm of the little sofa in the pulpit. And farmer Bingle never could recall a word of that service through which he sat tryiug to bring himself into some friendly recognition of the fact that he had presented his minister with a forty-five dollar overcoat, which he could not hope to have count at anything near its full value on his yearly assessment; for who ever heard of a country parson having such a coat?

"Don't he look fine, though!" ejaculated Sam, as Mr. Graves came down the aisle.

"And don't Mrs. Graves look set up!" said Jim.

"Enough to make any woman, to hang on such a piece of cloth like that," said Mrs. Bingle.

Mr. Bingle was unhitching his horses as Mr. Graves came out of the church door, and did not at first raise his eyes as he listened to the remarks passing around.

"Bless me! What a fine lookin' fellow our parson is anyhow! Where on earth did he get that coat?"

"Must have had a fortune left him."

Mr. Bingle could not help feeling that the coat had been well bestowed, as its wearer came to meet him with outstretched hands and a few quiet, though very earnest words of acknowledgment of his gift. The coat had fitted the farmer well, but there was something more than the mere filling out of good cloth in the minister's dignified bearing; and in the scholarly face which appeared above it, something which stirred up a feeling in many members of the congregation that this servant of the Lord had not hitherto been clothed in a fashion worthy of his high office.

"That's a shabby old hat to wear with it," said one of the village store-keepers. "I'll see about that before another Sunday comes 'round."

As Mr. Bingle felt the grasp of his pastor's hand, he began almost to be glad he had given the coat; and then, as the fact of his having given it was whispered about, to feel ashamed of receiving so much credit for an act which he never would have thought of performing. For an honest, and really warm nature lay under the crust of parsimonious selfishness which had hardened over his heart, as it has, alas! over so many, which might overflow in deeds of kindness to bless those who have given not grudgingly, but their whole selves to the Master's service.

"I feel like a liar; yes, I do!" said Mr. Bingle to his wife, with an energy which startled her, as they rode home. "To have that man shakin' me by the hand, and talkin' about my generosity, and his wife's eyes beamin' up at me, and me not able to right out and tell 'em I'm a grudgin,' tight-fisted old—I tell you what!"—he gave his horses such a vigorous cut with the whip, that Jim and Sam, on a back backless seat of the bob-sleigh, nearly went over backwards into the snow, "I've got to get even with myself somehow, but I don't know just how yet.

It was astonishing what a commotion farmer Bingle's gift created in the parish. Not one eye had failed to mark the justice done by Mr. Graves' goodly figure to the goodly garment, and with an awakening pride at the possession of such a fine-looking pastor came a desire to see him thoroughly well equipped. Which desire found expression in such a visitation at the parsonage as had never before been dreamed of. Cheap goods and cast-offs were ignored in the general supply of winter comforts which each giver made sure should be in keeping with the new overcoat, and the wives and mothers had seen to it that Mrs. Graves and the children should look fit to walk beside that tailor made-up piece of cloth.

Mr. Bingle had smiled with a light in his eyes which came up from somewhere under that broken crust, at the set of furs which his wife carried to Mrs. Graves that night. But in the early gray of the winter morning he, with Sam's help, quietly unloaded in the back yard of the parsonage, a firkin of butter, the same of lard, and six barrels of his best apples, packed for market.

"A good forty-five dollars' worth if I'd carted it half a mile farther," he said to his wife, with a face that shone as he sat down to breakfast.

"And not a soul heard us," said Sam, rubbing his hands in great glee. "Wish't I could see 'em when they find it out!"

"Now I'm even," said the farmer. "And it was the best day's work I ever did when I gave away that coat by mistake.—Standard.

A PREPARED PLACE.

I was visiting a friend some years ago who had just built a new house. It was beautiful, useful. He took me up stairs. It had wardrobes, toilet glasses, books and paintings. It was furnished grandly. And the father turned to me and said, "This room is for our daughter. She is in Europe. She does not know we are arranging it. Her mother and I have fixed up everything we could think of for her; and as soon as the house is fully furnished we are going to Europe to bring her back, and we are going to bring her up stairs, and open the door and say—'Daughter, this is all yours.'" And I thought of the joy it would give her, and I thought, "How kind these parents are!" Just then I turned away and thought, "That is what Jesus is doing for me." He says, "I am going away. I will come again. In my Father's house are many mansions. If it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." Then I said, "This father and mother are rich; but they have not all treasures; there are a great many things they don't know how to get. But Jesus who is furnishing my mansion in glory has everything. He has undertaken to furnish a place for me, and I shall be with him forever."—Bishop Simpson.

Dr. Cuyler says in the Examiner and Chronicle: "I doubt if I ever would have been drawn to the service of Christ Jesus but for the faithfulness of that home preacher who rocked my cradle. At the starting point of nearly every minister's life stands a Christian mother. Dr. Potts requested all of us students in Princeton Theological Seminary who had praying mothers to stand up, and in an instant nearly the whole one hundred and fifty were on their feet. There we stood, living witnesses of the power of a mother's prayers and a mother's shaping influence and example."

THE YEAR'S CYCLE.

January ushers in the year,
February follows in the rear;
Then March, that brings us brighter hours,
Makes way for April's sun and showers—
Her robes of green unfold dear May,
And June, her flowers so sweet and gay;
July glides in with smiling face—
Then August joins the rapid race.
September, with her changing sky,
Proclaims "October days are nigh."
November's voice, so sad and drear,
Calls out "December, close the year!"
And now the cycle twelve is run;
The months are learned—my task is done.

BIBLE READINGS FOR THE YOUNG.

TELL IT OUT. Read 2 Kings 7.

We do not well: this day is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace; if we tarry till the morning light, some mischief will come upon us: now therefore come, that we may go and tell the king's household. 2 Kings 7: 9.

1. What good tidings had these lepers to communicate?
2. Why was it their duty to tell this good news at once? Lev. 19: 18; Pro. 11: 26; Est. 4: 14.
3. What good tidings ought believers to tell others? 1 Tim. 1: 15; Psa. 66: 16; 96: 10.
4. Why should we at once do so? Eccl. 9: 12; Pro. 27: 1; 2 Cor. 6: 1, 2.
5. What may we learn from these men agreeing together? Mal. 3: 16; Heb. 10: 24; Num. 30: 31, 32.

CRACKED!

'Twas a set of Resolutions,
As fine as fine could he,
And signed in painstaking fashion,
By Nettie and Joe and Bee.
And last in the list was written
In letters broad and dark,
(To look as grand as the others),
"Miss Baby Grace X her mark!"—

We'll try all ways to help our mother;
We won't be selfish to each other;
We'll say kind words to everyone;
We won't tie pussy's feet for fun;
We won't be cross, and snarly too;
And all the good we can, we'll do.

"It's just as easy to keep them,"
The children gaily cried;
But mamma, with a smile, made answer—
"Wait, darlings, till you are tried."
And truly the glad, bright New Year
Wasn't his birthday old,
When three little sorrowful faces
A sorrowful story told.

"And how are your resolutions?"
We asked of the baby Grace,
Who stood with a smile of wonder
On her dear little dimpled face;
Quick came the merry answer—
She never an instant lacked—
"I don't fink much of 'em's broken,
But I dess 'em's 'bout all cracked!"

THE CROSS-ROADS.

A STORY WITH A SUGGESTION FOR NEW YEAR'S.

"Which road do we take, grandpa?" inquired Harry, as grandpa's little black mare and Harry's pretty little pony pattered slowly, side by side, up towards the cross-roads.

"Whichever road you would like the best," replied grandpa, carelessly.

Harry turned and looked at grandpa; it was such an odd reply, but grandpa's face gave no more information than his answer had done.

"You are joking, grandpa, I know you are," said Harry, laughing.

"Joking! I am very serious," replied grandpa.

"But, grandpa, we want to go to Cresson."

"So we do. Your cousins will be pleased to see you, Harry."

Harry found that grandpa said no more about the road, so he waited a minute until they came to the point where the question must be decided.

Grandpa drew up his reins and quite stopped his little mare, and Harry wondered very much what grandpa meant to do, coming to a full stop just at the point where the two roads crossed each other.

"Do you forget which road to take, grandpa?"

"No, indeed! I have trotted over them both too often to forget about them."

"Then, which shall we take, grandpa?"

"The one you like best, boy."

Harry was perplexed, grandpa seemed so earnest in saying such a silly thing.

"I don't care which road we take, grandpa, only I want to go to Cresson.',

"You want to go to Cresson, of course, but it is strange you do not decide which you like the appearance of best; one you notice is much smoother and easier traveled than the other."

"Grandpa, I am sure they cannot both go to Cresson."

"Oh, no, nobody said they did, boy, but what does that matter?"

Harry was greatly disturbed; he thought something must be the matter with grandpa, or that he was very provoking.

"We cannot get to Cresson, grandpa, if we take the wrong road, he replied, a scrap impatiently; "how can it matter about my liking the road?"

"It matters a great deal. One road is up hill and down all the way for miles, and leads over a stream which we would be obliged to ford; the other is smoother, easier; which do you think you would prefer?"

"But, grandpa, we will have to take the right one, no matter what kind of a one it is."

'Why, my dear boy, your words are contrary to the actions of the greater part of the people of the world; how do you happen to speak so unreasonably?"

Harry's little Midge was getting a bit fussy, and wanted to go; Harry looked perplexed as he tried to make Midge stand still.

"I do not know, grandpa; but let us go," he pleaded.

"Yes, it is hard to stand still; ponies, horses, boys, men, women—time, all like to go, but the great point to decide is where to go, and how to get there."

"Grandpa, you are too funny for anything," said Harry, more and more bewildered; "we decided to go to Cresson, and now the thing to do is to go, isn't it?"

"Yes, but how?—that is the question."

"By the road which leads there, grandpa, for you know yourself if we take the wrong road we will never, never reach Cresson, if we even ride for a year."

"Do you really mean that, boy?" inquired grandpa, solemnly; "Do you mean to say that it is so important about the road?"

Harry did not like to laugh at grandpa, but he did do it; how could he help it?

"Why, grandpa," he said, as he patted little Midge, and tried to make him stand as still as Jet was doing; "why grandpa, it is just as important to get on the right road as it is to start at all, don't you think so?"

"To be sure I do," said grandpa, with a sudden earnestness; "I see that you agree with me, so we will not consider which road is the easiest, or more agreeable, but take the one leading to Cresson, which is this to the right. But stay a minute; Midge must wait. Did you think your grandpa had lost his senses?"

"No, grandpa, not just that," said Harry, patting Midge, and feeling relieved that they had succeeded in so far coming to reason.

"Boy," said grandpa, holding Midge's bridle to make him stand quite still, and just where he could look into Harry's puzzled eyes, "you are standing at two cross-roads instead of one. Do you know what I mean?"

"No, grandpa, I cannot think."

"These roads lead to the north, south, east, and west; the eye can see them; the other cross-roads lead to God, and away from him; there are only two of them."

Harry was a little puzzled yet.

"If I should ask you which you would choose, the good or the evil road—the road to God or away from him—I know what you would answer me; you would not wait to consider a minute; you would choose the good, and that would be well as far as it went; but thousands have chosen the good and have come out at the evil end. Thousands have said they chose to travel towards God, but have found themselves, afterwards, with their backs to him, at the very end of the wrong road. They never started toward God or walked on the good way at all. The reason was that they never stopped at the cross-roads and considered properly which road to take. Their mouth said, 'I wish to go on the good road which leads toward God,' but they did not stop and question, and find out how to get on the good road. They were contented with thinking that they wanted to go toward God, but they did not begin to go.

"If you are going to Cresson, you must take the road to Cresson, and keep on it, no matter how rough, steep, slippery, crooked, or vexatious in every way it may be. If you want to go toward God, you must take the road leading toward God, no matter how hard, disagreeable, trying, it may prove to be."

"I never thought about its being like two roads," said Harry, forgetting how funny it was of grandpa to stop Midge and Jet in the middle of the road to talk in such a puzzling fashion.

"Boy, you are young; that means you are coming to the cross-roads. Look out! Do not say, 'I want to go to Cresson,' and set your face toward Munford. Decide for God and get on the right road. Get on it; keep on it; stay on it; walk over it—up hill or down hill."

"Grandpa, you puzzled me very much at first."

"Yes, boy" said grandpa, dropping Midge's bridle, and letting both him and Jet start at an easy pace. "I suppose so, but I want you to get these cross-roads, and the importance of deciding about them, fixed in your mind, so that you will never forget them, that they may always come back as though they were before your eyes, reminding you of those other cross-roads, of which I have been speaking. When you think of going to Cresson remember the importance of deciding about the road, and of keeping on it. When you think of these cross-roads remember, too, those other cross-roads of good and evil; for, boy, you can no more reach Heaven by the wrong road than you can get to Cresson by going toward Munford."—N. Y. Observer.

A GOOD ANSWER.

That pious Christian and wise philosopher, Dr. Rush, of Philadelphia, was once consulted by a minister who was somewhat unwell. The doctor prescribed a medicine that was decidedly unpalatable. The patient inquired if he might not take it in a little good old Jamaica rum.

"No, sir;" was the decided reply.

"Why, sir;" said the other, "what harm will it do?"

"Sir," said Dr. Rush, "I am determined that no man shall rise in the Judgment and say, 'Dr. Rush made me a drunkard.'"—S. S. Advocate.

TEMPERANCE.

GERMAN INTEMPERANCE.

From high official authority, namely Consul General Vogelen, at Frankfort-on-the-Main, in a dispatch to the State Department on intemperance in North Germany, we learn some startling facts. The claim is made by the advocates of whiskey and beer, that the Germans afford proof that these things can be indulged in without harm, and that it is only by the abuse of these "good things of God" (?) that evil effects follow. How false this claim is, in the case of the nation quoted, is shown by a few pages from the shameful history: The number of drinking places in Prussia has risen from 119,945 in 1869 to 165,640 in 1880. The number of persons who became insane in consequence of excessive drinking (delirum tremens), in Prussia, from 1875 to 1879 was 3,453, or 14.84 per cent of all demented persons. Of 33,837 convicts of the same period, 41 per cent were known to have committed the crime while under the influence of liquor. Of 4,450 suicides, 508 were the result of excessive drinking. More than 50 per cent of pauperism there is due to the same cause.

Forty years ago a strong movement was organized to check this vice, but the revolution of 1848 distracted the attention of the government and people from the subject. In 1866 laws regulating taverns and drinking places were made more stringent, but the trade law of 1869, adopted by the Imperial government, tied the hands of those who would enforce many of the provisions of the former. We rejoice that Germans are arousing to this matter, and look for a reform all along the line.—Union Signal.

A CURE FOR DRUNKENNESS.

There is a prescription in use for the cure of drunkenness by which thousands are said to have been enabled to recover themselves. The recipe came into notoriety through the efforts of Mr. John Vine Hall, commander of the Great Eastern steamer. He had fallen into such habitual drunkenness that his most earnest efforts to reclaim himself proved unavailing. At last he sought the advice of an eminent physician which he followed faithfully for a couple of months, and at the end of that time he had lost all desire for liquor, although he had been for years led captive by a most debasing appetite. The recipe, which he afterward published, and by which so many other drunkards have been assisted to reform, is as follows: Sulphate of iron, 10 grains, magnesia, 40 grains; peppermint, 44 drahms; spirits of nutmeg, 4 drahms. Dose, one table-spoonful twice a day.—Irish Advocate.

MR. BLAINE AND TEMPERANCE.

The following is the testimony of Rev. H. M. Field, D. D., of the New York Evangelist:

As many of our readers are naturally interested in the position of Mr. Blaine in regard to the temperance question, and to his own practice in the matter, we may mention that at the dinner given to him in this city some time since, we sat at the same table with him for three hours, with only two persons between—Mr. Evarts, who presided, and Mr. Morton, Minister to France—and that, according to the sumptuous fashion of Delmonico, six wine-glasses were placed at each plate, and that Mr. Blaine, on taking his seat, immediately turned every one of his glasses upside down, so as to prevent the waiters from even approaching him with their bottles. "I see that you do not take wine," said Mr. Evarts. "No," replied Mr. Blaine; "I find that nothing strengthens me so much as a cup of tea, that it is better than all the spirituous stimulants in the world." He told us that in his recent trip (of which he said a member of the party had kept a record, and found that he had traveled, we think it was, ten or twelve thousand miles, and made between three and four hundred speeches), his sole refreshment after such exhausting labor had been good black tea.

—A conductor put a drunken man off the train, and when asked his reason, replied "that the company had issued strict orders not to carry whisky through the State of Iowa in any kind of package."

—It has long been known that among the evil results of the excessive use of tobacco is the tendency to what is known as amblyopy, which is an impairment of the usual sight. It is substantially an atrophy of the optic nerve. Tobacco injuriously affects every organ of the human body.

THE CHURCHES.

—Dr. F. A. Noble, of Union Park Congregational church, this city, will officiate in the First Congregational church in Washington two Sabbaths during January.

—Maj. Whittle, the evangelist, has returned to Chicago for a brief season. He preached Sabbath morning and evening at the Chicago Avenue church.

—Pastor Seguin of the Evangelical French Mission in this city has made arrangements for the celebrated Father Chiniquy to assist in a series of meetings, beginning about the middle of January. The conversion of Catholics will be the chief object of these meetings.

—The union meetings at Wheaton will probably be continued in some form, although the evangelist Bell closed his labors last Friday night. There were some fifty persons who have signified their purpose to unite with the churches engaged in the work.

—A revival effort is in progress in College Springs, Iowa, led by an evangelist from the Friends of Oskaloosa, Mrs. R. W. Marriage.

—The Chicago Avenue church in this city—better known as the Moody church—has been without a settled pastor for some eighteen months and over. Since their invitation to Pres. C. A. Blanchard was declined by him on account of his unwillingness to leave the College at Wheaton, he has preached for the church and has become greatly esteemed by its members. The committee appointed to secure a pastor have succeeded, with Mr. Moody's suggestion, in selecting Rev. C. F. Goss, a young man of Utica, N. Y., who, it is understood, accepts and will begin his work immediately. At the late annual business meeting, Mr. Moody was chosen Honorary Superintendent and J. M. Hitchcock actual Superintendent of the Sabbath-school, which is one of the largest in the city. The present membership of the church is 454.

—Mr. D. L. Moody, on his way from St. Paul to Cincinnati, spent a day in this city, and met in conference several gentlemen to consider the question of founding here an institution for the training of lay missionaries, similar to that of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Grattan Guinness in London, and making permanent the effort made last year by Miss Dryer, Pres. C. A. Blanchard, Prof. Moorehead and others. The plan is to have $250,000, and with a part of it to erect a building for the uses of the organization, capable of accommodating from 150 to 200 persons, while another portion is to constitute an endowment fund. In the meantime it is proposed to procure temporary quarters and open the school as soon as practicable. Mr. Moody, it is understood, will be at the head of the training part of the business, assisted by a corps of teachers. A committee has been appointed to shape and carry out the enterprise.

—The First Reformed Church at Passaic, N. J., was organized in 1694. It was proposed to build a new house of worship, but the old members objected, and it was decided to remodel the present place of worship.

—The revision of the English version of the Old Testament, after fourteen years of labor, is now completed, and will be published next spring by the University presses of Oxford and Cambridge in several editions.

—A California church, one of the largest in the State, is built entirely of timber from one redwood tree, and the surplus was sufficient for 60,000 shingles.

—The Centennial Conference in Baltimore for the celebration of the planting of Methodism in America in 1784 represents 3,718,288 Methodists in the United States and Canada.

—A powerful work of grace has been going on in Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn., under the direction of Rev. J. C. Fields, the evangelist of the American Missionary Association. Twenty-nine students have made profession of faith, and Christians have been greatly blessed.

—At the State Convention of the Sunday-schools of Pennsylvania over 8,000 schools were reported in the State, and from these schools 20,000 converts were received into the churches. An attendance of nearly 1,000,000 is reported on the rolls of the Sunday-schools of the State.

—Since the American Bible Society entered upon the general supply of the United States and Territories with the Scriptures two years ago, 557 counties have been canvassed by colporteurs of the society, 464 counties have been partially canvassed, and 564 counties still remain to be supplied by colporteurs where the auxillary Bible societies cannot undertake the work.

—Rev. Charles Chiniquy, the reformed Romish priest, has returned from his extended preaching tour among the French people in Canada. He says the French Protestant cause has had a triumphial march in Montreal, and many of the leading business men of that city have renounced Catholicism and embraced Protestantism. Arrangements are being made to have Father Chiniquy speak in Chicago about the middle of January.

—Dr. Newman Hall, the eminent London divine, writes a two-column article in the Advance giving reasons why candidates for church membership should not be compelled to sign any creed. Dr. thinks that a man should be admitted to membership in a church by confession of faith in Christ. Dr. Hall will contribute two papers on this question to the Advance, and will be followed by Dr. William M. Taylor of New York, who will also devote two papers in the same publication to a discussion of a creed or no creed.

—Brayton Ives, of New York city, owns a copy of the Gutenberg Bible—the first book ever printed. The only other copy owned in this country is that in the Lenox library. Recently a copy was sold in London, at the great sale of the Lyston Park collection, for the modest sum of £3,900. It was bought by Quaritch, and promptly offered by cable to Mr. Ives at a slight advance. The cable, that time, had the curious luck to strike the only man in a nation of 55,000,000, fully supplied with the article offered for sale.

—The steamer Peace, sent by the English Baptists for the use of the mission on the Upper Congo, has been launched at Stanley Pool. The 800 pieces of which it consisted were safely transported the whole distance and accurately put together.

—The Mission Field reports that Hon. John Campbell has given $50,000 towards establishing a missionary bishopric in Fiji, where he has large estates. And an intelligent Brazilian has recently made the gift of $5,000 towards erecting a boys' training school at Sao Paulo, under care of the Presbyterians. Such donations show what value the residents in heathen countries, or those who have large commercial interests there, place upon mission work.

—A special effort is now being made in Brooklyn to arouse an interest in the Chinese who live in that city. A Chinese Young Men's Christian Association has been organized, and occupy rooms on Fulton street, near St. James Place. The eight schools in Brooklyn have on their roll the names of 175 Chinamen, and the schools have an attendance of 140 to 160 each Sunday.

—Many clergymen appeared before the Connecticut Railroad Commissioners in Hartford, the other day to advocate the restriction of Sunday traffic on the railroads of that State. The Commissioners promised to give the petition their consideration.

—The sword by which Protestant heretics were executed in Bohemia in the fifteenth century, and the silver communion cup lately exhumed in that country, and which have been the possession of Scotch Presbyterians, have been sent to Dr. Breed, of Philadelphia, for exhibition in this country.

—A story comes from the western part of Nebraska that a traveling Baptist preacher who had preached a temperance sermon at Antelope, Wyoming, was taken by half a dozen cowboys to a saloon and compelled to drink five or six lemonade glasses full of vile whisky. The cowboys then started with the preacher to a temporary trading post in this State, twenty-five miles from Antelope, but before reaching there the preacher died from the effects of his rough treatment.

—A meeting was recently held at Springfield, Mass., to organize a school for Christian workers. The object is to train young men for secretaries of Young Men's Christian Associations, superintendents of Sunday-schools and helpers to pastors in missions and the general work of the church. The course of study will include Bible history, systematic training in the great fundamental truths common to all evangelical denominations, study of the biographies of the Bible, practice of unfolding Scripture in the prayer-meeting and leading Sunday-school teachers' meetings, history of Christianity, the history and literature of Sunday-schools, practice in all branches of lay work, and instruction in instrumental music and gymnastics. The course will occupy two years. The teachers for the year are Revs. T. H. Hawks, S. L. Merrill, L. L. Potter, T. W. Bishop, D. A. Read and O. Read. Rev. Dr. Pentecost, of Brooklyn, has consented to give a course of Bible readings. The meeting was presided over by Rev. S. G. Buckingham and a number of prominent men are interested in the movement. The school will open the first Monday in January.

—The general committee of the Methodist church, at its recent meeting appropriated a total of $850,000, of which $354,979 were for their foreign missions, $82,100 to those in the United States, and $259,200 to domestic missions.

—The Woman's Board of Home Missions of the Baptist church supports thirty-nine women missionaries, five teachers and seven Bible readers, and is making preparations for supporting a missionary among the Chinese of San Francisco. They have raised $35,000 for their work.

—In some parts of Minnesota one can travel a hundred miles and find none but Swedes, and some of their congregations number over a thousand. They also have several missions among the Finns.

—The London Christian says: "The bitter hostility of the Moslem to the Christian faith is becoming more and more developed, insomuch that fresh laws are being enacted by the Ottoman government for the obstruction of mission work on Mohammedan territory. In Palestine strenuous efforts are being made to remove Moslem children from the mission schools, and a rule has been made that no Moslem shall be considered master of himself until he is twenty years of age, and is certified to be of sound mind and able to judge for himself. The purpose of such an enactment may be inferred from a statement made by a government official to the special correspondent of the Record at Jerusalem. 'Every religion,' he said, 'must take care of its own interests, and no effort will be wanting to obstruct the designs of the missionaries.'"

—Rev. George P. Hays, D.D., of Denver, Colorado, was the moderator of the last Presbyterian General Assembly, whose earnest speech on prohibition was reported in the Cynosure at the time. The Christian Hour of Omaha says of a late conflict he had with the powers of evil: "About two months ago the doctor, in a public address to the citizens of Denver, stated very positively that Sheriff Graham was "aiding and abetting thieves and robbers," and added that if he took exceptions to the statement the courts were open to him. The very next day Sheriff Graham instituted suit for criminal libel. Dr. Hays, in a recent letter, says: 'Sheriff Graham has withdrawn his suit at his own cost. If it had ever come to trial we would have proved that he had gone before the grand jury and urged them not to indict the gamblers. It has cost me some money, but it started an agitation that has shut up every gambling hole in the city, and there were over twenty of them. It has put the question of enforcing the laws into the city election next spring. They are trying to let themselves down easy by some newspaper lying, but my friends and I are so well satisfied that we have decided not to pay any attention to them.' It may be added that several of the Denver papers, notably the Tribune, ably assisted in calling away the prominent county and city officials from the participation in and protection of crime, and were largely instrumental, with Dr. Hays, in banishing the professional gamblers from the city."

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

A new Masonic organization called the "Sovereign Sanctuary of the Royal Masonic Rite for the United States of America," embracing all rites from the fourth to the 96th degree, has been formed at Boston, Judge Isaac H. Parish, of Michigan being elected "Most Illustrious Past Grand Master."

The St. James Gazette, London, prints an interview had in Paris with a dynamiter, who said the headquarters of the conspirators was at Paris, but the funds came from America. The explosion at London bridge was arranged in Paris three months ago by a man now in America. Two men were sent to London to execute the plot in September, but a delay occurred. They returned to Paris after the explosion and are there now.

Another mysterious crime, attributed to Nihilists, has just been discovered at Moscow. The police had their attention attracted to the cellar of an old unoccupied building by a terrible smell which proceeded from the place. They found in the cellar the decaying corpse of a young man whose identity had been entirely destroyed by vitriol. The fluid had been literally dashed over the victim, and his head, neck, chest and arms were burned. In addition to this his head had been smashed, and two large stones with which this had evidently been done were found covered with blood and tufts of hair, lying near the body. The police believe the victim is some young student who joined the Nihilists and betrayed some of their secrets. Their theory is that he was decoyed into the cellar and after being disfigured by vitriol was finally murdered and left to rot. Search is being made in the various colleges to ascertain if any student is missing.

The Druzes have their headquarters in Southern Lebanon and beyond Mt. Herman, and numbered 50,000. They form a separate tribe or nation, marrying among themselves. Women are permitted no religious instruction whatever. The Druzes are a secret society, more compact than the Mormons. They will receive no converts. Many of them do not believe their religion but hold on to their political organization.

John Nolan, of New York City, National Delegate, in company with E. L. Carey, ex-National Treasurer, of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, have been in Chicago reorganizing lodges of the order. The reorganization consists in purging them of politicians. The gentlemen say that the Ancient order of Hibernians is a religious, benevolent and patriotic organization. Designing men have penetrated its ranks for the purpose of making it a political machine. They have used the order in Cook county, in Illinois, and even in the United States, for the purpose of aiding themselves. Their national convention at Cleveland last May was captured by a body of politicians, who caucused and brought others to their aid and elected H. F. Sheridan, of Chicago, National Delegate. The main body determined to undo this action and repudiated it. Charges were brought against Sheridan, to the effect that he had manufactured private communications purporting to come from the Board of Erin, and that the secretary and treasurer had aided him in the circulation of the paper. The Board of Erin authorized a New York convention to investigate the matter, and the convention found the charges true. They accordingly expelled Sheridan and suspended his aids, electing in their places John Nolan as delegate, Wm. Sheridan as secretary, and J. J. O'Riley as treasurer. They at once set about the establishment of the old spirit, and have reorganized lodges in New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Pennsylvania, Iowa, Nebraska, and now commence the work in Illinois. All politicians are to be expelled from the order, and lodges not willing to be reorganized will also be expelled. Are the politicians turning the whole order into Mollie Maguires?

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS,

OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by E. E. FLAGG, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. In cloth, $1; per doz., $9. Paper, 50c; per doz., $4.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness. The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to he read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to he undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

"Our Anti-secret society friends are certainly entitled to great credit or their persistence in their efforts to expose and root out secretism. The object of the writer of this story is to present in its true light the crafty, unscrupulous and exceedingly hurtful influence of Masonry, the parent of all the orders."—Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter.

BATAVIA CONVENTION PAMPHLET.

A Staggering Blow!

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in BATAVIA, N. Y., September, 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freedmen and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminisences.

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

cloth.....75 cents.

THIS is a pleasant surprise in many ways. The author is Rev. W. T. Meloy, of the United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and the book is published by the Board of Publication of his denomination. It is a love story, not "fascinating," but with so much of genial interest that the reader is in no danger of laying it down unfinished. * * * The moral purpose of the book is to describe and vindicate Christian character, in its more heroic aspects, and it is a success. We congratulate the author and the United Presbyterian Board of Publication on this literary lily of the valley.—The Interior.

"LUCILLE VERNON" is evidently not an ideal sketch, but the fictitions names used represent to a great extent real men and women of flesh and blood. The characters of many of them are by no means attractive, but are perfect counterparts of querulous, obstinate and parsimonious professors who are thorns in the flesh of many a pastor in all the churches. But as in all the churches, there were also good and true men and women at Lansington, who upheld and encouraged the pastor. * * * In its author will be recognized the worthy pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and a welcome contributor to these columns.—United Presbyterian.

IT belongs to the class known as the religious novel. It is a love story written in the Pansy style, and so constructed as to teach sound moral and religious principles, in connection with quite an interesting narrative. Indeed, when the writer sat down to examine it, he commenced as a critic on the sharp lookout for blunders, but soon he became absorbed in the story, and forgot altogether his critical duties. He also noticed that when the members of his family commenced to read it, they had but little time for anything else until it was completed. Tried as a work of art by the practical test, it must be regarded as a success. Its influence will doubtless be good in correcting false views, and in helping the reader to sounder principles and to a better spirit. * * * Some may think some of the scenes depicted are not true to nature, but the critic would be likely to find, on inquiry, that the very incidents which he would select as unnatural are actual facts. "We often find that truth is stranger than fiction."—D. A. W. in the Christian Instructor.

The heroine, who becomes the bride of the pastor of the church at Lansington, is a wonderful exemplification of how a woman who is a true wife and help-meet may throw her life and energies into the great work of saving souls; aiding, by gentle words and sympathy, wise counsel and brave endurance, the husband having charge of a congregation where the Demon of Misrule held full sway. We follow with interest the history of the wife and husband through their hours of despondency and discouragement to the happy ending, where religion, harmony and peace have gained the ascendency and the good man and wife find the reward.—Pittsburgh Daily Telegraph.

FARM NOTES.

CUT YOUR TIMBER IN WINTER.

From my own experience, and all the facts that I have been able to gather from lumbermen and dealers in timber, I have come to the conclusion that the winter is not only preferable, but the most convenient season for cutting timber, whether it be converted into sawed lumber or be used for posts, rails, railroad ties, or other purposes where toughness and durability are an objeet. But in case of small timber for posts and stakes from which the bark is to be stripped, we may delay the cutting until the sap commenees to liquify, whieh will faeilitate the removal of the bark. All stakes and posts whieh are to be set into the ground should have the bark removed on that portion in the ground.

If we bear in mind the fact that it is only the outer portion of the tree—the sap wood—leaves, buds, and inner layers of the bark—which are alive and contain true sap, all other portions being dead and only serve as a covering, or like the heart wood, help to sustain the tree in its position, we ean readily see why it will make no material difference in the lasting properties of timber, whether it is cut in summer or winter, provided the green portion is deprived of its moisture, so that insects will not find a lodgment for their eggs, or decay be accelerated by its presence.

For such purposes as hoop poles, the bark must be retained, as it is generally considered essential, and in this case the young trees should be cut at a season when the bark will adhere the most firmly, that is late fall or early wintar, although they may be cut in summer, because the hickories usually finish their growth quite early in the season, but the wood is likely to be more brittle if the poles are cut early, or when they are cut in full leaf, than later.

Coniferous trees from which it is desirable to strip the bark, should be cut during the growing season ir early summer, and if rapid seasoning is desired without removal of bark, the trees should be merely felled and allowed to remain thus with all their branches attached until the leaves fall off.—American Agriculturist.

WHIMS IN BUILDING.

Nothing adds so much to the cost of building as the indulgence in whims. To set out deliberately to do a "queer," "fanciful," or, as it is sometimes called, "original" thing in building is always to incur unnecessary expense. If we look through the books that contain pictures of the architecture of all ages and nations, we shall find that, without an exception, in the times all men of taste are agreed in calling the good times, the modes of building have been sensible, founded on the needs of the case, and that whatever may seem fanciful—the whole of what we call picturesque—when its charm has proved enduring, is the result of what we may call, in every case, "accepting the situation." Nothing has been done in such instances for the sake of being picturesque. Good building, good ornament, never poses.

In building, as a rule, every departure from the rectangular form is an added expense. One of the things impressed on the mind of a young man who goes into an architect's office to study the profession, is that, if cost is to be considered, which it sometimes is, and sometimes is not, all excrescences and projections must be avoided. A rectangular house is the cheapest, Bay windows, porches, octagonal or circular, external ends to rooms—all these thing cost money; and it is by multiplying these features that the expenses of building are often made so great as to deter people from undertaking it, for the things seem so small in themselves, it is not suspected what drains they are on the purse. If a good reason cannot be given for any so-called ornamental feature in a house, if it cannot be shown that something worth while is to be gained by making it, we may be reasonably sure that it is a fancy which will cost, as the country people say, more than it comes to. And, in the greater number of cases, nothing, even in looks, is gained by indulging the fancy. —The Studio.

IN BRIEF.

Four feet square of prairie surface, say in Grundy county, if devoted to corn would bring an income of less than two cents, but mined for coal would produce $9. Coal and not corn is king in Illinois.

Atheism pervades the population of Paris to such an extent that from certain reading-rooms and libraries, which are open especially for workingmen, that good old book, Robinson Cruso, has been excluded. The reason is that it contains too much recognition of God to be acceptable.

The lumber for 48,000 clothespins costs $3 and the clothespins are worth $386.50. Four kinds of saws, a revolving polishing cylinder of iron, and a kiln requisite for their manufacture, and the poor creature who makes them only has 50 per cent. profit when he sells twelve of them for 1 cent.

One of the South American fruits which are to be tried in Southern California next year is the melon shrub. It is described as an evergreen, with a beautiful purple and white flower, and bears a fruit shaped like a rifled cannon shell, about four inches long by from two to three inches in diameter.

A French druggist advocates the employment of cylindrical white bottles for medicines to be taken internally, and square colored bottles for those intended for external use. The difference in shape will prevent a large number of the night accidents now so common among people who cannot, or will not, read a label.

A letter from Ascuncion, the capital of Paraguay, gives the surprising information that of the 300,000 population of the Paraguayan Republic only 30,000—one in ten—are men. The 270,000 women are the farmers, producers, and laborers. They work slavishly and are very poor. While the men sit at home and drink and smoke the women indefatigably toil and support the families.

Max Muller, in his "Biographical Essays"—soon to be published in London—describes the careers of three great Indian reformers, Rammohun Roy, Keshub Chunder Sen, and Dayananda Sarasoati. These three "Lives" will present a short history of the great religious movement which has been going on in India almost unobserved during the last fifty years, and which has led to the foundation of a new religion, which is Christianity in all but its name. The correspondence between Professor Max Muller and some of the principal actors in that new religious reformation has been printed in full, and throws an entirely new light on the secret springs and the real aims of the Brama Samaja and its various branches.

The largest cattle ranch in America under one management is that of Captain Richard King, of Texas. It has 800,000 acres fenced, and nearly 200,000 head of cattle, horses, and sheep. It has been eagerly sought after by English, French, and Dutch capitalists, but the United States Land and Investment Company, of New York, have just purchased it for $6,500,000. The company anticipate an annual income from this source of $1,500,000, calculating that the increase of cattle is 85 per cent. It is encouraging to see this property remain in the hands of Americans.

William H. Vanderbilt is not the richest man in the world. The colony of Victoria has a man who is worth $200,000,000 and his wealth is rapidly increasing. This lucky man is a Lord Rupertswood. By his father's will he fell heir to 2,500,000 merino sheep, 300,000 cattle, and 3,000,000 acres of freehold lands, besides a lease-hold of crown lands in England of equal area. By care and thrift he has doubled his inheritance, making it considerably over $200,000,000. His residence in Melbourne is said to be the most magnificent in the world. It cost $4,000,000.

Advices from Java are to the effect that that island is recovering rapidly from the effects of the dreadful volcanic outburst which afflicted her last year. Her commerce has been restored and her products this season has been unusually large. Exportations of ivory, nutmeg, cinnamon, and other spices will exceed in bulk those of former years. However, none of the coffee plantations have resumed, and probably none will for the present. It is said that the merchants of Suatra, Maumi, and other Java towns have enough coffee in their granaries at the present time to supply the markets of the world for the next three years. Coffee we pay 35 cents for by the pound costs two lilas in Java; the lila is about three-quarters of a cent. Since the volcanic eruption last year the waters of the sea have receded gradually, and the shape of the island is now very nearly what it was before the disturbance. But the natives have a superstitious dread of reoccupying the redeemed territory. Monuments will be erected to mark the sites of the destroyed cities and villages.

A PITIFUL FATE!

How a Minister's Good Deed Landed Him in An Insane Asylum. The Story of His Escape.

To the Editor of the Milwaukee Sentinel:

SIR:—I have read a good many stories of late concerning the confinement of sane persons in lunatic asylums, and I am thereby prompted to relate a bit of personal experience.

In the year 1855, while I was serving the Methodist Episcopal church in a New England town, a neighbor's house took fire. In common with others, I stood on the edge of the roof, passing buckets of water, exposed to intense heat on one side and freezing winds on the other. I took a fearful cold. For twenty-five years it worked havoc in my physical and mental systems. Nevertheless, I continued in my ministerial duties. I preached many a sermon when suffering intense agony. At certain periods, however, I would be comparatively well, and then again, my head would get heavy, my breathing labored, my appetite fickle. I would lose interest in life; feel sleepy at mid-day, and wakeful at midnight. My heart occasionally gave me great concern. Not knowing to the contrary, I attributed this ill feeling to malaria, But eventually mental strength faded away, and I was utterly prostrated. I was cauterized, cupped, blistered, and treated by many physicians in many different ways.

My case was a puzzle as much to my physicians as to myself. For one of them at first prescribed for delerium tremens, and yet I never had tasted intoxicating liquors. Another said I had brain disease, another spinal difficulty, another nervous prostration, heart disease, etc.

My mind eventually gave way, and in 1882 I was confined in the Brattleboro, Vt., Insane Asylum for six months. When I knew where I was, I demanded instant release. I then made a visit to Oceanic, N. J., but I had reckoned too much on my strength. I again lost my reason for a considerable period.

That I was in a desperate condition is evident. My blood had become infected with virus, which inflamed my brain occasionally and doomed me to an early death; for no physician gave me any hope of a cure. I finally found out what my real disorder was, and undertook my own treatment. In a few months I was restored to such a state of health as I never expected to enjoy. That was over three years ago, and my physical and mental health have remained intact to this day.

Last March I came west and engaged in garden farming. In all that time I have not lost a day's work; have apparently enjoyed the most vigorous health and I expect to live the full term of life. The remedy I used was warner's safe cure, and if I should live a thousand years I should never tire of telling its praises.

You will confess with me, Mr. Editor, that such a change is remarkable. And you will also, I am sure, agree with me when I say that whatever created such a mental and physical restoration is deserving the highest praise.

Very truly yours,
REV. E. D. HOPKINS.

Dodge's Corners, Wis.

There are undoubtedly thousands who have an experience similar to the above, to whom Mr. Hopkins' recital will appeal with persuasive force.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

BUT THE

CHRISTIAN NATION

HAS A MAIN PURPOSE always in view!

It is to have this nation formally acknowledge God as the source of all authority; to acknowledge Jesus Christ as the Ruler of Nations, and

"Crown Him LORD OF ALL."

To the end that all human laws may be made to conform to Divine Law, and that this nation may become declaratively and practically a Christian Nation.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The two houses of Congress were in session Wednesday about half an hour—just long enough to agree upon the amended resolution providing for an adjournment until January 5.

In reply to an inquiry from a resident of Kansas whether he could pre-empt land in Indian Territory, the Secretary of the Interior has written as follows: "There is no land within the boundaries of Indian Territory subject to settlement. Settlers who go into the Territory now will simply lose time and money."

A working model was placed on exhibition in the Senate naval committee-room, last week, of a portion of Captain Eads' proposed ship railway over the isthmus of Tehuantepec, sufficient to illustrate the manner in which it is proposed to lift ships out of the water and place them upon the car for transportation, and the means adopted to change the direction of the line of railroad without resorting to curves.

The Foreign Affairs committee has reported a bill to repay China the remainder of the Chinese indemnity fund now in possession of the State Department. The committee says: "It believes the wisest policy on the part of this government is to deal with transparent justice and even liberality in its intercourse with all nations, especially with those of another race and civilization."

COUNTRY.

The crew of the life-saving station at Cape Hatteras rescued the captain and crew of the barkentine Ephraim Williams, after having been lashed to the rigging five days without food or water. A gale was blowing all the time.

During a storm Monday of last week, with the temperature 13 below zero, the brig A. S. H. was wrecked off Sable Island. Three men were washed overboard and drowned, upon which the steward cut his throat and jumped into the surf. The captain and two men got onto a sand bar, but two of them were frozen to death and only one was rescued to tell the tale.

Forty mills are in operation at Fall River, Mass., and unusual friendliness prevails between the operatives and mill-owners. No strikes are contemplated, and the outlook for the future is said to be reassuring.

Peach buds and fruit trees have been killed, it is said, by the intense cold in in the Holland (Mich.) district. The mercury marked 30 below zero Friday morning.

The petrified bodeis of a man and a woman, which had been discovered in a gypsum quarry, were brought into Santa Marie, Cal., Monday evening, by two miners. They were found close together. except that a bowlder was wedged between them.

A sleigh containing nine persons was struck by a locomotive at a crossing near St. Paul, Thursday night. A man was killed and a woman fatally hurt, while all the rest of the party were badly injured.

An obstruction threw an express train on the New Orleans & Northeastern railroad from the track near Purvis, Miss., on Monday night. The fireman and engineer were killed and several passengers injured.

The Iowa Supreme Court has decided that a liquor firm must pay Schufeldt & Co., of Chicago, $5,000 for goods obtained on credit. The defense was the provisions of the liquor law, but the court held that the intoxicants had been purchased in Illinois.

U. S. Grant, jr., was examined in New York in regard to the failure of the firm of Grant & Ward. He said that he and his father lost nearly $500,000 in the transaction. To secure a loan of $150,000 advanced by Mr. Vanderbilt, General Grant pledged everything he called his own, even the gifts received on his European trip and the testimonial of thanks voted by Congress.

Charles Smith and Henry Davis, (negroes), convicted of burglary, were taken from their guards Tuesday night at Clayton, N. C., by masked men, who carried them to a river, where they were handcuffed, chained and thrown in. The bodies are still at the bottom of the stream.

On the 22d ult. an earthquake shock was felt at New Haven, Conn., followed by a tidal wave. Several schooners were sunk, and many vessels badly shaken and strained, but no lives are reported lost.

FOREIGN.

A St. Petersburg paper alleges that a complete organization of Russian Nihilists exists under the guise of an export firm within the precincts of the city of London, and is exporting to Russia criminal documents and explosives. The London Times correspondent says this confirms the already fixed conviction of a number of influential Russians, who presumably have the means of knowing, of the existence of such an organization.

Gen. Wolseley of the Soudan expedition reports that the delay in the concentration of troops at Korti will retard the maneuvers in the desert until the second week of February.

A Berlin correspondent says there is a secret convention between France and Germany, in accordance with which the former is allowed unlimited colonization in Morocco and Tonquin; and Germany, while respecting the French possessions in Africa, is at liberty to annex territory anywhere not affecting French interests.

Tasmania and Queensland have joined Victoria in a protest against the annexation by Germany of a portion of New Guinea and neighboring islands, but the authorities of New South Wales and South Australia have refused to join. The Australian press generally expresses indignation at the action of Germany.

A dispatch from Shanghai says that 85,000 Chinese troops under Li Hung Chang are massed at Pei-Ho. The works at Port Arthur, Gulf of Pe-Chi-Li, built by German artillery officers, make the strongest fortress in the north of China. The works are mounted with heavy Gatling and Nordenfeld guns. The entrance to the port is guarded with torpedoes. The Chinese have warned the French that they intend to make an attack.

The details of the disastrous earthquake throughout Spain are published by the government. Over fifty towns have been shaken up, many have been destroyed, and hundreds of lives lost. The loss on property cannot even be estimated yet, and is much greater than at first believed. Later details report 3,000 persons killed and many fatally injured.

BUSINESS.

PUBLISHERS' DEPARTMENT.

CORRECTION.—In the Cynosure of December 4th ult, Geo. Clark was credited with sending one dollar to John G. Fee. The credit should have been given to Lawrence R. Livingston.

SAMPLE COPIES of the Cynosure have been sent to quite a number of those who are leaders in their vicinity in this reform to assist them in canvassing for the paper.

Rev. G. L. Paine renews for another year, with the remark that "the Cynosure is priceless, in that money cannot compare in value with the light which it throws upon all subjects of a moral character. You may put me down as a life subscriber and then I want it to go to my children, and then to my grand-children."

An Ohio friend writes for books which will show Freemasonry to be a religion. His minister belongs to seven secret societies and proposes to discuss or defend his position publicly. He adds: "I will send in some more new subscribers soon." Put a Cynosure in every home, and the minister will soon leave his seven lodges of secretists.

A club of seven is received from D. Andrews, who writes: "I must say that I did not altogether like the course you took in polities, but I would like to get some new names for the Cynosure but am not able to get around much."

P. M. Carnahan hopes to get one or two new subscribers soon.

G. Brokaw is at work as usual, but finds some so mad that Blaine was not elected that they will not read the Cynosure. Time will show these good and patriotic men that the Cynosure took the right stand and then they will be among its warmest friends—so we expect.

Lewis Wood writes of his earnest efforts in canvassing for a club, and "I do not want to miss one paper."

If all who have it in their hearts to canvass for the Cynosure put it into action, the cause will receive a grand impetus this winter. John Gardner writes: "I have waited thinking I might get some new subscribers; think I shall soon."

W. B. Stoddard sends in nineteen, of which eighteen are new, and nine of these are trial subscriptions for eight weeks.

S. S. Martin sends in two for a year and eight for eight weeks.

H. W. Smith hopes to send in soon a list of names, which as regards its length, will be more worthy of notice than the list just received.

The efforts of friends for their Cynosure is an encouragement and stimulus to us in the office.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS.

There is hardly a feature of the Cynosure of which we are more proud than the list of contributors. They form a galaxy of brightness about the pole star of our reform. For clear perception, strong thinking, cogent reasoning, and courageous sentiments we believe the Cynosure writers equal, if they do not surpass, those of any cotemporary; and this is not boasting, but a calm statement of a very encouraging truth. Look over the pages of a year or so past and there are found such names as these, truly

The record of this list of writers is a guaranty of the future. Every one who has come into relation with them has been elevated and strengthened. What better companionship for the year 1885 can be asked?

The Scriptures will stand while the fortunes of the richest melt before their amazed eyes—"Riches certainly make themselves wings; they fly away." Mr. Vanderbilt with his $200,000,000 has been esteemed the wealthiest living man. Four years ago he had $50,000,000 invested in United States bonds. But it is now reported that his fortune has been "cut squarely in two." His children have lost him $15,000,000 within two years, and the railroad stocks which form the bulk of his property are shrunk to one-half their former value. If he has lost one-half his fortune in four years, may he not lose the rest in two?

In tracing up the story of the bribery of St. John, J. B. McCullagh, editor of the St. Louis Globe Democrat says he got it from J. S. Clarkson, the Iowa member of the National Republican committee. Now this same Clarkson told with much assurance that Post-master General Hatton defeated Blaine by an order to the New York office keeping 1,600 employees on duty, whose vote would have carried the State. It seems that Mr. Clarkson was much out of the way. Hatton gave no order, but suggested to the New York postmaster that the employees might be allowed time to vote. The Iowa member must have strained his mind with the labors of the campagn.

Andrew Carnegie is a man with his millions, and one of the proprietors of the Edgar Thompson Steel Works in Pittsburgh, one of the largest rolling mills in the country, and other establishments of the kind. He is evidently a man of sensations. Last summer he was buying London dailies and throwing our English cousins into consternation with his Yankee audaeity. The other day he announced himself as a Socialist, and affirms his belief that the millennium will come when the principles of that faction prevail. At the same time his great mills are shutting down and throwing hundreds of men out of work. When asked if he was ready to divide his immense gains with the men who had helped make them he refused to be so accommodating. There is one kind of socialism to which Mr. Carnegie would do well to become a disciple. The doctrine of the early Christian church, "One is your Master . . . . all ye are brethren," is the great, the only true socialism. "Le grand Democrat," Napoleon said of Christ. He was the great Leveler; but his level, though it is the highest, is reached only by the way of self-denial and humility. If Mr. Carnegie is this kind of a Socialist, the world has need of him. But let him remember the young man whom Jesus loved, yet who was unwilling to give his property to the poor, not even for the companionship of the Son of God!

We fear the workingmen need to fear Mr. Carnegie's socialism. His steel works at Homestead, Pa., have posted a notice that the wages of the men will be reduced from 10 to 33 per cent. But this reduction effects only one-half the thousand men employed—and why? The rest belong to the secret lodge of the Amalgamated Iron-workers Association, and their wages will not be touched! What age of the world do we live in, that winks at such shameful injustice!

The great Irish National League of America, which was organized with such eclat two years ago, with a murderer for its chief officer, has "gone West to grow up with the country." Its head quarters have followed the fortunes of its presidents and are now located with Mr. Patrick Egan, in Lincoln, Nebraska. The collapse of this organization, which once filled the columns of the press is akin to a judgment upon its reckless disregard of the condemnation of God against the man who sheds a brother's blood. It has now come down to the paltry methods of the lodge, issung cards to members to serve as a fraternity passport to brother leaguers.

Any word from the hero Gordon, cooped up in Khartoum, is welcomed by all who admire self-abnegation and personal bravery. He has got a note through to Gen. Wolseley of the relief expedition. It is said that it did not cover an inch square of paper, was rolled up about the size of a pin, and was sewed in the seam of one of the messenger's garments. The Mahdi's force is estimated as from twenty thousand to eighty thousand men. The Khartoum garrison is able to hold out. Gen. Gordon spends his nights in ceaseless watch, visiting the outposts to see that every sentry is on the alert. He has two palaces, with a gun mounted on each. He always examines these guns at daybreak, in order that he may assure himself that they are properly primed and ready for action. He then lies down and sleeps during the greater part of the day. In the midst of his perilous surroundings Gordon is described as in cheerful spirits. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee, because he trusteth in thee."

Mr. Moody began his first meeting in the South on Sabbath morning in Richmond, Virginia. Two weeks ago the churches of the city which were preparing for the visit were thrown into consternation by a card from a prominent citizen charging that Mr. Moody, while holding meetings in New York in April, 1876, went out of his way to make a personal attack upon the rebel generals, Lee and Jackson, at the same time clothing Gen. Grant with "all the grandeur of a god" making him "his ideal representative of Christ." Without taking the pains to examine the verbatim reports of the meetings in the New York Hippodrome the good people of Richmond were fearful that charges of so particular a nature might be true, and not until within a few days did the papers refute them. They seem to have come from the dregs of that old Southern spirit which should have died with slavery, which stopped with insane prejudices the course of Charles Dickens, Kossuth and Lafayette, years ago while attempting a public visitation of the South. Mr. Moody wisely paid little attention to the slanders, and the meetings last Sabbath began hopefully and are, under God, likely to be a great blessing to Richmond.

The Nicaragua canal treaty will soon be before the Senate, and the debate with be a long one. Commodore Ammen and Engineer Menocal who have been most interested, may have been too sanguine in their estimate of expenses. An engineer of the War Department who has been over the ground, says there must be two harbors constructed, costing ten or twelve millions, and other difficulties have been lightly estimated. The Navy Department will look over the route also, and as there are two years to conclude the treaty, we can afford to be slow and sure. As for the national spirit manifested in the connection with the treaty, it appears to be strong in both parties. But the universal thought is the preparation for war which is regarded as a necessary part of the enterprise. As a prominent naval officer is reported as saying: "The President has put us into deep water before we knew it. If we fail to ratify this treaty all Europe will understand that we were simply afraid to do it, and a pleasant position that would be. If we do ratify it, then we must get ready to maintain our pretensions in the Carribean Sea by something more than talk. This will necessitate a modern fleet and at least two modern forts armed with the best guns that can be made. When the war closed our fleet and guns were equal in efficiency to those of any power in Europe, and now we are a laughing stock for them. I declare to you that I have hung my head in chagrin and shame to hear the comments of English officers on our ships and guns, perfectly merited observations, too, made when they did not imagine I was in ear-shot. The reasons why I favor the treaty are very easily given, and they are these: It is time for us to assert some distinctively American policy. It is time we either bring our navy up to a reasonable state of efficiency or wiped it out. As it stands to-day it is a disgrace to a great nation's legislature. There are no better trained or braver officers in the world than ours, who are well-nigh disheartened. Any change will be for the better." That warlike preparation is a necessary accompaniment to such a treaty is a conclusion unworthy the statesmanship which should prevail at this age of the world. Let Mr. Blaine's proposition for international arbitration supplant such folly.

THE CONVENTION NEEDED.

BY REV. ISAAC HYATT.

The past year has been marked for its conventions. Some were characterized by wisdom and good-will toward man; others by folly and a selfish spirit, that hindered rather than advanced the reformation of society. The more we have of the former kind during this year the better. For "in the multitude of counselors there is safety," and "where no counsel is the people fall." And in this year of grace, among the conventions needed is one to learn the Lord's way to renounce Freemasonry.

It is very evident that among those who are agreed it ought to be renounced, there is a difference of opinion as to how it should be done. And this difference of opinion not only shows the existence of error in our ranks that ought to be removed, but it greatly hinders the progress of our reform.

There is a divine way to do everything, and no one is crowned who does not do his work in that way. Likewise all our efforts to twist or wink at any of the laws of God hinder the success of our best endeavors. Especially in our undertaking to root up a tree of iniquity so strong and deeply rooted in the selfish interests of our fellow-men as Freemasonry, we need to be very careful to teach and do according to the pattern given us in the Bible.

The Lord has a way to renounce Freemasonry, and the quicker we conform to his way in all our doings the sooner we shall see it overthrown.

Who shall tell us how to do it? Reasonably at this time the call is to men of learning, good judgment and undoubted piety, who have never been inside a Masonic lodge. Whether right or wrong, a sufficient number of reliable men, compelled by their convictions as to what they thought to be right, have turned the lodge inside out. And men of learning, good judgment and piety, cannot only decide as to its character and claims, but as to the Christian way to renounce it. And unto you, O men, we call for light.

Our call is imperative. It cannot pass unheeded with impunity. For if these men have erred in exposing Masonry it ought to be known, so that others shall be warned against following their example. And if they have acted as the Bible teaches they ought to be sustained, that others may be encouraged to do as they have done.

It may be possible that the best of men, after having been caught in the meshes of a Masonic oath, may be disqualified in a measure to give directions to others on account of the bias given to their judgment because of the intense mental sufferings they have passed through.

But it is the height of folly to assume that men of superior learning and devout piety, after having taken proper measures to learn the Lord's way to renounce Masonry, should be left in doubt in regard to it.

Then let a convention be called where, after the good, wise and devout have deliberated, they can tell the people in such a clear and convincing way what ought to be done that all who are minded to learn the Lord's will may be of one mind and heart as to the right way to renounce Freemasonry.

THE CITADEL.

BY S. C. KIMBALL.

The somewhat startling announcement was made in a recent number of the Cynosure that the citadel of the lodge power was in New England, and if that could be carried, victory would soon perch upon the banner of reform. It reminded me of a bitter exclamation made by a prominent Democratic politician at Albany, just as the late civil war was breaking out: "New England should be expelled from the Union; THERE ARE NO REPUBLICANS OUTSIDE OF NEW ENGLAND." At that time New England men were well sampled at Albany as editors, soldiers, lawyers and preachers. Dr. Mark Trafton, a son of Massachusetts, with matchless eloquence pled for liberty and union. Dr. E. L. Magoon, a native of New Hampshire, an exile from Virginia, a gray-headed martyr to free speech, his pulpit draped with the Star-spangled banner, with outstretched hands and prophetic mien, blessed the loyal and true, and cursed the Southern traitor and Northern copperhead.

But I am digressing from my theme, which is to concur with the Cynosure in suggesting the importance of the New England field for reform work. Our Western brethren are justly impatient with New England conservatism. That is our infirmity, but it has this compensation, when the current does set right it has the power of a Merrimack to turn the moral wheel. And then, the New England churches, how slow! Nine-tenths of the membership of the New England churches were opposed to slavery, yet because they tarried so long to convince that tenth, many Abolitionists threw away their Bibles and cursed the church as the responsible bulwark of slavery. But when the cause required blood not words, the first became last, and the last first.

It is so in the anti-lodge reform. As a body the church and ministry are opposed to Freemasonry. Not a tenth part of the ministry and membership adhere to the Masonic lodge. From the issue of Pres. Finney's book, followed by the organization of the N. C. A. there has been a great awakening in opposition to the lodge evil that sneaked into the church while honest men were grappling with rebellion. To exorcise this secret devil, that has interwoven his multifarious limbs in the warp and woof of every phase of society, requires something more than that a logical essay should be read by a polished orator from the summit of Mt. Tom, or the Camel's Hump.

If New England is the lodge citadel, there is a multitude anxious to aid hauling in the Trojan horse. "There was a long war between the house of Saul and the house of David: but David waxed stronger and stronger, and the house of Saul waxed weaker and weaker." There is an Anti-masonic fire kindled in New England that by the blessing of God will never cease till the last vestige of lodge idolatry within the church shall be utterly consumed.

PRINCIPLE OR EXPEDIENCY—WHICH?

BY REV. W. J. WHITE.

It seems very much to be regretted, in view of our recent National election in its relation to prohibition, that so many good men adopted expediency in place of Christian principle to promote the cause of temperance.

Expediency, as defined by Webster, is the "quality of aiming at selfish or inferior good at the expense of that which is higher; self-interest; self-seeking; often opposed to moral rectitude." Expediency has many illustrations both in sacred and secular history. The Bible gives us many instructive lessons on this subject, but in none of them does it apper that success, or the Divine approbation, ever attended mere human devices when substituted in place of obedience to the plain commands of God. It is never allowable to say, "Let us do evil that good may come." Or that the end, if good and desirable, will sanctify the means, though they be wicked and lawless. God loves his own truth and his own laws too well, to see them set aside by the wisdom of his creatures.

Our dealing with American slavery is proof of this. We were thoroughly convinced as a people that slavery was a great wrong to the slave, and a curse upon the Nation. We at first resorted to the colonization scheme as a method of easing the national conscience. But it was found out after awhile that the evil was too deeply seated to be removed by such a superficial remedy. The voice of God was, "Let my people go;" and "Break the yoke of the oppressor." But we replied that according to our National compact, we had no right to intefere with State rights. War came; but we still held to the compact; we will fight for the Union, but not for justice and mercy to the enslaved. This would not be expedient. Man's wisdom triumphs for a time: but that "Power above us that shapes our ends" frustrates our plans and holds us in horrible suspense until we learn through much suffering that the best expediency for man is to comply with the commands of God. When we proclaimed liberty to the oppressed, then, under a righteous Providence, the scales were turned in our favor.

The temperance cause in our country, it seems to me, is greatly hindered by this old conflict between man's wisdom, or expediency, and the wisdom of God, or strict obedience to his commands.

Earnest temperance men were required to uphold the Republican party, while it gave no encouragement to assist prohibition. If in favor of prohibition, yet as a matter of prudence or expediency it was not deemed safe to say so; lest by losing voters they should not elect their candidate. The Prohibitionist declared his object in clear language. "He hung his banner on the outer wall." It meant the suppression of the whole business of the death-dealing work of the liquor seller, upon men, women and children throughout the land. This object could not be mistaken. There were good and sufficient reasons for its defense, and of which no one need be ashamed. Then why not say so in all proper and possible ways? If it is right to preach and pray against the crimes and vices of the liquor traffic, why not vote and legislate in the same direction, as against all other gross crimes, such as murder and arson? We put the sale of gun-powder and dangerous explosives under the restriction of license, for the safety and general good of the public. As honest Christian men, ought we not to be as zealous to guard against and prevent those evils of strong drink which lie at the foundation of religion and morals, of health and property, as against the lesser evils of dangerous explosives?

There is much prejudice against the faithful workers for Christ and suffering humanity, especially in relation to politics. You may be undisturbed, if you will keep your religion within your church boundaries, but if you have any conscience in the matter of voting, you are treading on dangerous ground if you do not go with the multitude of some one of the popular parties.

But, whoever you are, my dear brother or sister in Christ, who have the martyr spirit to endure and suffer in defense of all that is true and right, remember that God has a peculiar love and regard for the faithful workers in these perilous times. God said by the prophet Jeremiah, when rebuking his people, "They are not valiant for the truth upon the earth." We will not boast of our fidelity, yet we will ask in modest language, Who is the truly valiant man of to-day, in our country? Is he the man of party expediency, or the man who in the face of persecution and contempt stands firm, and always by a divine principle?

> "What conscience tells me I should do,
> Or says, should not he done,
> This would I more than Heaven pursue,
> That more than Hell I'd shun."

I know it does not seem to pay very well in such a world as this, to stand firmly by a despised and persecuted cause. Our poor, weak natures cringe and tremble when met by the opposing forces of evil, and many are ready to say, "It is of no use to withstand them." This is the voice of unbelief through all the ages: yet let it not be ours, if we are looking for a heavenly reward.

Worcester, Mass.

"THE BEST BROTHERHOOD."

Under this head "Obadiah Oldschool" tells us in the Interior of a friend he has who is a Freemason, an Odd-fellow and a great traveler. His friend tells him that he has enjoyed many advantages, especially from his connection with the Masons while traveling. In all lands he has found friends and helpers because of his identification with this brotherhood. "Obadiah" is willing to admit these advantages, but points his friend to another and better brotherhood and "lodge" as follows:

"You are going in a few years upon a longer journey than any you have undertaken hitherto. You will visit a stranger country than any on the earth. You may find in it many Masons and Odd-fellows, but they will not meet in lodges or give and receive the countersigns with which you are familiar. You will see over there the walls of the noblest city you ever beheld. If you knock at one of its gates of pearl, and seek admission, they will not ask what secret society you belonged to among men, but whether you belonged to the holy brotherhood whose lodge that city is. Unless you can say 'Jesus Christ' as only a saint can say it; unless you can show the white robe that the Grand Master gives to his invited guests; unless you possess the white stone with the new name written, known only to him who receiveth it (Rev. 2: 17), you can no more enter there than you can enter your lodges now without the password. I tell you there is no society that can at all compare with the Church of Christ. As a Mason or an Odd-fellow you may have friends while you live and a grand funeral when you die. But it is only as a Christian that you can receive a love-welcome to heaven. Ours is a brotherhood for time and eternity. We belong to a family that is partly in heaven and partly on the earth. When we die we go, not out of doors or away among strangers, but only from the ante chamber to the inner chamber of our Father's house."

You did well, "Obadiah," in saying that to your friend—only it is doubtful about the propriety of your referring to heaven as a "lodge," and to Christ as the "Grand Master." You might have said to him, and we think you ought to have said to him, that in order to enjoy the advantages which he claims are connected with those "brotherhoods," he had to do many things that are terribly sinful. For instance he had to bind himself by fearful oaths to keep the secrets of those orders before he knew what they were. He thus violated God's ordinance of the oath, and put his own conscience in jeopardy. He also bound himself by solemn oath to exclude all reference to the work of Christ, and even the very name of Christ from the religious services of the lodges. Moreover, he bound himself to a brotherhood that acknowledges that being supreme who is the god of the country in which the lodge is situated. He is a member of a brotherhood which claims to have a religion that will bring all its members to the "grand lodge above," or to eternal happiness, and it does this as a mere Deism, without any reference to, or even any knowledge of, Christ as the Saviour! We think you would have been more faithful, and would have made your friend more thoughtful if you had solemnly told him these things in addition to what you well said to him. We advise you to see him again and have another conversation with him.—Christian Instructor.

PAGAN RITES REVIVING.

If any thing was needed to relate Freemasonry to ancient Paganism, it was furnished a few weeks ago in King Solomon's Hall in the Masonic Temple when twenty-four boys and six girls went through the ceremony of a Masonic christening. To shorten the ceremouy twenty-nine were christened by proxy—one boy being christened for all the rest—as to that matter, however, all the children might have remained at home, snug in bed, and a brass candlestick could have been christened for them all—it would have been quite as well for the children. But how about the ceremony? The San Francisco Chronicle gives it thus:

"A prayer by Rossini followed, being rendered by Miss Ellen Coursen, Miss Rose Coursen, Senora Victorine Carenza, M. Charles Pechin and chorus. The Worshipful Master then addressed the godfathers and godmothers, reminding them of the responsibility of their charge, and closed with a prayer for the children, which was responded to by the lodge and choir.

"The cleansiug fire was then lighted iu the urn and salt was distributed on the food prepared, being symbolical of purifying the soul of its sins and giving the hospitality of the lodge to the children. A prayer by Gounod was next sung by Mme. Salomon, accompanied on the violincello by Senor Solano.

"The godfathers and godmothers then took the pledge of fidelity to the children. The participauts advanced to the altar and partook of wiue. Considerable merriment was caused by some of the children, who evidently were afraid of the flames that issued from the flambeau. All having partaken of the hospitality of the lodge, they returned to their seats. As it would take too long to christen each child separately, a young boy named Charles Raas was selected and underwent the ceremouial for the remainder. They drank the wine offered, to give them streugth to oppose all temptation. The level was then applied to the boy's head, the triangle to his breast and oil was poured upon his hair. The sacred fire was again lighted to cleanse his soul and the oath of fidelity was taken by the godparents. The salt was next administered, being symbolical of hospitality."

Look at this scene a moment. Prayers were sung and fiddled; wine was given to afford strength to resist temptation. If California is a true witness, wine affords no such strength. Some one will say this wine was symbolic wine. Symbolic of what? There is no mention of Christ! or his Holy Spirit. "The sacred fire was lighted to cleause the soul." It should be remembered that no religion from God ever used fire for cleansing the heart or as a symbol of cleansing. Heathenism uses fire; God uses blood. In God's religion fire symbolizes a sinuer's doom in Gehenna; but "the sprinkling of blood" symbolizes the blood of Jesus Christ which cleanses from all sin. It would appear from this ceremony that Masonry not only is a religion, but claims to be a sin-cleansing religion, and that, without Christ. What ceremonies are these for the followers of Christ to be mixed up with! When will the lambs of Jesus' fold cease to be enticed and charmed by the tinkling tinselry of imposing rites descended from Paganism rather than from God? Come out, come out; "Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord."—Pacific Missionary Advocate.

SABBATH AND THE WORKINGMEN.

The views of Pierre Joseph Proudhon, the celebrated French socialist and radical speculator in political subjects whose career was at its height during the revolution of 1848, upon the necessity of the Sabbath rest will be read with deep interest. The passage below occurs iu an article iu his Protestant journal, by Eugene Reveillaud, the remarkable youug barrister whose writings some five years ago in favor of Protestantism as a necessity for the preservation of society, attracted world-wide attenion. "We could exhibit," says Reveillaud, "with the socialist Proudhon, the mathematician La Place, the historian Macaulay, the traveler Humboldt, the naturalist Darwin, and hundreds of others whose very names would be astonished at finding themselves together, agreeing with Moses and Jesus Christ," to proclaim the authority of the Sabbath law over the natural relatious of the human race. He goes on to quote Proudhon at length:

"Proudhon, whom no one can accuse of giving way to mystical or superstitious influences, foresaw and exactly predicted the danger, supposing (God forbid the augury) the Sunday totally effaced from the reckoning of our days, and the spirit of cupidity and of materialism free to follow its career without conflict and continuously. 'Hear,' says he to workmen of plains and cities, 'what will come. The sun will shine no more and no less on the soil upon which you live; the shower and the light breezes will refresh your fields and your meadows as now; your trees will not be less productive, your vines no less fruitful; hail, inundation and fire will not desolate country or town more than formerly; the elements will not become your executioners. But, opulence and misery, inseparable companions, will grow in an endless proportion; the large proprietor will swallow up everything, the ruined peasant will sell his heritage; and when there shall no longer be anything but owners and farmers, lords and serfs, the first will give to the second clothing, lodgment, and bread, and will say to them, See how happy you are! What is this but liberty? In that time useless talents and luxurious arts will be recompensed extravagantly. The ignorance and brutality of the proletariat will have reached their depth. The people, who always follow the example of the powerful, having lost respect for and faith in the ancieut religion, will traverse all the degrees of materialistic and pantheistic superstition, aud when well persuaded that everything is God will return to the fetiches and the manitous: they will adore, as formerly, wood and stone, and the rich, under the pretext of utility and of tolerance, will protect the new worship, saying, A religion, you know, is neeessary for the people! However, there will arise sometime, certain lofty souls, men who will refuse to uncover their brows before the golden calf; these will enter into controversy with the favorites of fortune. How are you so rich and we so poor? We have worked, the rich will answer, we have saved, we have gained! But we too have worked as much as you, why do we acquire nothing! You answer by iuvoking possession, transmission and prescriptive right. Well, then, they answer, we will appeal to force! Proprietors, defend yourselves! Then there will be engagements and massacres. And that will endure until God shall have pity on you.'

"Let us make allowance, if you wish, for the temperament of the writer. But let us remember the grave, I might say the solemn, siguificance of these words which come from the tomb. It is not properly a question of religion, but above all of humanity. All who have made a thorough study of the subject, physicians, economists, scholars, statesmen, whether Christian or only philanthropic, have met here upon the territory of a common conviction."

A prominent chemist of Elmira, New York, has given the result of recent investigations to the world, as to the proportion of opium found in a dozen packages of the highest priced cigarettes in the market. These he sent to a Pittsburg chemist for analysis. He says, "The considerable quantity of opium found in all the standard brands is astounding. The universally recognized bondage resulting from the use of opium in any form or degree, especially by smoking or absorption, renders the murderous design of the admixture and the sharp lesson to be learned, terribly plain."

—Thanks are due to some readers of the Cynosure who are sendiug in lists of the secret orders. Occasionally there can be found some sketch of a new order or facts that would help to make up a brief history; please send in anything of this kind also.

—God has a hook in every bad man's nose, whether it be Nebuchadnezzar, or Ahab or Herod. He may think himself very independent, but sometime in his life or in the hour of his death, he will find that the Lord Almighty has a hook in his nose.—Talmage.

—Rev. George Richey of Pataskala, Ohio, once lecturer for the State Association, has lately written a tract vindicating the law of the Wesleyan church against secret lodges.

Prof. C. Gilbert Wheeler, one of the most skillful chemists of this city, says that he does not know of the drug in medicine which cannot be prepared for use as well without alcohol as with it.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS:

OR

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR.

BY E. E. FLAGG, AUTHOR OF "HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

CHAPTER VII.—Continued.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has come to be a recognized power. Politicians may coolly ignore its inconvenient requests and snub the petitioners. None the less do they tremble before the oncoming tread of the Divine Deliverer who has sent before his face these silver-tongued messengers, saying to the haughty Pharaoh of the liquor traffic, "Let my people go that they may serve me." With their simple weapons of faith and prayer they have wrought miracles. We of this present century cannot estimate the full scope and power of the movement. We are too near; but the coming generations will see it as it really is, in many respects the grandest, the most unique of all those moral and spiritual revolutions that have stirred modern Christendom.

Nelson knew that a band of white-ribbon workers had been organized in Jacksonville to meet the approaching crisis, for so Martha had informed him, adding with a smile and an arch shake of her finger, "You men will find out after awhile that you can't get along without us women. Polities have got into the muddle they are in now by a law of nature, just as a house will get to be dust and cobwebs from top to bottom when there are no women to wield the broom and the scrubbing-brush."

"Well, Martha, God knows I would be willing to have the women vote if they could help us get rid of this rum curse; but as things are I don't really see how they are going to accomplish much."

"We can pray."

The words leaped from Martha's lips like an inspiration—so suddenly that Nelson felt for a moment as if a supernatural voice had spoken. Was there not such a thing as a divine lever "which moves the hand that moves the world?" and was there not a bare possibility that the weakest woman laying hold of God's eternal strength was mightier than he, "the sovereign citizen" at the ballot-box? Nelson believed in prayer, but the atmosphere of the workshop had covered his faith with a coating of something a little more like skepticism than he would have been willing to own. If he could have accompauied Martha, as the reader is privileged to do, that gray, foggy November morning into the vestry of the First Presbyterian church in Jacksonville, he might have had his faith strengthened, and even discerned a gleam of light in the political horizon, cloudy as it appeared.

The little throng before us, composed entirely of the non-voting sex, who, perhaps for the very reason that they are excluded from expressing their convictions at the ballot-box speak them all the more eloquently and freely in the ears of Infinite Justice, contains a few faces that are a study—sweet with the pathos of a nameless endurance, beautiful with those fine heroic lines that only start out under the chisel of a life-long sorrow. Yonder, for instance, sits one who for ten wretched years felt the iron of a great legalized wrong enter into her soul; but, womanlike, all her sorrow was swallowed up in joy when her husband, a man of education and brilliant talents, reformed and even began to win some reputation as a popular temperance lecturer. But oue night he failed to meet his engagement; was missiug forty-eight hours, and then brought home dying. King Alcohol had recaptured and this time slain his victim; but it was in a properly-liceused saloon, and with liquor that had paid its lawful share of the government tax, and what could be said except that it was all legal and constitutional? Ouly this woman believed like poor Chloe, when her husband was sold South to die under the slave-whip, that "thar was suthin' wrong about it somewhar;" and singularly enough it did not reconcile her in the least to know that the price of his blood had added a few cents less or more to the nation's treasury.

And here sits a noble-looking woman clad in Quaker gray, with shining silver curls framing a dear, motherly face as bright and peaceful as the new moon when it rises over the hill-tops on a summer night. Yet hers had been a trial by fire. This Christian mother had one son whom she taught to say, "Our Father," and "Now I lay me down to sleep," morning and night; whose tottering steps she guided to the house of God, and into whose young mind she labored to instill all right and pure and holy principles. But, alas! the drink taint was in his blood and he fell—fell into a deeper abyss of degradation and ruiu for those sun-crowned heights where a mother's love had placed him. He rests to-day in a drunkard's grave. It is all over—the long, midnight vigils, the tears, the agonies of prayer. She has been robbed of her boy, and the liquor traffic under the shield of law has done it.

Near by sits another who has suffered cold and hunger and abuse, yet through it all has clung to her drunken brute of a husband instead of taking the advice of friends who urge a legal separation; for after all there are times when the brute is a man, when the light of the old affection is in his eyes, and he weeps over the past and makes all kinds of vows for the future—and she? well, she half believes him, knowing all the while they are vows written on the shifting sand. Of course she is a fool, but haven't you, dear lady, who "wouldn't for the world live with a drunken husband and don't think it is any woman's duty to," read somewhere of a divine foolishness that confounds all earthly wisdom? In spite of the doctrine zealously advocated by many of the political prophets of our day, that "prohibition don't prohibit," this woman labors under the singular delusion that her husband would not drink if there were no saloons. And so she has come here to-day ready to add her mite of prayer and effort, though not the weight of a finger may she or her sister sufferers lay on that only lever which can move law and law-makers out of the ruts of legalized evil—the ballot-box.

Others there are from comfortable and happy, even luxurious homes, large-hearted, refined, noble Christian women who have heard, over all the demands of pleasure and fashion, the bugle call of duty, and sprung to answer it with no half-hearted zeal—women that are known in their respective social circles as prudent managers, careful mothers, and faithful wives. But we need not spend more time in introductions. This is the Jacksonville branch of the W. C. T. U., who having, as we hinted in the last chapter, a plan of their own for election day, are here met to spend a few brief moments in prayer before the opening of the polls will leave them free to put it in execution.

Meanwhile we are not unconscious of a host of grumblers and objectors at our elbow. "I don't hold to such things," remarks very decidedly a gentleman on our right. "I don't believe in a woman's neglecting her husband and children to go gallivanting round the country holding temperance conventions."

We notice that the gentleman wears the three links of the I. O. O. F. conspicuously displayed on his watch-chain, and a little bird of the air takes occasion to whisper in our ear that his invalid wife is left to long evenings of uncheered solitude while her husband is at the lodge, generally detained to a late hour on important business.

But let us hear Mrs. Orderly.

"At this hour in the morning these women ought to find enough to do at home. A pretty plight their kitchen must be in!"

Not so fast, my dear madam. Did you never at the call of pleasure or duty leave your own domestic establishment to run itself for a day, secure in the thought that every necessary preparation had been made and every needful direction been given the night before? All this a woman may do to go to a picnic; but reform work, especially if it trenches on the forbidden realm of politics—oh, that is another thing.

But these women of the W. C. T. U. are actually preparing to go to the polls and persistently urge every voter, seconding their persuasions by cups of the most excellent tea and coffee, to vote for "no license." And strong in their faith and courage they are willing to even encounter the tide of profanity and tobacco-spitting at the ballot-box from which the respectable, easy-going male citizen is so apt to shrink back into his comfortable home privacy, feebly crying, "Have me excused." These women are not partisans nor politicians, yet all their labors and prayers and hopes are with the minority that from a feeble beginning have risen to hold the balance of power between the two contending factions that are now bidding for the vote of the saloons; and by interviewing local candidates and pressing the claims of prohibition on young or doubtful voters they have done work in a quiet way which will tell in the election returns. They mean to have Jacksonville a no-license town, and at the same time they are painfully aware—for some of these good women have sons—how inadequate is local option to the real needs of the case.

"For my part I think mothers would do more to stop intemperance by staying at home and training their children," says a voice at our left; and as a general chorus of "amens" follows this view of the subject, which is really the most sensible objection that has thus far been made, we will stop to consider it at length.

Would it satisfy a mother, who knew that a panther was ranging over the country, to procure a work on zoology, and gathering her children about her show them from the pictures how a panther looks? Would she consider it enough to give them a familiar description of its haunts and habits, and warn them to be careful when they went berrying to keep a sharp lookout for its gleaming eyes, its stealthy tread, its cruel spring? Would she not, rather, if she had a true mother's heart in her bosom, shoulder a good trusty gun—if there was no one else to do it—and attempt herself the death of the monster?

These women of the W. C. T. U. have prayed and petitioned the various State legislatures of our land to incorporate temperance instruction among public school studies, which proves that they at least believe in letting the children know how the panther looks; and allow us to respectfully suggest that while such petitions are so frequently tabled, or referred to apocryphal "committees," the advice has an appearance of inconsistency. What wonder that when our wisest statesmen can think of no better way of dealing with the liquor traffic than to throw over it the sacred shadow of law by perpetuating it as a source of national revenue, mothers are beginning to think that stronger measures are necessary than simply to stay at home and tell their children to keep out of the clutches of the monster?

REFORM NEWS.

WISCONSIN STATE CONVENTION.

A brief notice of the convention to occur, D. V., at Milton, Wis., on the 13th, 14th and 15th inst. has appeared. I hope friends are preparing to attend, and that there will be the largest and most enthusiastic gathering ever held in the State on the anti-secrecy reform. I have arranged to attend the meetings, and will do all possible to aid in perfecting the organization of the work and rendering the meetings interesting and profitable. The place is convenient of access, and the time of year especially favorable for farmers. Bro. Bancroft is on the ground furnished with bills, and reports a good local interest. Let friends throughout the State rally and show to our friends at Milton and everywhere that they are in earnest, and intend to push on to victory.

J. P. STODDARD, Sec. N. C. A.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

UTICA, O., DEC. 25th, 1884.—A small but very intelligent audience listened attentively to what I had to say about the Secret Empire on the evening of the 23d. Notice had not been circulated very extensively, and many did not know of the lecture until the following day. A few names have been added to the list of our readers, and I have had the pleasure of personal conference with some of the choice young men of the place. Bro. Lyon took me to his home. I was much refreshed by the hospitality and cordial Godspeed of this pious family. May the Lord reward them. Bro. Lyon is earnest and practical in his views and efforts to improve the state of society. Like others with whom I have conferred, he feels that Ohio is lagging in this conflict. He votes for a revival and says, "If you put a good man in this field, you may put me down $10 per month for one year, towards his support." Brethren in Ohio, what do you say to this proposition? Some who talk and teach Anti-masonry are able to duplicate this liberal offer, and others can give smaller sums. Is not this an indication that God wants you to "Go forward?" "The Lord said unto Moses, Wherefore criest thou unto me? Speak unto the children of Israel that they GO FORWARD." Bro. Lyon echoes the indications of God's providence and voices the sentiment of many when he speaks to the Anti-masons of Ohio, that they "go forward." Who among you will "splice glad hands" with this man of faith and respond, "Here am I," and that portion of my substance which the Master demands for this work? Bro. Evans of Shade, has already responded in behalf of the more than one hundred like-minded in his township. He is first on the roll; who will be next?

Our venerable friend. Dr. J. A. Bingham, is kindly remembered by some of the elders in this community, and the third party has a few friends, but most of the old time Abolitionist Anti-masons and prohibitionists are feeling very much disturbed over the Democratic National victory. Should the incoming administration prove only moderately successful and fair it will do very much to take off the edge and soften the feeling of old-line Republicans.

MANSFIELD, O., DEC. 26, 1884.

If it was the "chief end" of my wanderings to enjoy the Christian hospitality of persons "of like precious faith," my brief stay at Utica would be a decided success. All was not accomplished that I had hoped, but one lecture, a number of calls, five subscribers obtained for the Cynosure, together with liberal pledges in support of a State lecture, may prepare the way for future and more successful efforts. Times and seasons were not propitious. Annual "high-mass" of which "Santa Claus" is the presiding genius was celebrated in the Presbyterian church on "Christmas" eve; and the G. A. R. post, under the extended wings of the battle bird of freedom, charged on the domestic fowls of that region, giving to "Poor Uncle Sam" and the widows and orphans of deceased comrades the benefit of every "goose" voluntcering to be plucked for the occasion. The engagement, though protracted, is supposed to have resulted in victory, as mirth and gladness answered each to the other in echo on the field of carnage.

"High mass" and the "shock of battle" so distracted the thought, and absorbed the popular interest that meetings could be held with only indifferent success, and so I departed and am waiting here for a train to Ontario, hoping there to meet friends, and renew the conflict under circumstances more favorable.

MASSILON, O., DEC. 27.—Between trains, calling on Rev. S. A. George of Mansfield, I found in him the "inspiration of work." He has been much occupied with the erection of a house of worship, now well nigh completed, and soon to be dedicated. It is a gem as seen from the outside, and I conceive the interior to be in equal taste. A two hours' conference resulted in an agreement on a plan which, as secretary of the State Association, he will submit to the brethren. The programme will include a State Convention in March next; the revival of suspended energies; the appointment of one or more lecturers to devote their whole time to the work; and it will ask the friends to pledge quarterly contributions to sustain those workers. Caleb Lyon pledges ten dollars per month for one year, which is a "grand send off," and others are "falling into line." Bro. George will do his best to "thaw out" the reform in Ohio. But don't wait for him to send you a circular and personal appeal. Spare the good man's time, and save postage to the cause, by sending in your pledges at once. Let there be $1,200 pledged before the convention so that "an A, No. 1 man," can be put in the field, and as many co-workers employed as the funds will justify.

BOLIVIAR, O., DEC. 29.—On my arrival Saturday, at 6:30 p. m., I found appointments made in anticipation of my coming, and preached to a small audience in the M. E. church. On Sabbath morning Bro. Weaver, of the Lutheran church gave me an audience in his large and well-filled auditorium and otherwise showed me much kindness. Sabbath evening was given to the subject of temperance, and on request of the president of the W. C. T. U., I presented the claims of prohibition for an hour and a half. There was but little vacant space in the room, and the attention was all that a speaker could ask. Some of the Republicans, as I have since learned, considered my position inpracticably radical, but gave strict attention if not earnest heed to the things spoken. The announcement of a lecture this evening on the lodge created a little flurry among the brethren who are quite numerous and said to be "roping in" many of the choice young men in this region.

DEPOT, A. M. DEC. 30.—Last evening's audience was unexpectedly large, considering the weather and the condition of the roads. Several came forward and greeted me kindly at the close, and I leave for other fields with none but pleasant memories.

For brother and sister Yant it is sufficient to say that, had I been an only and beloved son returning after long absence, their care for my comfort and attention to every want could not have been more constant and hearty. Bro. Yant's is one of those minds that revolves on its own axis, and he has the happy faculty of standing firm; voting and working for St. John, and retaining the approbation of all his neighbors who do not sacrifice common sense on the altar of lodge or party worship. God bless the household of Bro. David Yant.

Inclination clamors for a "little season" with good Dr. Bingham, and those of cherished memory on the "Reserve." Was duty ever irksome, it would not in this instance be easy to forego the pleasure of a call at Mallat Creek, but since denial of self is God's appointed path to reward and blessing I must resist the temptation. J. P. STODDARD.

REFORM WORK IN NEW ENGLAND.

The tentative programme for General Agent Stoddard's New England campaign is as follows: Last week in January, in Connecticut, Bro. Stoddard to worship with the brethren at Willimantic, Lord's day, January 25th, and to commence work at that point under the direction of Bro. J. A. Conant, Pres. of the Connecticut C. A.

The first week in February belongs to Massachusetts. Rev. David McFall, of East Cambridge, will arrange for the annual meeting of the Massachusetts C. A., and other appointments of Bro. Stoddard.

The second week in February, Bro. Stoddard will devote to New Hampshire. The eighth annual meeting of the N. H. C. A. will be held at Gilford Village, February 10–12. Rev. J. P. Stoddard will speak for the N. C. A.; Rev. W. H. Reed, of Ryegate, Vt., will explain "The True Foundation of Government;" Rev. H. F. Wood, of Dover, N. H., will endeavor to crush the head of the rum viper; Rev. Enoch Morrill, of Rochester, N. H., will show "The Relation between the Oneness of the Church and the Conversion of the World." Other phases of reform work will be ably presented by representative speakers. Brethren from neighboring States will be cordially welcomed. Dea. S. Rowe speaks for the church in asking all interested to seek power from on high by the baptism of the Holy Spirit.

The third week in February is assigned to Maine, and the fourth week in February to Vermont. I spent Lord's day, December 21st, with the brethren in Willimantic, Ct., and lectured on temperance in the evening. The only episode worth mentioning was the frantic efforts of a "Good Templar," SON OF TEMPERANCE and FREE MASON, etc., to stay up the tottering ark of Good Templarism. The spectacle reminded one of chaff in a gale of wind.

S. C. KIMBALL.

FROM THE NEW YORK AGENT.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, Dec. 31st, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After another week's work I pause to report progress. You will remember I was at Utica when I last wrote. Ilion was the next stop. I found several warm friends of Pres. C. A. Blanchard here. Pres. B. lectured here some twelve years ago. Bro. Clappsaddle has been a constant reader of the Cynosure ever since.

Mohawk was the next stop. Here I did not find salt enough to save Sodom; called on some of the preachers and found them Masons, smokers, and what not.

At Newport I found our old friends, the Watermans, as much interested in our reform work as ever. The Cynosure is a welcome visitor at their house. Bro. Root of Poland bid me a hearty God speed and handed me a contribution for the work. At Schenectady I found things about the same as at Mohawk; preachers more interested in Christmas balls than anything else. On arriving here I was made welcome by Bro. Smith, pastor of the F. M. church.

Making the appointments that I am now filling, I hastened on to Corinth. Here I met for the first time Rev. F. J. Dunham. Bro. D. is having remarkable success in a series of revival meetings. The Lord was present in power, and many are passing from death unto life. Franklin Mallory, among others, has been soundly converted. Before conversion he belonged to the Masons, Odd-fellows, Sons of Temperance, etc., etc. I spoke several times in the vicinity of his home. He attended every meeting and endorsed the statements which were made. Friends who have passed through like trying times can imagine the consecration which was needed to face his former lodge companions and tell them the truth before a congregation of his neighbors. Cynosure readers will hear from this young brother later.

On Monday night the devil seemed especially to rave. I spoke in a Wesleyan church some four miles from Corinth; was several times interrupted by angry lodge men. One man rose up almost wild with rage, swore and cursed, and said that I must take back something I had said, and then accused me of saying that every man that belonged to a secret society was a drunkard. Of course I had made no such statement, and asked every one that thought I had to rise up. No one arose. On the negative vote nearly the entire audience sprang to their feet. Mr. Jinkins, the man who made the disturbance, arose, and after a volley of oaths made his way out the door. Nearly all seemed satisfied with the Masonic arguments. They had a complete illustration of what Masonry could do for a man.

During the past week I have spoken every night but one. It would be impossible for me to now relate all the adventures of this time. Suffice it to say that the Lord has been with me. Meetings have been well attended, and, I trust, God's cause advanced.

W. B. STODDARD.

The Topeka (Kas.) Tribune, of December 20th, makes the following very sensible remarks about St. John and his persecutors:

"Ex-Gov. St. John addressed a large audience in the Senate Chamber Tuesday night. He made one of the grandest efforts of his life. He dealt with many solid facts that made a lasting impression on his audience. He struck some heavy blows at the men that have opposed him so bitterly since the campaign. As Republicans, we cannot see where we are gaining anything at all by a continued fight on St. John. The more we fight him the stronger he will be politically. We think that the time has come for the Republicans to call a halt, for a while at least. Let us stop and think until we get in good humor over the result of the election, and then make a new start for the future work of the Republican party, not with malice, but with common sense. As temperance men, we have been a little careless in the past and left the bars down, and if we are not careful St. John will put them up behind us and we will be hemmed in for the future. Let us negotiate for peace and not for war."

—The King of Corea has written to Dr. Maclay permitting him to establish a Christian mission in that country, "so long as it is Protestant."

ANOTHER CASE OF MASONIC CHARITY.

These facts are gathered from a reliable source, only we were requested to withhold names and place Mr. Victim, a well-known peddlar in Susuehanna county, Pa., joined a lodge of Masons in said county and had paid in fees and dues about one hundred dollars for the sublime privilege of being duped and bamboozled in the sublime style of lodgery. At the house of a mutual friend of Anti-mason sentiments, he became very ill. This friend was specially kind, with his very kind wife, using all possible means for his speedy recovery. In some ten days he was able to be moved, and was taken away with his goods and is well again. Two physicians, natural brothers, one of them an adhering Mason, the other a nominal one, were called, the latter being the one in steady attendance; the other came some ten miles on a special and unknown call—probably by his brother in charge of the patient. Through his Masonic doctor he applied for relief from his lodge, and $5 was granted, from which $4 were deducted to pay his back dues. This left him one dollar to defray his expenses. His expenses at his friend's were only $7.50, which he paid out of his goods, and declared his purpose never to pay into a fund any more money for the benefit of getting out, in an emergency, one per cent. of money paid in.

You see, dear reader, Masonry is a good thing when one is traveling, and when one gets sick it is so good to rely on this fund of "Masonic Charity." While all do not fare as well as this victim did, some do—and possibly even better. Some favorite son of the craft may, after investing hundreds of dollars, get back even 30 per cent. So go in, ye who have a penchant to be victimized.

Think, O, ye sons of the lamb-skin, think of the celestial privileges you win in this sublime institution! From the ante-room to the Master's degree, what grandeur! What glory! Hoodwink and cable-tow, drawers and frock, yea, even slippers (minus one), knocked down, buried, resurrected with the awful Ma-ha-bone in the mouth! Come, let us join the ORDER!

N. CALLENDER.

AN OHIO CONVENTION.

SOUTH SALEM, O., Dec. 27, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE: I see my opinion is called for in reference to a convention in Ohio, in behalf of the cause represented by the National Christian Association; or a convention "To oppose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonery in particular."

My opinion of Freemasonry is the same that it has been for many years. I believe it is as malignant, as dishonoring to the Lord Jesus, as injurious to his cause and as dangerous to the souls of men as Mormonism; and perhaps more dangerous, as well as more difficult to deal with.

Unlike Mormonism, it is spread everywhere, tempting the young, infecting the churches and deranging the machinery of government. To me, therefore, it appears to be the duty of every enlightened Christian, by as much as in him lies, to "oppose, withstand and remove Freemasonry in particular."

Mr. Moody has lately been, and is now, I believe, holding conventions for advancing the cause of Christ in general. In these conventions many Christians are awakened to a clearer knowledge and a better sense of their relations and duties to God; and are moved to more consecration, prayerfulness and activity in his service, and so good is done. It is also common for Christians to hold conventions in the interest of particular departments of Christian work, as missions, Sabbath-schools, Sabbath observance, etc. And, as opposing and removing Freemasonry is one and a very important department of Christian work, there is, I think, quite as much occasion for a convention in the interest of this department as any other, and as but a small number, comparatively, are qualified to labor efficiently in this department, those who are qualified will perhaps be justified in giving it more attention than we do to other specialties in which every Christian is supposed to be interested and at work. But in this work of removing Freemasonry there is danger of our lapsing into a feeling of personal opposition to a personal enemy. We should guard against this, and remember that we are seeking the honor of the Lord Jesus, and the salvation of our fellow-men. The cause is not ours, but his.

From 1875 to 1880 there was an annual convention in Ohio. Mr. Ronayne went several times through the State working the degrees. Other lecturers were also abroad, and literature was distributed, and the lodge membership diminished at the rate of 700 a year. But since 1879 there has been no convention, we have all been rather quiet here, and the membership of the lodge has increased 2,000 in four years. I do not know that these facts stand in the relation of cause and effect. But they are at least worth looking at.

In another letter I will mention some things which I think a convention might advantageously do, or profitably consider.

WARREN TAYLOR.

THE SUFFRAGE QUESTION.

EDITOR CYNOSURE: I am in earnest sympathy with the cause you advocate, believing you are opposing a most dangerous foe to the home, the church, and the State. Hence, I have been interested to see what position your party would take on the subject of woman suffrage, and have carefully looked over the arguments of your correspondents. I feel moved to ask your attention to a few thoughts on the subject. One most objectionable feature of Masonry is the selfishness shown in helping members of the craft at the expense of non-members, and in perverting the very name of charity by calling that charity which shuts out from its benefits all who are not fellow-conspirators. Has not this feature of Masonry a strong resemblance to the spirit shown by men who claim for themselves and deny to women the benefits of citizenship? As we see no reason why Masonry entitles one to promotion in church or State, so we can see no reason why manhood alone entitles one to the right of franchise. It would be strange if in working against the machinations of a clique, men were not educated to despise all partiality, and to cease to be "respecters of persons." We believe that in the eyes of God and of all just men, neither understanding the Masonic "rigmarole," the possession of a white skin, nor the belonging to the male sex entitles one to honor or privilege, and we cannot believe that those whose clear vision sees the injustice in the two first cases, should not see it in the last. But Anti-masons should also see the policy of endorsing woman suffrage. All signs point to it as the coming issue—as soon to be the fixed policy of the Republic. Those who refuse to women this boon can hardly expect their support when once possessed of the franchise.

I trust we shall see the American party in the fore-front of all reforms, and am glad to see it committed to the principle of giving to Christian woman the power to make herself a felt force in suppressing evil, whether it be intemperance, Masonry, the barbarism of war, or whatever form it may wear.

MRS. S. C. U.

PRAYER ASKED.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Dec. 27, 1884.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

DEAR BROTHER:—It is reported that an idolatrous temple, to cost $150,000, is to be erected in this city, in which they propose to perpetuate the Aaronic priesthood, the Eleusinian Mysteries of ancient Egypt and some of the religious rites and ceremonies of the ancient systems of Sun worship. And in perpetuating some of the bloody rites of some of these ancient worships they propose to bind all of their worshipers with terrible obligations involving murder, death penalties to keep their worship, their murder, their treason, and all other crimes a profound secret from all who do not unite with them. And when built, they propose to claim that it is erected to Almighty God, and dedicated to the Holy Saints John.

Now I write this to ask all of the readers of the Christian Cynosure, to unite in prayer to God that this glaring insult to his name, and the honest men and women who bear his name, the name of him who is meek and lowly in heart, and to the name of him in whose honor this city is named, the great apostle to the Gentiles, may be avenged of God by confounding the designs of these idolaters.

To their shame be it said, some of the city pastors and church members are running greedily after the abomination. But surely God will hear our prayer. Yours truly, WILLIAM FENTON.

A SIGN OF BLASPHEMY.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Dec. 26, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Passing a saloon this morning I saw a sign above the door which read thus: "House of David:" and below, "We never sleep." Between these two was painted an eye, meant no doubt to represent the eye of God Almighty; as Christ is Prince of the House of David, and "He slumbers not nor sleeps," the whole was a glaring blasphemy. Many people will, no doubt, pass this sign and shake their heads, as they notice the blasphemy, and possibly, many who do it will be guilty of the same blasphemy themselves.

How often is it that we see men who are drunkards, or worse, with pins in their neeties or coats with an eye carved on them representing the eye of God, which is one of the many blasphemous signs of the lodge. What difference is there between the sign on a place where they sell liquor, and on a person that drinks liquor, or one who is the companion of harlots? And yet the Masonic or Odd-fellow preachers would defend the one, and denounce the other. Let us be consistent. The editor or publisher of the Freethinker, I think it was, was arrested in London some time ago, and imprisoned for publishing in the paper a caricature of Jehovah. Now, why should this man be imprisoned, when the same thing is taught to be right by an institution, of which the Crown Prince of England is a high member? What is the difference between making a caricature of God's whole body, and his eye? God is a Spirit, and no one has any right to attempt to portray his eternal eye. Much less have the lodges any right to adopt it as one of their signs.

HARRY AGNEW.

PROHIBITION IN MASSACHUSETTS.

LOCKPORT, N. Y.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have just read for the third time the article of Bro. H. T. Cheever, in the last Cynosure (Dec. 25), headed "After the Fight and Defeat," and am considerably surprised at some of the positions therein taken.

First, after quoting from a former article to the Mass. Spy, in which he advised throwing all the Prohibition votes for Blaine, in order to "make an end of that false Democratic party by a Waterloo defeat from which it shall never recover," he says, "That I did not fail to read the signs aright is proven by the result." * * * "Following the triumphs of the Democracy all the large towns and cities in this Commonwealth, but three, vote for license with largely increased majorities. In this city of 70,000 the majority for license is 2,123, when last year it was 762 and the year before was reduced to 117." How he can draw the conclusions he does from the premises laid down I fail to see. You will observe that two years ago, after the Democrats elected their governor, the majority for license was but 117, and one year ago after a Republican victory it was 762, and this year with a Republican State triumph (for the writer "was one that beforehand steadily affirmed the folly and danger of risking the cause of prohibition in the States by making it a National issue") it rose to 2,123. If it was not to be made a National issue, where is the argument?

Again, that we are to draw conclusions so hastily seems to me unwarrantable. The Democrats have not yet taken control of the government, and who but the Omniscient can tell what the result will be? The Children of Israel in the bitterness of their bondage complained to Moses when straw was refused them to make brick by Pharoah, after that Moses, in obedience to God, had demanded that he let them go; and even Moses was discouraged and said unto God, "Why hast thou evil entreated this people?" But God encouraged Moses, and said unto him, "I am the Lord." And subsequent events proved it true. So we say now, God is the Lord, and a little more faith in him and less in human ken will clear away much of the mist and sophistry of this question.

Again, Bro. Cheever says that "St. John and his followers snatched or diverted a well earned victory from the Republican party." Again, "The Republican party has had it in its power, if the leaders would have allowed it, to have given hospitality to the temperance reform, and to have done much toward curbing the liquor traffic, and it has suffered a sad defeat for not so doing." Now just put these two together and make them harmonize if you can. Would they deem it prudent to throw away a successful policy after election, had they been victorious? Judge ye. But "by voting with the Republican party, we shall raise them to a higher moral plane, and it will be in our power to modify, if not control, its policy as to prohibition." Have we not had enough experience in that direction already; and were not the leaders always holding back the party from any real honors in that line? It reminds me of God's description of the Laodicean church, "Neither cold nor hot;" and God says, "I would that thou wert either cold or hot, but because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth." J. W. ALBERTY.

PITH AND POINT.

MUST OUR PRESIDENTS BE MASONS?

Still keep it before the people. Only last night an English 33-degree Mason said to me: "English Masons run this country; I do not believe that you can elect a President who is not a Mason." These are his exact words. Being a landscape gardener he told me that he was offered a prominent position in arranging the Centennial Exposition gardens at Philadelphia by virtue of his Masonic relations.—A READER, Philadelphia, Pa.

FROM THE PRISON MISSIONARY.

I address this communication to you, as you are acquainted with me, as well as with the work I am trying to accomplish. For some time I have been permitted to receive your valuable paper, which, I can assure you, is a most welcome visitor. It occurred to me, possibly some friend had paid for it be sent to me. If so, please thank them for me. If not, it is hardly fair, at least on my part, to continue it, as I receive no salary and therefore must not make debts. I will say, as before, it is a most welcome visitor.—W. D. A. MATTHEWS, Onarga, Ill.

This note is printed to call the attention of our readers to the noble and self-denying work of Bro. Matthews in behalf of the prisoners in our penitentiaries. He is endeavoring to bring these men to a state of penitence and aversion to their criminal life by circulating tons of second-hand reading matter gratuitously among them. In this he deserves assistance from everybody. Write to him and learn how you may lend a helping hand.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON III.—January 18, 1885.—Paul's Farewell.—Acts 20: 28-38.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Feed the Church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood.—Acts 20: 28.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The charge to pastoral fidelity. v. 28. Paul, as he made this touchingly tender and solemn charge to the Ephesian elders, had in his mind the many Christian churches with which his labors had dotted Asia Minor—isles of brightness and peace in the vast, surging sea of heathenism that perpetually threatened to engulf them, either by great tidal waves of persecution, or by the slow undermining of temptations which met them on every hand to recognize in some form the prevailing idolatry. These were to be his successors, to carry on the work that must hereafter lack his personal supervision. Personal holiness, we notice, is the first duty he enjoins upon them. "Take heed to yourselves." No minister can feed his flock with divine truth who has not first found it precious to his own soul; and surely there can be no greater stimulus to faithfulness than the thought that every member of that flock has been "purchased" by the blood of the Chief Shepherd.

2. Charge to watchfulness. vs. 29-32. The Bible represents all anti-Christian systems and doctrines under the figure of ravenous beasts. The epistles contain frequent prophetic allusions to such enemies as continuing to harass the church, even down to millennial times. Freemasonry, with the hundred secret orders through which it works, is like a horde of "grievous wolves," preying upon the very vitals of Christianity, parodying the Bible's sweetest histories, travestying its most sacred truths; and offering a mock salvation, without a Christ to save or a Holy Spirit to renew. There are also internal foes. From the ranks of the ministry itself "shall men arise speaking perverse things." We see this fulfilled in many pastors of the present day who preach their own theories and speculations instead of the pure Gospel of salvation. "Therefore watch." When lodge religion steals into the vineyard of God's planting, the tares of false doctrine will naturally spring up, and pastors of all men need to acquaint themselves with its true character.

3. To labor for others. vs. 33-35. The early Puritan clergy eked out their scanty salaries by farming, and those times of poverty were their golden days of spiritual power. No man is qualified to enter the pulpit who is not willing to put ease behind his back; and if the ministry generally would copy Paul's example there would be fewer feeble churches left to die because no pastor can be found willing to live on the small salary they are able to offer. The very words minister and ministering have their root in the idea of self-denial, of giving rather than receiving.

4. The parting. vs. 36-38. Those who are leaders today in the ranks of reform, battling for truth and righteousness, have no longer lease of life than other men. The day will come when we shall see their faces no more. Let us heed their words of warning while they are yet with us.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

Why is personal holiness a prime duty? Ps. 50: 16; Rv. 2: 21-23. What is a peculiar characteristic of wolves that devour the flock? 2 Tim. 3: 5. What must every faithful minister expect? John 16: 33.

Take heed to yourselves. v. 28. The example you set, the influence you exert, the life you live, affects every individual with whom you come in contact. Your face, your figure, your words, your actions, help to build up or tear down the characters of others. You cannot do anything in the presence of others which does not affect them. You are being watched and read often when you least suspect it. One observes your charitable judgment, another your honest acknowledgment of wrong, another your studious habits, another your readiness to forgive, and, alas! if you fail in any virtue, eyes are quick to detect and hearts are ready to imitate. Therefore every Christian should take heed.

Feed the church of God. v. 28. It is the duty of every pastor to minister to each member of his flock. The rich and the poor, the sick and the well, the aged and the young, the faithful and the unfaithful should be counselled or cheered, encouraged or rebuked, according to their needs. The poor should not be overlooked and the rich should not be feared.

Watch. v. 31. "An army in actual war always establishes its pickets, sends out its scouts, and posts its sentinels, that they may know the movements of the enemy, and be ready to meet him. The general who should omit these precautionary measures, would be dismissed in disgrace, or his army overwhelmed in defeat. The sentinel who should neglect his duty or sleep at his post, would be punished with death. The Christian's foe is relentless. The guard should be constant and vigilant."

Remember how others have labored for you. v. 31. Paul warned them of the dangers which beset them. He asked them to recall his counsels in reference to these dangers, and remember his labor with and for them. The memory of what friends have done for you should stimulate you to help and encourage others.

Support the weak. v. 35. It is not alone a privilege, it is a duty, to provide for the wants of the poor, the needy and the infirm. Every Christian is a steward, not a proprietor. He should give as God prospers him. Many are living to-day in comparative poverty, because they failed to honor God with their substance and with the first fruits of their increase. If all Christians gave in proportion as they were prospered, there would be no sick ones suffering for necessities, no children crying for bread, no aged ones cold and desolate. Bishop Potter was upon one occasion visiting at the residence of Mr. Minturn. At family prayer the Bishop read the parable of Dives and Lazarus. Mr. Minturn observed that it was a passage of Scripture which often alarmed him. "A very solemn one, indeed," answered the Bishop, "but it should not be a terror to the rich who give as they should of their riches." "Ah," immediately responded the rich man, what do any of us give but the crumbs, Bishop?"

Remember the words of the Lord Jesus. v. 35. "When our Lord said, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive,' he expressed his own experience. He who loves a cheerful giver is a cheerful Giver. The love wherewith Christ loved us is the mould upon which the practical rule was cast. The redeption which the Gospel reveals is a system of giving and receiving. The whole transaction between the Saviour and the saved is comprehended in giving and getting. Christ gives all and gets nothing; Christians get all and give nothing. He gave himself; this is a gift unspeakable. For the joy that was set before him—this greater blessedness, the blessedness of giving, he came and companied with the empty and the lost. Let us bear these words of the Lord Jesus in our hearts when we pray. To be assured that he counts it blessedness to give, should greatly encourage us in asking."—The Illustrator.

A NEW PAMPHLET.

A WOMAN'S VICTORY;

OR

THE QUERY OF THE LODGEVILLE CHURCH

BY JENNIE L. HARDIE.

This simple and touching story which was lately published in the Cynosure is now ready for orders in a beautiful pamphlet. It is worth reading by every Anti-mason —and especially BY HIS WIFE. Get it and take it home to cheer the heart of your companion who may desire to do something for Christ against great evils, but is discouraged from making any public effort. PRICE, FIFTEEN CENTS. Ten for a dollar.

The American Party.

FIRST NOMINATION for President at Oberlin, Ohio, May 23, 1872.

PLATFORM ADOPTED at Chicago, June 28, 1872.

NAME ADOPTED at Syracuse, N. Y., June 3, 1874.

PRESIDENTAL CANDIDATES:

1872—Charles Francis Adams and Joseph L. Barlow.

1876—James B. Walker and Donald Kirkpatrick.

1880—J. W. Phelps and Samuel C. Pomeroy.

1884—J. Blanchard and J. W. Conant nominated; the former withdrawing, Samuel C. Pomcroy was nominated. Both nominees withdrawing, the support of the party was generally given to John P. St. John and William Daniel, candidates of the Prohibition party.

NATIONAL COMMITTEE.

Tapley, Mississippi; E. D. Balley, District of Columbia; J. M. Scott, Ohio; Israel Hess, Indiana; S. C. Kimball, New Hampshire; S. A. Pratt, Massachusetts; P. Bacon, Connecticut; A. M. Paull, Rhode Island; G. W. Needles, Missouri; S. P. Poole, Michigan; J. N. Norris, Iowa; Robert Armstrong, New Jersey.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1884.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that athcism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

CHICAGO, THURSDAY JANUARY 8, 1885

THE CONGREGATIONAL CLUB. — Some four hundred children of the Pilgrim's celebrated Forefather's Day at the Palmer House, Chicago, Prof. Fisk in the chair. As usual, it was a brilliant gathering, social and patriotic. It struck us as queer that at such a meeting a brother should carry a vote to observe Christmas, which the Pilgrims specially abhored. The New York Independent naively observed that in the Christmas carols, "Some doubt whether the highest cords are those of the angels or of the Roman Saturnalia." New Year's rests on reason, and Thanksgiving on religion, Christmas, with its Santa Claus, Yule Log, wassail revels and Forestry, is at best but half re-claimed heathenism which has supplanted the Gospel in lands where Apostles taught. Let us hope, however, that the angels and the Christ-child will not be run down by St. Nicholas, or Old Nick.

THE TARIFF! THE TARIFF! No Democrat would abolish it because the people hate direct taxes, and would rather support government by paying a little more for what they buy. But the first dollar surplus revenue raised by tariff above government expenses, is a corruption-fund and stimulating bait to fraud, embezzlement, luxury and theft. In 1843 the writer passed through Victoria's wine cellar. Her chief butler, whose duty was to taste the liquors, had a salary higher than the President of the United States. The Princess Augusta was married, and the London bells were ringing out the roundelay. Parliament voted the girl ten thousand dollars a year because her father, the Duke of Cambridge, was drawing from the taxes twenty thousand. Victoria and Prince Albert went in state, two miles from Buckingham Palace, to the Italian Opera, and people lined the way on both sides shouting, "God Save the Queen." At that moment one person in eleven in the whole United Kingdom was a recognized pauper on the parish list. Give our rulers money enough and Washington becomes London, and the United States Great Britain.

CHRIST'S SECOND COMING is not a Scriptural phrase. The Bible is full of his "comings." In Eden, to Abraham, to Solomon, to Moses, when he "came down to deliver" the Israelites, at Bethlehem as a babe, etc., etc., and in the last chapter of the Bible he says, "Behold I come quickly;" and in the reckoning of eternity, "quickly" may mean a million years.

Doubtless every one of his predicted comings will be fulfilled, and we shall know when they are so. And our proper posture is to be "looking for and hastening to" his coming which may not be five minutes ahead; and it will seem so when he gets here. One would like to know how long to Moses and Elias in the mount the 1,500 years seemed since they had toiled and suffered here. But we must not conjure with his advent or make a sect out of it.

FAITH CURES, which used to be noticed only as superstitions, are becoming staple items of the public press. The science of medicine, as we have it, is of Greek origin, where, as among our Indians, the healing art was mixed with conjuring; and this as everything else, retains a tinge from the complexion of its origin; and it is the constant tendency of the mind to cease looking to God, and to trust in means.

But praying to God for healing is as rational as any act of prayer. Christ healed bodies as well as souls. His apostles healed people. The Psalmist says, "Who healeth all thy diseases." Let us try to seek healing, as we seek salvation, not from means, but from God through means.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION—NEGRO WOMEN.

"Is woman blessed in the love of the home? In place of the angel of love, how often has there whispered to her ear, the devil of lust. And the negro woman, married to her negro husband, experiences the fact that even he regards her as under eternal obligation because he has married her; and now she owes to him a support and a home; and he may go forth to his clubs and his LODGES, his excursions, his drinking and smoking, and have her expect it to be her duty to wash, and hoe cotton, that she may support her lord."—Address of Rev. Edward D. Eaton, at Annual Meeting.

This seems to be the only allusion to the lodge during the anniversary. In years past, Secretary Strieby has written some brief paragraphs against the ex-slave joining secret lodges, and Secretary Roy spoke well at the unveiling of the Morgan monument. We desire to call the attention of these secretaries to the following facts:

1. Rev. J. W. Polk's colored Baptist church, Chicago, has three secret societies. The Western Light Temple, The Golden Gate Temple, and the Juvenile Club: the first for adults, the second for girls and boys of sixteen, the third swearing in children of both sexes when ten or eleven years old. The oath is administered by "TheGrand Master"–"So help you God!" and binds them to conceal from their own mothers, even, not only the initiation pass-words, etc., but the doings of the lodge. These children pay one dollar each for initiation, and ten cents a month afterward.

2. In the city of Washington, secret societies literally swarm. A colored man whom we saw, and who catches perch in the Potomac and sells them at ten cents a string, had raised and paid twenty-five dollars to be initiated into two secret societies to get ready to be taxed and governed. The wife of Rev. Wm. Moore, of Washington, informed us that while she taught in Fisk University, Tenn., a craze or mania seemed to possess colored men to belong to and keep up their dues in three to six secret lodges; and she named one smart, industrious man who kept up his dues in five lodges, which so nearly consumed his monthly wages, that his family depended on their own earnings, and on charity to supply their wants.

These glimpses, given us by the parties themselves, or by persons like Mrs. Moore, warrant us in saying that the colored people South, aye of the North, too, are rapidly passing under leaders who are not amenable to church or state; or even the family relations. Girls of ten years and upwards, sworn to concealment from their mothers, are turned into night meetings with boys, under oath not to tell what they see or hear or do there. There are some fifty such children from ten to sixteen years of age in the Juvenile lodge of Rev. Wm. Polk's church in Chicago. This in the North, what then in the South?

These colored people, thus being drilled and trained into popery, by the spurious worships, vain titles, and garish regalia of the lodge, are the wards of the American Missionary Association, which has received millions of dollars, and is now receiving thousands, to give those poor blacks pure doctrine and "a godly discipline."

WHO ABOLISHED SLAVERY.

We are sorry to see The Interior reason wildly on reform. William Reynolds, of Peoria, writes that the Abolitionist vote in 1844, though it defeated Henry Clay, and was said thereby to have destroyed Abolition, proved to be "the beginning of the end of slavery." The Interior editor takes him up and would seem to make the Abolitionists blind friends, and the Whigs and Democrats the true destroyers of slavery. This is what he says:

"The defeat of Henry Clay in 1844 by the 'Liberty Party' which nominated James G. Birney, resulted in the annexation of Texas, and the Mexican war, which was fought for the extension of slave territory. The effect upon the Whig party was to make it extremely pro-slavery, and to prepare it for the enactment of the Fugitive Slave Law. The Democratic party, having won by the assistance of the 'abolitionists,' became largely infused with 'free soil' principles. The Democratic State Convention in Ohio adopted a platform demanding the 'extinction' of slavery, and the Democratic Legislature sent Salmon P. Chase to the United States Senate When the campaign of 1848 came on the Democrats nominated Lewis Cass, of Michigan, and they were dependent on the free soil element with which their party was largely infused, for his election, and expected to receive it. But the Liberty party nominated Martin Van Buren, who had no sympathy with abolitionism, and defeated General Cass. This brought in the most radically pro-slavery administration in the history of the country up to that time, and the Fugitive Slave Law was enacted. When the campaign of 1852 came on, both the great parties had been beaten by the 'free soilers,' because of their free-soilism—Clay in '44, and Cass in '48, and both therefore took equal and extreme pro-slavery grounds. The result was the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, the opening of Kansas and Nebraska to slavery, the Dred Scott decision, and the 'Manifest Destiny' doctrine of the annexation of the West Indies and Central America. The next presidential election, 1856, found the Whig party dead and the Republican party, which was not an abolition party, but stood on the Jeffersonian doctrine of restriction, was defeated. In 1860 the slave power was stronger than it ever had been, but it 'knifed' Stephen A. Douglas at Charleston, and, following this, defied doom by firing on Sumter. The strength of slavery is shown at that time by the fact that Abraham Lincoln in 1860 only received about one-third of the popular vote.

This strange reasoning accuses reformers of all ages of causing the guilty acts of their enemies. Elijah's prophecy, not idolatry, "troubled Israel;" Luther's preaching "resulted" in the thirty year's war. The truth taught by Huss "resulted" in his being burned; and Wickliffe's, in the digging up and burning his bones, and sending his ashes by the Swift, Avon, and Severn to the sea; ergo, their conduct was unwise.

There have always been abolitionists ever since there were slaves. Massachusett's General Court sent the first two slaves landed there home to Africa at the public expense. In 1782 the British Chief Justice decided that a slave's chains fell off when his foot struck England. Twelve times Wilberforce failed; but the thirteenth time carried the abolition of the slave-trade by the British Parliament. Lundy started his Genius of Universal Emancipation in 1821. Garrison his Liberator in 1831. The same year the Synod of Cincinnati appointed a fast for the overthrow of slavery, and issued a pamphlet written by S. Crothers, from which Weld drew his celebrated "Bible Argument." In 1835 Birney started the Philanthropist in Cincinnati, and through this whole period Friend Quakers testified, and enforced discipline against slave-holding; and, down to the war of 1860–5, there were Scotch Presbyterian churches, even in the South, which excluded slave-holders from fellowship.

But in 1840 a political party was started at Albany which, shifting its forms and names held on till slavery fell. It cast that year for Birney only 7,000 votes; in 1844, 66,000; in 1848 between two and three hundred thousand; in 1852, a less number; and in 1856 Fremont had a larger popular vote than Buchanan who was elected.

This political movement was called in 1848 Free Soil, and in 1856 took the name Republican. But Salmon P. Chase, who wrote the platform and presided at the Buffalo convention in 1848, had acted and voted with the old Liberty party full seven years before; and Giddings, John P. Hale, Lovejoy, and almost the entire mass of Abolitionists went bodily with the Free Soil movement in 1848. The writer was at Princeton, Ill., and made a speech to the Abolitionists who crowded a hall to meet Lovejoy on his return; and we all went solid for the Free Soil party, with Chase as our leader and head.

Years before, the writer had slept with S. P. Chase, Senator Tom Morris, Samuel Lewis and seventy-five others, on hay, in Joseph Dugdale's stable-loft at Green Plains, Ohio, because there was only house-room enough for the women. And now, to be told that the Free Soil party was not the Liberty party seems to us queer. The Republican party was the same hat stretched.

Was not the Republican party the same party after receiving hosts of life-long Democrats, like John A. Logan, Lyman Trumbull and their followers, as it was the year previous? True, when the slave-holders shifted their ground, we changed front to meet them. The new territories began to open and the race was to see which would get those territories slavery or freedom. Garrison and his small band were non-government, non-voting, non-resistants. But the mass of us, represented by the Emancipatior, Philanthropist, National Era, Western Citizen, Fred. Douglass's paper, etc., etc., were voting Abolitionists, who never believed Congress had the political right to free slaves within the slave States, except by the war power. So when Chase set our platform against extending slavery into the territories, that gave us the name of "Free Soilers," Free Democrats, and what not; but that did not make us another party. The Democratic party was named, and called by Jefferson and its founders the Republican party; but the people liked the name "Democrat," and so made the change. Did that make it another party? So changing the name of the Liberty party to Free Soil, and Republican, did not make us another party. We were the only anti-slavery party, from our birth to the death of slavery. Chase said to an old Whig friend who complained of his desertiug its ranks: "My friend, the road to the overthrow of slavery lies through the graveyard of the Whig party." So it did, and we traveled that road. True, we took in proselytes along the road, who had not fully learued our language or our faith. Mr. Lincoln was one; but the logic of events soon converted him to both. If the old Abolitionists had been taken out of the Republican party, it would have been "The play of Hamlet with Hamlet left out." When Lincoln said he would "save the Union with slavery" if he could, Lovejoy immediately wrote, "Our trust now is in God and in the mob." The Southern mob of fire-eaters soon drove Mr. Lincoln to the Abolitionists and slavery fell. The Liberty-Free-Soil-Republicau party was one continuous river like the Mississippi, though it received tributaries, and if you had takeu the Abolitionists out of it, you would have left it but a "mud creek."

THE NATIONAL WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE ASSOCIATION.

The seventeenth anniversary of this society will be held in Lincoln Hall, Washington, D. C., January 20–22, 1885.

The senior editor of the Cynosure and Secretary Stoddard paid their dollar each and attended the sixteenth anniversary last winter, in the same hall, and so became members of the Association. We enjoyed the speaking, and believe in woman's suffrage. We, in due time, received the printed minutes. and along with them a printed circular signed by Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Susan B. Anthony, headed: "STAND BY THE REPUBLICAN PARTY." This circular struck us as queer, as we had not heard or read of the Republican party doing any thing or saying aught for woman's suffrage. Nor can we now imagine any reason to account for their course, unless somebody employed and paid them a few thousand dollars for emitting and circulating these electioneering hand-bills which, of course, if the parties were agreed, they had a right to do. But as we voted for St. John, we took no stock in the Stanton-Anthony hand-bill.

The only allusion to the temperance reform which we heard last winter in their convention, was in the speech of a lady who, enumerating tokens of success, said: "These Temperance women were coming out for woman's suffrage.

When shown the American platform by Secretary Stoddard, several of the suffrage leaders, especially Mrs. Gougar, of Our Herald, warmly approved of it; but we have not heard of their advocating it, or condemning the lodge which swears its members never to initiate a woman. A few of these women were, with Mr. Garrison, opposed to voting by men or women.

—The New York agent has become acquainted with Mr. F. Mallory, a seceded Mason of Corinth, Saratoga county, N. Y., who is anxious that S. E. Starry of Iowa visit the State and lecture, agreeing to pay one-half the cost.

—Last week Elder Rathbun, Iowa State agent, passed through Chicago on his way to Corning, N. Y., spending part of the day in the Cynosure office. Bro. Rathbun reports the Iowa Republicans terribly severe on every man who voted for St. John, whether American or Prohibitionist. This wrath he expects will turn soon to shame, and the interruption to reform work will be only temporary.

—A State convention is in preparation for New York during the present month. Notice may be expected next week. The meeting will be held in the western part of the State. All hands on deck, and ready for action!

—Secretary Stoddard is expected to enter upon a campaign of five or six weeks in New England, arranged by Elder S. C. Kimball, of N. H. His first meeting will be with the independent Baptist church at Williamantic, Conn. on Sabbath the 25th inst. Let all parties in New England desiring lectures write to Bro. Kimball at New Market, N. H.

—Bro. Hinman writes a good letter from Princeton, Ill., where he found a welcome in the Swedish church with large audiences on three evenings. We are reluctant to postpone this letter, but could not find room for it this week.

—The assailants of Elder Rathbun at Kellerton, Iowa, a few years ago seem to have been followed by an avenging providence. The day after the mob the villain who struck him was thrown from a buggy and had his leg broken, and has lately been severely pounded in a fracas; another was struck and killed by a negro last April; one of the lawyers engaged against him has been convicted of perjury; and a doctor indicted for counterfeiting.

—Friends in Wisconsin will please note the change in the notice for their State convention. Instead of the College chapel at Milton, the Grange Hall at Milton Junction will receive the convention. We sincerely hope the reason for the change will not reflect upon the moral courage of the College officers. A few years ago they received Bro. H. H. Hinman quite ungraciously, and the welcome tendered Elder Bancroft was an evidence, we hoped, of more cordiality and co-operation in reform work.

—The New Year has been gracious to several of our valued exchanges. The Midland of St. Louis has taken the more popular 16-page form. We hope Bro. McNary will warm up some of his strong Anti-masonic articles for his hungry readers. The Religious Telescope, Dayton, comes in fine new dress throughout. Bro. Hott has secured a wider range for his labor by selecting a smaller type. The historical articles on the early struggles of the Telescope are a valuable contribution to the literature of the United Brethren churches. The Lever of this city commends its good work for temperance by also brightening its pages with new and smaller type. The Banner of Holiness, organ of the Western Holiness Association at Jacksonville, Ill., takes a new name, the Christian Voice, and enlarges its pages, a happy proof of the deserved popularity of this paper.

—Along with the rest the Cynosure has been answering the kind appreciation of its readers by renewing the clear and handsome type furnished two years ago from the foundry of Barnhart Bros. in this city. It is the highest commendation of the work of that establishment that, after two years use, it required an experienced eye to mark the difference between the new and old type. Much of the credit of this durability and excellent wear of type we cheerfully give to the Blakley & Marsh Printing Co., whose skill and care with the press-work has furnished our readers a handsomely printed sheet for two years past. Their past record is an evidence that the N. C. A. Board are determined to give the patrons of the Cynosure the best possible paper, in the best form consistent with the economy necessary to reform.

READ AND ACT.

A form of request was printed in the Cynosure of December 18th, which, after consultation with friends personally and by correspondence, has been modified and is herewith submitted for the signatures of all who approve of the convention. I desire also to make this request: that when you read this you set about getting as many signers as possible and when your list is completed forward it at once to me at 221 West Madison street, Chicago. One man promises 500 from his county. A hundred thousand can easily be obtained by a little effort. Will you do your part and report early?

A NEW ENGLAND M TING FOR REFORM.

A REQUEST FOR A CALL.

The undersigned request the directors of the National Christian Association—

1. To call a Convention at some convenient point in New England, to meet in May, 1885, to consider the Secret Lodge system, and promote Temperance and general Reform, in the interest of the Christian religion and that Civil Government which is ordained of God. Said Convention to consist of all persons who favor the suppression of the liquor traffic and who desire to see the prohibition work divorced from secret lodges.

2. That invitations be extended to President Julius H. Seelye, of Amherst College; Joseph Cook, of Boston; President J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College; A. A. Miner, D. D., of Boston; Hon. Samuel C. Pomeroy, of Washington; and John B. Gough to address the Convention.

Finally, the call to issue when this paper is signed by ten thousand persons who approve the Convention.

WISCONSIN STATE CONVENTION.

The State Convention of the Wisconsin Christian Association meets in Grange Hall, Milton Junction, Rock county, on Tuesday evening, January 13, and will continue through Wednesday and Thursday, the 14th and 15th. Able speakers will be present to address the convention and a special effort will be made to make it of great profit, not only to pronounced Anti-masons, but also to those who have given more attention to the temperance reform.

FRIENDS IN ILLINOIS are beginning to send in pledges of money to sustain the lecture work during the current year. Up to Dec. 27th, the following is the list of cash and pledges received by Mrs. E. A. Cook: J. C. Hetzel, 50 cts.; A friend, 1c.; W. T. Elliott, $1.50; A. Wright, $1; Lemuel Lester, $10; John Gardner, $5; Simon Lautz, $3; Judge Zearing, $5. Total, $26.01.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

The membership in Illinois of the order called Royal Arcanum is reported to be 3,151; number of councils, 42. The total membership of the order in the United States is 53,000; number of councils, 857.

There are in Missouri reported 512 lodges; initiations during the past year, 1,603; raised to the third degree, 1,441; demitted, 1,017; total membership, 25,509, being a gain of 654.

There are 3,559 Masons in Rhode Island according to last report.

The "Supreme Recorder" of the Ancient Order of United Workmen reports 136,047 members May 1, 1884, being an increase of 16,021 during the year. Illinois and Missouri contributed more than one-fourth, or 4,128 to this increase.

The Supreme Lodge of the A. O. U. W. met in Toronto last June. Very prominent in the proceedings was Rev. John D. Vincil, D. D., of St. Louis, a Methodist preacher, we believe, who is also Grand Secretary of the Missouri Masonic Grand Lodge and a Mason of high degree.

Medinah Temple of the "Nobles of the Mystic Shrine," a Masonic body, has existed in Chicago for two years past and has a membership of 150. A prerequisite to membership is that the applicant be a Knight Templar or a 32d degree Mason in the Scottish Rite body. There are members in Wisconsin, Indiana, Minnesota, Missouri and Montana. The meetings are held monthly in Oriental Hall. This order has temples in New York, where the Imperial Council exists; also in Albany, Bridgeport, Boston, Rochester, Pittsburg, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Detroit, Cincinnati, San Francisco, and several other cities in various parts of the United States.

The order of United Americans is a relic of the old Know Nothing movement. Its organ is the Sachem, formerly edited by Col Thomas Picton, a Mason of many degrees in the rite of Memphis, and who was suddenly a man of note when the so-called Masonic emblems were found under the Egyptian obelisk. During the past campaign it was said by official members that none of the order could support Blaine, because each member was sworn "never to vote for a foreigner, for a native Catholic, or for a native American who had married a Catholic, or whose mother was one." Blaine's mother was a Catholic.

One of the most important ceremonies connected with Freemasonry ever witnessed in India, and one attended with considerable pomp and magnificence, was held at Meerut, Nov. 7th, on which occasion H. R. H the Duke of Conaught, 33 deg. Past Senior Warden of England and Great Prior of Ireland, opened a Rose Croix chapter, Knights Templar reception and Knights of Malta priory. Nearly every Mason of high degree in India was present.

Last Thursday evening there was a grand Masonic time at Council Bluffs. The Masonic Temple which has for some time been in process of construction and just completed, was duly dedicated. The "Most Worshipful Grand Master," Judge Granger, was present and officiated, we presume, as high priest in the evening's Baal worship. The grand lodge of seven Masons, led by the Grand Tyler, "filed into the audience room at 8:30 p. m. and marched three times around the altar; the grand officers proceeded in turn to pour corn, wine and oil, with appropriate Masonic remarks, upon the lodge, the Grand Master replying to each convocation, and the grand lodge joining in giving the grand hours." Then the whole affair wound up with dancing. Oh, what a "grand" occasion it was! We have purposely quoted much of the above from Friday's Nonpareil to show that the grand has not been unduly emphasized by us.—Blanchard (Ia) Record.

A Masonic convention was held at Boston the past week of all Masons of the United States of America having taken the ninetieth or ninety-fifth degree of either the rites of Memphis or Mizraim thirtieth degree or thirty-fifth degree of Ancient and Primitive rites, for the purpose of considering the advisability of establishing a union sovereign sanctuary, embracing all the mysteries.

We are informed that this meeting was simply held in the interest of Denis Wilson, of Boston, who has claimed to be Grand Master of the E M. in R , of Memphis, Mizraim, Ancient and Primitive Rite, etc , and who, failing to be recognized by either or any of the aforesaid bodies, has, together with a few disjointed High Masons, gotten up this "Royal Sovereign Sanctuary" scheme to forward the selling of new Masonic degrees; and that there was really no legal officer or member of any of the aforesaid rites present or represented in the said pretended convention; and if there were such, we as Masons know they had no power to alter, change, abridge or consolidate any of the laws, regulations or landmarks of Freemasonry except clandestinely.—The Freemason, Detroit, for December.

The following bill, printed in colors, was picked up in the streets of Millersburg, Ky., a while since. A feature of this meeting was a "national grand tax" of $1 per member, which was the sine qua non of admission. Three prizes were offered for the drill. What are the colored lodges drilling for? In the upper part of the bill is a blazing star within a triangle. It reads:

ATTENTION!

U. B. F. AND S. M. T.

United we stand, divided we fall.

Headquarters of United Brothers of Friendship and Sisters of the Mysterious Ten.

Office of National Grand Master.

Know all brethren and sisters by these presents, that the fourth biennial session of the National Grand Lodge will convene in the city of Galveston, State of Texas, on Monday, July 28, 1884 at 12 M. * * *

Each Temple is entitled and is requested to send one female delegate to the National Grand session of the sisterhood, which will convene Tuesday, July 29, 1884, at 12 M. * * *

The Grand Master and Grand Council of each State is hereby ordered to postpone the meeting of their respective Grand Lodges for 1884 until a convenient date and at the same place in 1885. Business of importance to the vitality of the Brotherhood compels this order. Aside from this is the fact that the order owes to the State of Texas a large and enthusiastic meeting.

Friday, August 1, 1884, at 10:30 a. m., the national grand procession of the order will move, escorted by the knighthood of Texas and visiting knights. This will be the 23d anniversary of the organization of the Brotherhood and Sisterhood.

A competative drill will take place. Commanders of Camps are expected to have their members uniformed in strict conformity to the regulation.

THE HOME.

THE RETURN HOME.

A HYMN OF THE GREEK CHURCH IN THE TENTH CENTURY, TRANSLATED BY JOHN M. NEALE, D.D.

Safe home, safe home in port!
Rent cordage, shattered deck,
Torn sails, provisions short,
And only not a wreck.
But oh! the joy upon the shore
To know our voyage of peril o'er.

The prize, the prize, secure,
The athlete nearly fell;
Bore all he could endure,
And bore not always well.
But he may smile at conflicts gone
Who sets the victor's garland on.

No more the foe can harm;
No more of leaguered camp,
Nor cry of night alarm,
Nor need of ready lamp.
And yet how nearly he had failed,
How nearly had the foe prevailed!

The lamb is in the fold,
In perfect safety penned;
The lion once had hold,
And thought to make an end;
But One came by with wounded side,
And for the sheep the Shepherd died.

The exile is at home;
Oh, nights and days of tears!
Oh, longings not to roam!
Oh, sins, and doubts, and fears!
What matters now? oh! joyful day,
The King has wiped them all away.

Oh! happy, happy bride!
Thy widowed hours are past;
The Bridegroom at thy side,
Thou all His own at last!
The sorrows of thy former cup
In full fruition shallowed up.

PAUL'S PREACHING, AND HOW HE DREW THE PEOPLE.

Traveling, some time ago, in Europe and Asia Minor, I passed several weeks in Athens, and, while there, often visited an old Greek monastery, in which were numbers of old parchments and records of ancient times. Turning them over, one day, I came across some files of the Athenian Ledger, engrossed on parchment at the time the Apostle Paul was preaching in that city; and I found, from its columns, that it was the custom of the philosophers and public teachers of that day to advertise the times and subjects of their lectures and addresses. And for this I was, in a measure, prepared; for I knew the way in which Socrates and Plato were accustomed to announce their teachings.

But, to my surprise, I found, from the columns of the Ledger, that Paul himself was in the habit of advertising the subjects of his sermons, and the times and places when and where he would preach them; for, like not a few modern preachers, he seems to have been determined to draw crowds to hear him, if need be, by the announcement of outre sensational topics. For example, he publishes that at such a time he will preach on the "Size of the Golden Calf;" at another, on "Samson's Hair, and why his Strength was in it;" at another, on "The Tail of the Serpent that Tempted Eve;" at another, on "The Great Pyramid, as Emblamatic of Christ;" at another, on "The Speaking of Balaam's Ass; and the Dialect in which he Spoke;" at another, on "The Spiritual Significance or Clouted Shoes;" at another, on "Courting by Moonlight;" at another, on "The Size of the Whale that Swallowed Jonah;" and at another, on the all-important question "Whether the Axle-trees of Pharoah's Chariots were of Wood or Iron."

And so from day to day, and week to week, the advertisements went on in the columns of the Ledger, very much as they now do in the New York Saturday's Herald, the subjects, for the most part, being similar to those already quoted, and evidently intended to arrest attention and draw the crowd to hear him; for the Athenians, he well knew, as well as the strangers there, were always wide awake for telling or hearing some new thing; and he evidently felt that such topics would draw them to hear him; and then, at the end, he doubtless thought he could top off with some Gospel doctrine or duty, and so turn their thoughts to practical truth. He evidently felt, as some modern preachers do, that the first and great duty of the Gospel minister, like that of a yoke of oxen, was to draw; and to this great end his ingenuity was directed, and his brain asked for topics.

Now and then, too, I found, in the editorial columns of the Ledger, "notices" of the many converts Paul had made, or how large a collection he had taken up, or what an eloquent and masterly discourse he had given, and how the people hung enraptured on his lips. And not a few of the "notices" were so worded as to give the impression that Paul had himself written them, or at least had suggested to the editor the terms in which to eulogize both himself and his work. Of course the Apostle could not have known anything about "Jo Smith," the great Mormon leader; and yet with the same shrewd good sense that marked that distinguished Mormon apostle, he doubtless felt, as the latter said, "If you don't blow your own trumpet, nobody else will be likely to blow it for you!"

As I read these various items and notices, I confess I was astonished, and could scarcely believe my own eyes. But there was the Ledger, right before me, and there the plain items of its columns. In fact, it was so much like many of the secular and religious papers of the present day, that I began to think there surely must be something in the doctrine of Apostolical Succession, and not a few of our modern ministers are but following the example of the great Apostle of the Gentiles, both as to subjects for preaching, and the indirect and round about way of self-praise.

Thinking of this, I turned to the monk who had pointed me to the files of the Ledger, and asked why he supposed the Apostle took such a course as this; for, I said, "common as it is nowadays, I had not expected it in those ancient times, and from a man like the Apostle Paul."

"Well," he replied, "I suppose Paul, like many in modern times, felt that his first great object and duty was to be noticed, and to draw the people, and that if he did not keep announcing subjects, and singular and striking subjects, he would soon be unnoticed and unknown; that this was the only way to keep himself before the people; that 'if he didn't blow his own trumpet, nobody would blow it for him,' and that but for these new and taking topics his audiences would soon dwindle away, and he be left to speak to the empty air."

I was just replying, "Indeed, I wish Paul himself were here for a few moments, that I might ask him if he really thought this the best course to be taken by all preachers," when, just at that moment, a loud sound in the street roused and wakened me, and I found it was all a dream! I had been asleep in my chair. The Bible was open before me, at a chapter in which I had been looking out a text, and as, rubbing my eyes, and looking again at the passage I was reading when slumber had overtaken me, the first words that met my notice were:

"I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ and him crucified. And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power, that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God.—Dr. Tyrone Edwards in the Independent.

ROBERT HALL AS A PREACHER.

Rev. Paxton Hood gives this graphic account of one of Robert Hall's sermons in a village chapel: "We remember to have heard a dear, departed friend tell how, when a boy, he was taken by his father one still summer evening across the Northamptonshire fields—I believe it was to the little town of Thrapstone—to hear Robert Hall. It was one of those old village chapels with the square galleries. As in the instance of Chalmers, the place was crowded with plain farmer folk, and a sprinkling of intelligent ministers and gentry from the neighborhood. The minister came in, a simple, heavy, but still impressive-looking man, one whose presence compelled you to look at him. In due course he announced his text. 'The end of all things is at hand; be sober and watch,' etc. Quite unlike Chalmers, his voice was not shattering, but thin and weak. There was no action at all, or only a kind of nervous twitching of the fingers, more especially as the hand moved and rested upon the lower part of the back, where the speaker was suffering almost incessant pain. As he went on beneath the deepening evening shades falling through the windows of the old chapel, his voice first chained, then charmed and fascinated his hearers, one after another. The whole place seemed as if beneath a spell. As he talked about the 'end' the spell upon the people seemed to begin to work itself out into an awful, fearful restlessness. First one, then another, rose to his feet, and stood stretching forward in a kind of fright and wonder. Still there was no action, only the following on of that thin voice with a marvelous witchery of apt and melodious words; but through them 'the end of all things' sounded like some warning bell. More people arose, stretching forward. Many of those who arose first, as if they felt some strange power upon them—they knew not what—got up and stood upon their seats, until, when the great master ceased, closing his pathetic accents, the whole audience was upon its feet, intensely alive with interest, as if each one had heard in the distance the presages and preludes of the coming end, and felt that it was time to prepare. My friend used to speak of that never-forgotten moment that summer evening in the old chapel, as one of the most memorable in his life."—Christian Secretary.

BIBLE READINGS FOR THE YOUNG.

THE SIN-BEARER. Read Isa. 53.

He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. Isaiah 53: 5.

1. Of whom did the prophet Isaiah thus write? Acts 8: 32–35.
2. When was Jesus wounded for our transgressions? Luke 22: 44; 23: 33; Heb. 12: 2, 3.
3. How could Isaiah, 700 years before, thus describe his sufferings? 1 Pet. 1: 10, 11.
4. In whose room did Jesus live a life of suffering and die on the cross? 1 Pet. 2: 24; Matt. 20: 28; Rom. 5: 8.
5. What great blessings has Christ's death purchased for sinners? Gal. 3: 13, 14; Eph. 1: 7; Rom. 8: 31, 32.
6. How should Christ's people regard sin? 1 Pet. 4: 1, 2; Rom. 6: 2, 11, 12.

WHAT IS THE USE?

An English missionary, in an address at his old school, said he used to wonder what was the use of cramming one's self with Latin and French, and he was told that it had a very fine effect upon the intellect. When he got out to the Congo he was placed in a position which was altogether unforeseen when he was at school, and he had to acquire Portuguese, which was the only means of communication, and he found it very easy to do so after the grounding in Latin he had received there. He had learned French there also, and when he got out to the Congo he found how very useful it was to know something of French. He learned to swim, and that also had been useful to him. He noticed in the school some geological and natural history specimens. On the banks of the Congo he had noticed some fossils, and had said to one gentleman, "I suppose you burn this stone up for lime?" "No," he said, "that is not limestone." He asked one of the Roman Catholic missionaries, and tried to ascertain if he knew anything about limestone, but he appeared to be quite ignorant of it. But he tested a piece of it, and he found that it was limestone. It was a very valuable thing for boys to get a practical knowledge of things about them, and to pay some attention to the geology of the country around them. No one knew the calls that might be made upon them in after life.

You never know, boys, when any knowledge you may possess will come into use.—Illustrated Christian Weekly.

A BOY'S RELIGION.

If a boy is a lover of the Lord Jesus Christ he can't lead a prayer-meeting, or be a church officer, or a preacher, but he can be a godly boy, in a boy's way and in a boy's place. He ought not to be too solemn or too quiet for a boy. He need not cease to be a boy because he is a Christian. He ought to run, jump, play, climb and yell like a real boy. But in it all he ought to show the Spirit of Christ, he ought to be free from vulgarity and profanity. He ought to eschew tobacco in every form, and have a horror of intoxicating drinks. He ought to be peaceable, gentle, merciful, generous. He ought to take the part of small boys against large boys. He ought to discourage fighting. He ought to refuse to be a party of mischief, to persecution, to deceit. And above all things, he ought now and then to show his colors. He need not always be interrupting a game to say he is a Christian; but he ought not to be ashamed to say that he refuses to do something because it is wrong and wicked, or because he fears God or is a Christian. He ought to take no part in the ridicule of sacred things, but meet the ridicule of others with a bold statement that for the things of God he feels the deepest reverence.—Royal Road.

THE HISTORY OF ZERO.

Zero on the common thermometer, like the fanciful names of the constellations, is an instance of the way wise men's errors are made immortal by becoming popular. Zero comes to us through Spanish from the Arabic, and means empty, hence nothing.

In an expression like "90 degrees Fahr.," the abbreviation Fahr. stands for Fahrenheit, a Prussian merchant of Dantzic, on the shores of the Baltic Sea.

His full name was Gabriel Daniel Fahrenheit. From a boy he was a close observer of nature, and when only nineteen years of age, in the remarkably cold winter of 1709, he experimented by putting snow and salt together, and noticed that it produced a degree of cold equal to the coldest day of the year. As that day was the coldest the oldest inhabitant could remember, Gabriel was more struck with the coincidence of his little scientific discovery, and hastily concluded he had discovered the lowest degree of temperature known to the world, either natural or scientific. He called that degree zero, and constructed a thermometer, or rude weather-glass, with a scale graduated up from the zero to the boiling point, which he numbered 212, and the freezing point 32, because, as he thought, mercury contracted the thirty-second of its volume on being cooled down from the temperature of freezing water to zero, and expanded the one hundred and eightieth on being heated from the freezing to the boiling point.

Time showed that this arrangement, instead of being truly scientific, was as arbitrary as the division of the Bible into verses and chapters, and that these two points no more represented the real extremes of of temperature than "from Dan to Beersheba" expressed the exact extremes of Palestine. But Fahrenheit's thermometer had been widely adopted with its own inconvenient scale, and none thought of any better until his name became an authority, for Fahrenheit finally abandoned trade and gave himself up to science. This habit made people cling to the established scale, as habit makes the English cling to the old system of cumberous fractional money. Our nation began to use Fahrenheit's thermometer about the middle of the last century, or not far from the time when old style was exchanged for the new style in the writing of dates.

The three countries which use Fahrenheit are Holland, England and America; Russia and Germany use Reaumer's thermometer, in which the boiling point is 180 degrees above freezing point. France uses the Centigrade thermometer, so marked because it calls the boiling point 100 degrees from freezing point. On many accounts the Centigrade system is the best, and the triumph of convenience will be attained when zero is made the freezing point, and when the boiling point is made 100 or 1,000 degrees from it, and all the subdivisions are fixed decimally. If Fahrenheit had done this at first, or if he had made it one of his many improvements after the public adopted his error, the luck of opportunity, which was really his, would have secured to his invention the patronage of the world.—Our Young People.

SNOW-FLAKES.

How merry and how beautiful
Are the snow-flakes in the air!
As soft, and pure, and noiseless, they,
As an unspoken prayer.
With touches gentle, deft, and light,
They dress the earth in robes of white.

They cover all unlovely sights
With their own loveliness;
And hideous things grow beautiful,
Which they have come to bless.
They hide the world's worst blots away,
So pitiful and tender they!

The dauntless flowers that dared to wait
Until the first snow fell,
Are gently hushed to softest sleep
By friends that love them well;
And, warmly nursed from wind and cold,
Their hearts another Spring-life hold.

The snow-flakes are the children's friends;
Young eyes look out to see,
With wonder and with joyousness,
How white the world can be,
That, dimmed by wrong without, within,
Too often looks as black as sin!

Oh, snow-flakes from your teachings meek
None proudly turns away;
So catch awhile the ears of men,
And now, as always, say
That He, who died for sins of men,
Can wash the foulest white again!

BIBLICAL MOUNTAIN ENIGMA.

90 LETTERS.

41, 20, 21, 10, 6, 2, the mountain upon which the 1, 3, 63, 53, 16, 5, was built.

13, 17, 34, 42, the mountain from which 88, 42, 4, 32, 7, looked over into 36, 8, 24, 12, 23, 33.

27, 30, 44, 26, 47, the mountain from which 36, 42, 88, 41, 35, 48, 14, 88, 40, 66, 11, 49 were given.

36, 46, 29, 41, 55, 57, the scene of the contest between 60, 71, 52, 19, 62, 39, and the 54, 61, 20, 53, 69, 70, 38, 50 of 89, 65, 87, 75.

77, 76, 21, 63, 20, 48, noted for its heavy 56, 85, 9, 64.

2, 42, 61, 3, 89, the mountain upon which 87, 6, 61, 42 48 died.

42, 79, 58, 31, 40, 81, a mountain memorable in the life of Christ.

80, 55, 34, 62, 44, 20, 13, a mountain from which 90, 20, 86, 42, 63, 42, 48, procured the 36. 32, 22, 87, 29, 49, for the 45, 76, 88, 53, 82, 76.

64, 55, 72, 21, a mountain belonging to the descendants of 70, 64, 8, 43.

62, 21, 6, 61, 23, 68, the mountain upon which the 87, 29, 37, rested after the 15, 71, 42, 20, 18.

The mountains, it is said, shall 89, 29, 5, 62, 59, forth into singing.

Joshua cut off 26, 13, 12, 84, 83, 88, 64, from the mountains.

While Elijah stood before the Lord a great and strong 25, 78, 33, 67, rent the mountain.

Moses 89, 29, 42, 51, 5, the 73, 87, 89, 82, 17, 64, of 7, 74, 20, 48, 32 when he came down form the mountain.

28, 23, 31, 83, 14, was often obliged to flee to the mountains to escape from 90, 26, 43, 86.

15, 62, 83, 73, 2, will remove mountnins.

The whole is a beautiful passage in the Psalms.

TEMPERANCE.

SELF-MADE POVERTY.

I would not say hard words against poverty; wherever it comes it is bitter to all; but you will mark, as you notice carefully, that, while a few are poor because of unavoidable circumstances, a very large mass of the poverty of London is the sheer and clear result of profuseness, want of forethought, idleness, and, worse than all, drunkenness. Ah, that drunkenness! that is the master evil. If drink could be got rid of we might be sure of conquering the devil himself. The drunkenness created by the infernal liquor dens which plague-spot the whole of this huge city is appalling. No, I did not speak in haste or let slip a hasty word; many of the drink-houses are nothing less than infernal; in some respects they are worse, for hell has its uses as a divine protest against sin, but, as for a gin palace there is nothing to be said in its favor. The vices of the age cause three-fourths of the poverty. If you could look at the homes to-night, the wretched homes where women will tremble at the sound of their husband's foot when he comes home, where little children will crouch down with fear upon their little heap of straw, because the human brute who calls himself "a man" will come reeling home from the place where he has been indulging his appetite—if you could look at such a sight and remember it will be seen ten thousand times over to-night, I think you will say, "God help us by all means to save some." Since the great ax to lay at the root of this deadly upas is the Gospel of Christ, may God help us to hold that ax there, and to work constantly with it till the huge trunk of the poison tree begins to rock to and fro, and we get it down, and London is saved from the wretchedness and misery which now drips from every bough.—C. H. Spurgeon.

CONCERT OF PRAYER.

The National Woman's Temperance Union, has taken preliminary steps towards securing, in all parts of the world, a concert of prayer for the temperance cause. The noon hour of each day has been designated, ever since the crusade, as a time for individual lifting up of the heart, and now it is suggested that, in addition to this, Thursday afternoon be the time for a temperance prayer meeting, to be held weekly as may be determined in the different localities. Thus, concerted prayer, by women in all nations, for the overthrow of the poison habits of all races, is rendered possible, and we urge attention to this as the very best kind of a beginning. The temperance ladies have consulted with leading missionaries, as well as workers in that great cause, and have found help and encouragement on every hand. They have also appointed Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, of Boston, who has for a year been working on the Pacific coast, under the auspices of the National W. C. T. U., to make a reconnoissance in the Sandwich Islands, Australia, and perhaps India, China, and Japan, visiting the missionaries of those countries and endeavoring to introduce the W. C. T. U. methods, and to provide for a healthful interchange of sympathy and work by which the influence of the Gospel temperance movement shall eventually belt the world. May this earnest gifted Christian lady be abundantly blessed in her Gospel embassy, and find a welcome in the hearts and homes of Christians everywhere.—Union Signal.

The Local Option Liquor-License bill has been defeated in the Vermont Legislature by a vote of 123 nays to 72 yeas.

LITERATURE.

THE FALLACIES IN, "PROGRESS AND POVERTY;" in Henry Dunning Macleod's "Economics;" and in "Social Problems" with the Ethics of Protection and Free-Trade and the Industrial Problems a priori. By William Hanson. Price $1.00. Fowler, Wells & Co., Publishers, New York.

The author, while in hearty sympathy with the advanced views of the great land reformer on the subject of private property in land, carries his principles to their consistent logical conclusion and makes a clean sweep of rent, interest, and profits. He holds with Adam Smith that "The produce of labor is the natural reward or wages of labor."

"Wealth is measured by work not by money." "The Universe is priceless, and commercially valueless." Land, like air, water, sunshine, is part of the universe, hence is like its whole, priceless. What man makes he may properly own, and only that. To claim that land may be sold and monopolized is to claim that God brings men into existence without making provisions to sustain their life. The rock on which Henry George foundered was Mill's "unearned increment" which has no existence in reality and cannot be justly taxed. Only the product of work can be justly taxed.

The only remedy for the admitted and terrible oppressions under which the toiling millions groan, is a return to the requirements of God's Word, that strictly forbids the sale of land and the taking of usury or increase. Demand does not constitute value, as Macleod claims, but work does. Demand does not even fix the price; monopoly and competition do that. Economics as heretofore taught is based in the most sordid selfishness. The science will only be rightly based when it becomes thoroughly Christianized in its foundation principles.

Neither protection nor free trade give promise of good to the worker. In a country where land is dear and money and labor cheap, it is to the interest of the manufacturer to have free trade so that he can undersell his competitors, especially in the world's market. Where land is cheap, and money and labor dear it is the interest of the manufacturer to have protection, so that he may make his own countrymen pay an exorbitant price for his wares. In either case when competition has brought down the price so that he cannot make the profits he desires, a per cent. is taken from the wages of labor. This process has gone on in free trade England and protected America till, when you consider the value of money in the two countries, there is but little difference in the actual wages paid, and when America has had protection as long as England has had free trade her toilers will be worse off than those of the mother country.

The above are some of the teachings of this timely work. While pursuing strictly the scientific method the author views the subject from the Christian standpoint. When Christian thought is generally turned to the injustice that underlies the whole social and economic fabric, ministers will not need to wonder how to reach the masses.

Whoever wishes the most advanced thought on the all important questions discussed, needs this book. O. F. L.

The Century for January, aside from its illustrated papers, contains articles of importance to a wide range of readers. Chief among these in timeliness is the status of the negro at the South, which Mr. George W. Cable treats with much plainness of speech and much suggestiveness, in a paper entitled "The Freedman's Case in Equity," which is likely to attract attention and give rise to discussion North and South, as Mr. Cable writes frankly accepting the changed condition of affairs since the abolition of slavery. The same theme is touched upon, less directly, in an editorial article, "A Grave Responsibility," and in an "Open Letter" from a "Southern Democrat." Another subject of wide interest is "Christianity and Popular Amusements," by Washington Gladden, who supplements his own suggestions with an account and commendation of an experiment on the part of the Cleveland Educational Bureau to supply wholesome entertainment to working men. Other practical topics briefly handled are, "The Trouble with the Stage," "The Degradation of Politics," Co-operative Studies," "Political Work for Young Men," "The Recent Legal Tender Decision," "Women's Clubs," "The Newspaper and the Organ." The first of the illustrated papers is a continuation of Mrs. M. G. Van Rensselaer's papers on Recent Architecture in America, the principles of church building being now under review. The illustrations are chiefly of some of the notable edifices of New England, and include three views of the now famous Trinity church, Boston. "The Making of a Museum" is the title of a paper by Ernest Ingersoll, with a number of pictures, setting forth the comprehensive plans of arrangement and classification employed at the National Museum at Washington. Of the papers on the Civil War there are two, both dealing with the Western gun-boats; one by Captain James B. Eads, who built them; and the other by Rear-Admiral Walke, descriptive of their operations at Belmont, Fort Henry, Fort Donelson, Island No. 10, Fort Pillow and Memphis—covering, in short, the opening of the upper Mississippi. The February number will contain General Grant's paper on Shiloh, together with supplementary material describing the battle from the Confederate point of view.

St. Nicholas has a bright winter number that will glow under many an evening lamp. Fifty illustrations, all showing the work of careful artists, adorn the pages. Among the goblin stories and other stuff there is useful reading for the young folks in "Among the Law-makers," "Stories of Art and Artists," "O Uncle Phillip!" "On an Ice Yacht," and "Wonderful Elephants."

The Missionary Review opens its first number for 1885 with an article on "Ceylon and its Missions." Then follow: "Bishop Taylor and his Transit Fund," letters discussing the all important question, "Why is the World's Evangelization Delayed?" "The Evangelical Alliance at Copenhagen," "The Inter-State Missionary Alliance," "Work among the Old Armenians," etc., with an extended and able critical review of the foreign missionary work of the Presbyterian and Lutheran bodies.

Vick's Illustrated Magazine, for December, is unusually interesting. Besides the beautiful colored plate, which in this issue is a group of Double Dahlias, there are forty pages of just such reading as those interested in flowers and gardening generally will enjoy. Among the articles of special interest we may name "A Californian Outing," "Grafting the Grape," "Azalea and Cape Jasmine," "Irrigation," "Pruning Roses," "Culture of Celery," and the department of "Our Young People" has a beautiful poem by Margaret Eyetinge, and an illustrated poem, "King Frost," by Mrs. Whittemore. For the long winter evenings we can conceive of no more profitable reading for those who desire to gain knowledge of the culture of flowers; and, indeed, of everything pertaining to the garden, it may be summed up as a compendium of useful information.

General Butler is going to repair his fortunes by writing a book. During the late campaign, it is said, his expenses took some $240,000 out of his large wealth. He has signed a contract to write his reminiscences. A Massachusetts gentleman, who is believed to have trustworthy information, says that Butler is to have $50,000 and a small royalty, and the publishers are a New York firm. The General will make two volumes, and go back to antibellum politics, confining himself to events which he witnessed, and in which he took no small part.

THE CHURCHES.

—Elder U. D. Lathrop, formerly of Viola, Mercer county, Ill., has been engaged with Elder Rathbun in revival labors near Kellerton, Iowa, and has organized a Wesleyan class.

—Rev. H. A. Day, late State agent for Michigan, writes encouragingly to the Wesleyan of his Gospel work: "A glorious revival is in progress on Ingham charge, at the church in Locke. I am preaching against Freemasonry, skating-rinks, worldly conformity, etc., and sinners are being convicted and converted, and the church most wonderfully quickened."

—The North Carolina Wesleyan conference meeting in Guilford county, Dec. 2d, was attended by Dr. J. E Roy of the American Missionary Asso. and our old friend, Mrs. Laura S. Haviland of Englewood, Ill. Dr. Roy preached two sermons before the conference, and urged that the body maintain a strong fiight against the spirit of caste.

—A Jerry McAuley mission for Detroit, Mich., was opened in that city on November 26th. It is an undenominational mission, established in a building which was formerly the Jefferson Avenue Methodist church, and was purchased by Mr. Charles Funke, for the mission, and was also the ground on which the church stands, at the corner of St. Aubins Avenue and Sherman street.

—Major Whittle and Mr. and Mrs. McGrannahan stopped in Dayton, Ohio, on their way from the Christian Convention at Cincinnati. They conducted services in the Third Street Presbyterian church, which was crowded by anxious hearers. They begin services at Jackson, Michigan, early this month.

—The Faith Missions, which began from Oberlin with one missionary, Albert Norton, less than ten years ago, now shows the following list: Mrs. Anna V. Mumford, Miss Eunice Knapp, and Mrs. M. B. Willard, Bulgarian Faith Mission, at Philippopolis, Eastern Roumelia; Rev. M. B. Fuller and wife, Akote Faith Mission, in Central India; Rev. Albert Norton and wife, Central India Faith Mission, at Baitool in the Central Province.

Contributions to these missionaries may be sent to Dea. O. M. Brown, editor of the Faith Missionary, Oberlin, who will acknowledge each receipt, and forware the same to its destination free of cost, except the cost of transmission.

—Robert Shemeld and wife, of Minneapolis, who have given themselves to the work of the Gospel in Central Africa, will spend the winter season in Henry Grattan Guinness' Training School in London. They will be joined in the spring by W. W. Kelley and others. The Free Methodist Missionary Board purposes raising $1,000 for these missionaries.

—Of the 292 churches connected with the different missions of the American Board, 139 are self-supporting—13 out of 16 in Africa, 15 out of 22 in Japan, 43 out of 71 in India, 23 out of 105 in the Turkish Empire, 45 in Micronesia; or, if we include the 56 churches in the Hawaiian Islands, set off as independent more than twenty years ago, we have 195 out of 248 as self-supporting.

—According to recent statisties, 2,336 workers from Christendom are being supported in their labors abroad by American churches. Exclusive of native helpers, the Presbyterian church North, maintains 445 missionaries; the Methodist Episcopal church, North, 279 missionaries; the American Baptist Missionary Union, 190 missionaries; and the Moravian church, 284 missionaries. Nearly every other denomination has some representation abroad, but those named lead in numbers. The entire missionary income of all the societies is $3,420,613, of which $233,595.92 is required to meet the expenses of the home management. The number of native communicants in the foreign churches is 248,079, being 25,173 more than reported one year previous.

—Dr. R. C. Trench, Archbishop of Dublin, has been compelled by ill-health to resign his position. His writings, both in poetry and prose, have made his name familiar in this country as well as in England. As pariochal clergyman, professor of divinity, Dean of Westminster, and Primate of Ireland, he has borne himself in such a manner as to win the respect and love of Non-Conformists as well as the members of his own church. He has given away a large part of his official income, and now, on retiring, surrenders the whole, though under the circumstances of his retirement, he would be entitled to retain it.

—The following cable despatch from London has been received by the Boston Journal: An astonishing case of devotion to the cause of foreign missions has just occurred in London. A gentleman cricketer, Mr. Studd, who is a member of the first Surrey Eleven, recently inherited an enormous fortune, which had been left him by a relative, and was given to him, according to the terms of the will, when he was twenty-five years of age. He has now given the whole of the fortune to a foreign mission society, and is himself going to China to labor as a missionary.

—One of the missionaries, speaking of the need of more men in the Congo Mission, says: "Would that young men at home knew what golden, glorious opportunities there are on the Congo! To-day we can present the Gospel to simple unprejudiced folk. We have no civilization to contend with. Commercial men have their eyes open to the advantages of the Congo. Mr. Stanley speaks confidently of a railway as soon as the Free State of equatorial Africa is recognized by the Powers. Our friends of the International Association will be glad to render us any further help. The way is open, the path made straight, the people willing to receive us, and everything is prosperous and hopeful in the extreme. Everything seems ready but the men. Where are they?"

RELIGIOUS TOLERATION PROCLAIMED IN CUBA.

The "Royal Order Circular" of the king of Spain, bearing date October 23d, 1876, which decreed religious toleration in Spain, did not include the dependencies of Cuba and Porto Rico. But the leaven which had worked thus at home, was sure to be felt in due time at the extremities. This came to pass on August 6th last, when the Governor-General received a dispatch from the Minister of the Colonies at Madrid, formally notifying him of the extension of the Royal Order decreeing religious toleration over Cuba and Porto Rico. This truly royal step forward seems largely due to the efforts of one Sen. Pedro Duarte, who after obtaining a commission from our American Bible Society, and the official countenance of Bishop Stevens of the Episcopal church, set himself diligently to the dissemination of the truth in his native city of Matanzas. He did not disguise his functions as "a Christian missionary," nor fail to claim his rights under the revised statutes of Spain. Collision was of course inevitable, and the complaint of the Roman Catholic vicar of Matanzas, that "there has been a demonstration in said meetings of a mode of worship practiced by various Christian sects, which demonstration in the opinion of the ecclesiastical authority of Matanzas, tends to propagate doctrines contrary to the religion of the State, which is Catholic," came before the Madrid government in due form, and has proved the occasion of this recent formal extension of religious liberty. This royal decree of simple justice, so patiently waited for by all Protestants concerned, and so persistently resisted by the Romish ecclesiastics, while in one section proclaiming "the Roman Catholic Apostolic religion as official," in the other "refers to the religious opinions of all outside the body of that church—permitting the exercise of any other worship which is not opposed to Christian morals." The significant conclusion reached is thus set forth: "It is therefore plain that the State protects the Catholic religion as its own; but at the same time it establishes the toleration of other forms of worship, guaranteeing the right to exercise those forms of worship against all kinds of aggression whatever. By these official declarations "the free exercise of religious worship is permitted in Spain to all its inhabitants, whether they be nationals or foreigners."

The last is very important, and as yet not quite true in reality—the government, as often happens, being in advance of its own ecclesiastics and their ignorant and superstitious adherents. But obviously a better day has come to Spain and to its dependencies on our American coast, and we trust, now that the way is open to the inhabitants of the latter, laborers in sufficient numbers may enter into the long waiting harvest.—New York Evangelist.

THE

CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS,

OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by E. E. FLAGG, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. In cloth, $1; per doz., $9. Paper. 50c; per doz., $4.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

"Our Anti-secret society friends are certainly entitled to great credit for their persistence in their efforts to expose and root out secretism. The object of the writer of this story is to present in its true light the crafty, unscrupulous and exceedingly hurtful influence of Masonry, the parent of all the orders."—Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter.

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

IN THE COILS; —OR— The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)
"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)
"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)
"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.
"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.
"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)
"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

WEBSTER'S PRACTICAL A NEW DEPARTURE IN DICTIONARIES.

An Industrial Revolution.—In a large Connecticut manufacturing establishment there is in operation a new style of furnace which produces more steam-power from a consumption of 1,000 lbs of coal than can be generated from 20,000 lbs burned in the ordinary way. In other words, the new contrivance already saves nineteen-twentieths of the fuel, and it is believed that before being publicly announced it will be so improved that the saving will reach 49 fiftieths! The facts already developed are simply incredible to one who has not actually seen them verified.

A Remarkable Coincidence.—While the new Furnace was in process of construction, the editors and publishers of Webster's Unabridged were engaged upon their new work which is as great an improvement upon all previous Dictionary productions, and just as valuable in its way as is the incredible fuel economizer above alluded to. Webster's Practical is not only a new compilation by the leading Dictionary House of the world, but it embodies several new features which, for ordinary use, render it pre-eminent among dictionaries—not excepting even the Unabridged.

1st, Condensation—By grouping all derivative and compound words under their root or leader (as in the "Book" example quoted below), such words are adequately treated in one-third of the space required by the old arrangement. By this means nearly all the desirable material of the four and five-dollar dictionaries is presented in a convenient and handy form in Webster's Practical.

2d, Association.—We comprehend as well as remember things chiefly by their associations. For this reason any one who shall carefully read the "Book" paragraph which we reproduce from Webster's Practical Dictionary, will not only comprehend it more readily, but will be able to remember two or three times as much as would be gained by reading about the same words when treated separately as in other works.

3d, Ready Reference.—Not only do we comprehend and remember more readily by the new grouping method, but we do it in less than a fourth of the time required when the words are classified in the old way. Hence, no one who values time would hesitate to pay one dollar for Webster's Practical rather than accept the best of the older dictionaries as a gift.

4th, Derivative Terminations.—Only the larger dictionaries hitherto published give the derivative terminations. The New American Dictionary, for instance, does not give any of the four varintions of so common a word as forbear, while they are all given in Webster's Practical.

5th, The Illustrations in Webster's Practical are more numerous and better executed than those of any other abridged or low-priced dictionary.

6th, Prefixes and Suffixes.—Another important feature of Webster's Practical is its peculiar treatment of prefixes and suffixes, which is believed to be more desirable than a separate department of two or three hundred pages which is sometimes allotted to them.

7th, Compendium Matter.—Still another invaluable feature of Webster's Practical is its compendium matter, over one hundred pages of which is devoted to the most complete Pronouncing Vocabulary ever compiled of Biblical, Classical, Mythological, Historical and Geographical Proper names. With Webster's Practical Dictionary at hand, one need not be at a loss to correctly pronounce or spell the most difficult words.

8th, An Invaluable Book.—The importance of supplying every child with Webster's Practical for his very own, is not generally appreciated. As an educator it is worth a hundred times its price, and a little self-denial to provide one or more copies in every family will prove a better economy than an endowment of hoarded bank-stocks later on in life.

The following paragraph is reproduced from Webster's Practical.

Book, bŏŏk, n. A collection of sheets of paper, etc., bound together; a literary composition, written or printed; a subdivision of a literary work. (Mer.) A volume in which accounts are kept. — v. t. [BOOKED (bŏŏkt), BOOKING.] To enter, or register in a book. — Book'ish, a. Given to reading; more acquainted with books than with men. — Book'binder, n. One who binds books. — -bind'ery, n. A place for binding, etc. — -bind'ing, n. Art or practice of, etc. — -case, n. A case with shelves for holding books. (Bind.) A book-cover. — -cov'er, n. (Bind.) A case for a book; a cover of cloth or other material prepared for casing a book. — -keep'er, n. One who keeps accounts. — -keep'ing, n. Art of recording mercantile transactions and keeping accounts. — -learned, lĕrnd, a. Versed in books; ignorant of life. — -learn'ing, n. Learning acquired by reading,—esp. as opp. to practical knowledge. — -mak'er, n. One who writes and publishes books; a compiler; a sporting man who makes a record of bets. — -mak'ing, n. The practice of, etc.; compilation; systematized betting. — -mark, n. Something placed in a book by which to find a particular place. — -plate, n. A label indicating ownership, place in a library, etc., usually on the inside of the cover of a book. — -post, n. The post-office arrangement by which books are mailed. — -sell'er, n. One who sells books. — -shelf, n. A shelf to hold books. — -shop, -stall, -store, n. A place for selling books. — -stand, n. A stand for selling books in the streets; book-stall; a support to hold books. — -worm, n. A worm or mite that eats holes in books; one excessively addicted to study.

THE QUANTITY TEST.

(The following exhibits are from the texts of the dictionaries named).

Webster's Practical Dictionary, ($1) 600,000 Words and 1,400 Illustrations.
New American Dictionary, ($1) 240,000, Words and 116 Illustrations.
National Popular Dictionary, ($1) 240,000, Words and 116 Illustrations.
National Standard Dictionary, ($1) 210,000 Words and 612 Illustrations.

Quality Test.—Aside from all advantages above alluded to, there is still another and very important feature of the new work to be considered, viz.: its quality as compared with the cheap dictionaries which have had the largest sales, and which have been compiled chiefly from the old editions of Webster on which the copyrights have expired. Hence Webster's Practical contains more matter than any other dollar dictionary. Its quality, to say the least, is the very best, while its arrangement and all other new and desirable features, including first-class illustrations, paper, printing and binding are added without extra charge.

A Subscription Book.—As Webster's Practical is not for sale at book-stores, our readers will be able to procure it only from canvassing agents, unless it be ordered in connection with this journal in accordance with our special offers.

FARM NOTES.

TREATMENT OF BREEDING FOWLS.

About the first of January pick out from the flock of hens six or eight of the most persistent layers, selecting such as are of good size, well formed, lively in appearance and docile, and place them in the breeding apartment. Supply them with the food, water, etc., they have been accustomed to, and place one of the cocks with them. The third day remove that cock and admit the other, and continue to change about every three or four days. Twenty days after shutting them up the eggs may be saved for hatching, and ninety-five per cent will prove fertile and produce strong, healthy chicks. When a steady, quiet, motherly hen appears among the flock, she should be kept for hatching and brooding chickens as long as she lives. Such a hen will set faithfully wherever she may be placed. Provide a loose box; line it with beaten straw; give her seventeen eggs and set the box on a low shelf, or where she will not be troubled by other hens. Mark her time on a card and attach it to the box. As the chickens are hatched remove them as soon as dry. When all are out place the hen in a small coop and return the brood to her.—American Agriculturist.

PROVIDE GREEN FOOD FOR POULTRY.

Green food is fully as essential for poultry in winter as in summer. Their confinement to dry food during the continuance of cold weather goes far to account for the scarcity of eggs at that season of the year. Fresh winter eggs are always in demand, and bring a good price in every market. Hens, like cows, should be producers as well as consumers during the cold months of winter. Farmers, as well as fanciers, should have a supply of green food safely stored away for the winter use of the poultry. Fowls are not very particular as to the kind; they readily eat celery, tops of onions, turnips, lettuce, cabbage and apples. If such supplies have to be purchased, it is cheaper to buy one or two hundred heads of cabbages of second quality, which can be had at a low figure in autumn or early in the season. These should be delivered with their roots, and buried up to the head in sand in the cellar. Hang a head in some convenient place in the house where the fowls can pick at it.—American Agriculturist.

MORE EGGS IN WINTER.

This is the very time when eggs are worth the most, when hens want to lay as much or more than they do at any other time, and when they are not allowed to do so by most poultry keepers. Folks think there is a great mystery about making hens lay in winter. There is none; anybody can do it; that is, the hens will lay if you let them. They bear a good deal of cold in the sunshine, and even freeze their combs and toes, and yet will not stop laying altogether if they can sleep warm. Now do not begin to plan setting up a stove in the hen house, or introducing steam pipes. Artificial heat is not poisonous perhaps, but very nearly so to chickens. They are warm themselves, and need only to be crowded on their roosts, with the roosts all on one level. The ceiling of the roosting room should be only a few feet above the fowls' heads, and provided with ventilation from the floor if possible. Give them very close quarters, with no drafts of cold air, and clean out every morning. The combs will then redden up, and eggs will be plenty on less feed than usual. It must not be corn, however, or only a small percentage of it, for this will make them too fat to lay well if they sleep warm.—American Agriculturist.

WILMINGTON, Ill., Dec. 3.—Charles Powers bet Cornelius McManus that he could not husk into wagons 115 bushels of corn, seventy five pounds to the bushel, in ten hours. Mr. McManus began at 6 o'clock this morning, and at 3 o'clock this afternoon had husked 118 bushels and won his bet. The affair aroused interest for miles around and the feat was witnessed by a large crowd.

IN BRIEF.

A few nights ago a field of dry sage on the battlefield of Missionary Ridge became ignited and soon the flames were spreading with lightning rapidity. A stump standing in the battlefield blazed up and in a few seconds a roar like thunder reverberated down the valley, and the stump was blown into 10,000 pieces. Investigation developed the fact that three shells were imbedded in the stump and exploded from the heat.

News comes from Suez that the oldest and most celebrated dealer in wild animals in the world, Bernhard Kohn, died in Kassala at the beginning of August last in his seventy-second year. Mr. Kohn was the first to import animals into Europe direct from Nubia. Quite lately he had procured a large number of giraffes, lions, antelopes, ostriches, monkeys, etc., and had them brought to Kassala. For eight months Kassala has been besieged by the adherents of the Mahdi, and since the death of Mr. Kohn, the Murdir of Taka has been in great embarrassment to know what to do with all the animals. It was thought probable that they would be slaughtered by the inhabitants, who were said to be in danger of famine.

George C. Pyle, a young man living at Dayton, O, has invented an electric headlight for locomotives, of which a trial was recently given between Akron and Cleveland. The light streamed full and clear, far ahead of the engine, illuminating the track to fully half a mile in advance. So powerful was it that small birds were disturbed from their roosting places. The dynamo that furnishes the light is a small affair fastened to the footboard of the engine on the left side and directly in front of the cab. It is run by a three horse power rotary engine fastened between it and the cab, the steam power being derived from the boiler of the engine. The light is equivalent to that which would be derived from 2 000 candles. The power necessary to run the dynamo will not exceed one and one-half horse power.

THINGS WORTH KNOWING.—That Martin VanBuren is the only man who held the office of President, Vice-President, Minister to England, Governor of his own State and member of both houses of Congress.

Thomas H. Benton is the only man who held a seat in the United States Senate for thirty consecutive years.

The only instance of father and son in the Senate at the same time is that of Hon. Henry Dodge, senator from Wisconsin, and Augustus C. Dodge, Senator from Iowa.

General James Shields is the only man who represented two States in the United States Senate. At one time he was Senator from Illinois, and subsequently Senator from Minnesota.

John Quincy Adams held position under the government during every administration from that of Washington to that of Polk—during which he died. He had been minister to England, member of both houses of Congress, Secretary of State and President of the United States. He died while member of the House of Representatives.

HE FORGOT TO ASK.—A good story was told at the Scoville House in Waterbury during the settlement of a number of election bets. During the Polk campaign much interest was taken in Waterbury in the result, and party strife ran high between Whigs and Democrats. Waterbury was only a little village at that time and had no railroad communication. It was also before the days of the telegraph, and a number of politicians made up a purse and hired Col. Richard Welton, proprietor of the New Haven stage line, to make a special trip to New Haven and get the returns. The crowd waited anxiously on the tavern steps all through the afternoon of the day of Col. Welton's trip, and when he came in sight, with horses smoking from their long drive, he stood up in his wagon and called to the expectant crowd:

"New York's gone 5,000!"

"For whom?" arose on every side.

The Colonel jumped from his wagon, hesitated a moment, scratched his head and then blurted out: "Well, I swan, I forgot to ask."

The feelings of the politicians can be better imagined than described.—New Haven News.

Paper covers, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen. 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen. $1.25

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New-Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and TENDENCY OF FREEMASONRY. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Masonry. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the InITIATE. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry Contrary to the ChrisTIAN RELIGION. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each: per dozen. 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 DeGREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen 75 cents.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the RePUBLIC, with signs of recognition, passwords, etc. and the ritual of the Machinists and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated, A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret trades-union of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev W. W. Geeslin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order, and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the Subordinate Temple, and the degrees of Love, Purity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen $2.00.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, gripe, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00

Five Rituals Bound Together. "Oddfellowship Illustrated" (old work), "Knights of Pythias Illustrated," "Good Templarism Illustrated," "Exposition of the Grange" and "Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic," are sold bound together in Cloth for $1.00; per doz., $9.00

Rituals and Secrets Illustrated. Composed of "Temple of Honor Illustrated," "Adoptive Masonry Illustrated," "United Sons of Industry Illustrated," and "Secret Societies Illustrated." $1.00 each; per dozen, $9.00.

SERMONS AND ADDRESSES.

Sermon on Secretism, by Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen. 50 cents

Prof. J. G. Carson, D. D., on Secret SOCIETIES. A most convincing argument against fellowshiping Freemasons in the Christian church. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

A Masonic Conspiracy, Resulting in a fraudulent divorce, and various other outrages upon the rights of a defenseless woman. Also the account of a Masonic murder, by two eye-witnesses. By Mrs. Louisa Walters. This is a thrillingly interesting, true narrative. 20 cents each; per dozen $2 00

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elder M S Newcomer and Elder G W. Wilson, a Royal Arch Mason. This discussion was first published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate 25 cents each; per doz $2.00.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and CHURCH. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15 cents each, per dozen, $1 25.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. J. Day Brownlee. In reply to a Masonic Oration by Rev. Dr. Mayer, Wellsville, Ohio. An able Sermon by an able man. 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents.

History Nat'l Christian Association. Its origin, objects, what it has done and aims to do, and the best means to accomplish the end sought; the Articles of Incorporation, Constitution and By-laws of the Association. 25c. each, per doz. $1.50.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

COUNTRY.

Last Wednesday evening the tug Admiral exploded her boiler in the south branch of the Chicago river killing four men—all on board. Two of the bodies have not yet been found.

The Baltimore & Ohio and the Mutual Union telegraph lines have reduced rates between Chicago, Cincinnati and New York to 15 cents for ten words and one cent for each additional word; between Chicago and most other large cities, 20 cents for ten words.

From the Northwest the coldest weather of the season was reported Thursday night. At Duluth 40 below zero; at Bismarck 45; St. Paul 50; Winnepeg 55, and a blizzard blowing.

Information has been received at Washington that the $100,000 necessary to pay Vanderbilt's claim on Gen. Grant has been raised. The money has been so fixed that none of the creditors of the firm of Grant & Ward can touch it. It has also been reliably ascertained that Gen. Grant will receive annually $15,000 from the Jones annuity fund, raised some years ago. This cannot be touched by his creditors, either.

A circular of the Pennsylvania Coal Company announces an average reduction of 25 cents per ton in the price of coal after Jan. 1.

Scientific experiments pursued at Baltimore, Washington and Wheeling have shown that the hog cholera is a bacillus, capable of reproducing its kind, and that cattle can be inoculated for pluro-pneumonia and Texas fever.

Without cause, John L. Sullivan, the pugilist, beat and kicked into insensibility in a Boston saloon, Tuesday, a waiter-girl named Rose Booth. Sullivan was intoxicated at the time, and as a balm for the woman's serious injuries, offers to pay her doctor bill.

Near Blakesburg, Ia., a band of masked men seized Pleasant Anderson, Monday night, hurried him into a school-house, where a mock trial was indulged in, the sentence being death. They then hanged him to a tree. A year ago Anderson was acquitted of the murder of Chris McAllister, but a feeling prevailed in the community that he was guilty, and the lynching was the result.

President-elect Cleveland has finished up his gubernatorial business, has written his resignation, and on the 6th will give up the executive chamber at Albany to Lieut.-Gov. Hill.

Bristol tunnel, three miles south of New Lexington, O., on the Newark and Shawnee branch of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, was discovered Friday morning to be on fire at both ends. Large quantities of hay and other combustible materials, saturated with coal oil, had been placed in the tunnel and ignited, the incendiaries firing upon the night watchman and frightening him away. The roof of the tunnel is heavily timbered, and there are solid walls of coal on each side. This is now all on fire and three or four hundred feet of the tunnel has caved in.

The car-driver strikers at New Orleans on Monday threw cars off the track and maltreated the drivers, and a number of arrests were made. In the evening an agreement was effected and the strike ended by the men receiving an advance of $5 per month.

Throughout Arkansas the bayous and rivers are over their banks, flooding the country for miles. Railway tracks are under water, and bridges have been weakened, thus retarding travel. In the White River Valley plantations are submerged and stock has been drowned.

Four young men mixed alcohol with their oyster stews at Mt. Pleasant, Pa., Saturday night. Two died in great agony; the others will recover.

Police Lieutenant Mullen, of Cincinnati, was sentenced in the United States Court to twelve months' imprisonment for arresting a number of voters and preventing them from voting at the October election.

Five mines of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Company, near Scranton, Pa., have stopped on account of the dullness in the coal trade. The Delaware and Hudson Company suspended eight of their mines. It is estimated that 10,000 men will be idle in the Lehigh and Lackawanna valleys.

The United States Consul at Pasa Del Norte, Mex., reports to the Department of State that Mexico is passing through a period of great financil depression; that drouth has prevailed in many States, crops have failed, stock has died, all of which have caused a bad year for business.

FOREIGN.

December 29th was Premier Gladstone's 75th birthday, and the occasion was celebrated with great festivity at Hawarden. Birthday greetings reached the great leader from all parts of the empire. The Prince of Wales sent cordial congratulations. Many liberal bodies took advantage of the day to present to "the grand old man" addresses of continued confidence and profound admiration. The newspapers, without distinction of party, devoted leading articles to the eulogy of the great statesman.

A dynamite explosion occurred on the underground railway between Gower st. and King's Cross station, London, Friday evening The windows of a passing train were shattered aud the gaslight extinguished. The passengers were greatly terrified but no one was hurt. On the street and in the houses the shock was very heavy.

The Russian government has proposed a plan for the settlement of the Egyptian question, which will probably be acceptable to France, viz, that the new loan be guaranteed by all the powers at a small reduction of interest, any surplus obtained to be divided among the creditors, and that the British withdraw from Egypt at a fixed date.

A portion of the roof of the theater at Cholet, France, collapsed during a performance. There were about 1,000 persons in the house. The lights were extinguished and screams and groans filled the air. About 150 persons were wounded, some, it is feared, fatally.

A dispatch from Vienna says a severe earthquake shock was experienced in the province of Carinthia, Dec. 29. Considerable damage was done to buildings. An earthquake was felt at Tarvis, and vicinity, Sunday night, violent shocks occurring at intervals of an hour.

Shocks of earthquake in Spain continue at Jaen, Malaga, Benamargosa and Velez-Malaga. Shocks occurred at Terro on Wednesday and Thursday, destroying more buildings. The town is completely abandoned. It is estimated that 3,500 persons have been killed and millions of property destroyed. A number of towns and villages are completely destroyed and deserted. Many persons sleep in railway carriages. A royal decree has been issued that a national subscription be made for the relief of the sufferers. Public officials have agreed to contribute one day's pay each. In this way $200,000 will be raised.

Gen. Wolsely has received a small piece of paper with Gen. Gordon's genuine seal on the back, dated Dec. 14, saying that Khartoum is all right. A dispatch has been received from the Murdir saying that an Arab from the Mahdi's camp had arrived at Dongola, with information that the rebels have repeatedly attacked Omdurman, but were repulsed with heavy loss.

The bill regulating inter-State commerce, drawn by Reagan of Texas, passed the House Thursday. As the Senate has a bill of its own on the same subject which it prefers, the two are unlikely to come together. There are some features of the measure to be noticed. The commercial lines to be regulated are largely in the North or owned here, while the bill and its support comes from the South. During its passage O'Hara, a colored member from South Carolina, moved an amendment that no distinction should be made on account of race or color in passenger transportation. To the consternation of the Democratic members it passed; and only after three days of filibustering was the bill shaped in conformity to the color line.

The Fenian business had a most unexpected exposition last Friday in New York. A man, whose blood poured from a half dozen stabs, staggered down a stairway and sunk upon the walk. Two or three others ran away and one was brought back by the police. The prostrate man roused with an oath and shot twice at the prisoner, wounding him. These were members of the O'Donovan Rossa gang of Irish dynamiters. The stabbing was done in Rossa's office, and the victim was Phelan of Kansas City, celebrated among the Irish Nationalists on both sides of the ocean. So far as the press is able to get at the facts, Phelan has been divulging some of the secrets of the order, respecting the attempted destruction of a British ship on which it was supposed the informer Carey was embarked. He claims to have been enticed to New York and the attempted assassination was the punishment the secret gang judged his weak tongue deserved.

The National Committee of the Prohibition party met in New York last Thursday to discuss plans for future campaigns. A declaration of purposes and policy was made, setting forth that the grand controlling object of the party is the suppression of the liquor traffic; that the party will make no compromise of its principles by coalition with any other political party, and that the Prohibition party has no confidence that either the Republican or Democratic party will legislate for or administer government in behalf of citizens so as to secure them in their just rights by the legal destruction of the liquor crime. The prohibition of the liquor traffic it declares to be a national issue to be consummated by amendment to the Federal Constitution. The committee also recommended that $10,000 be raised to employ Gov. St. John in lecturing. St. John, however, is ahead of the committee. He lately said that his engagements were made already, reaching almost to the summer season.

The story of the St. John bribery, told with such minuteness of detail by Clarkson of Des Moines, member of the Republican National Committee, and McCullagh of the St. Louis Globe Democrat, is unravelling itself. St. Johnhas denied it in whole and particular, and both friends and foes believe him. It transpires that members of the Republican committee were approached by the notorious "Jim" Legate of Kansas, who offered for the sum of $25,000 to get St. John, without the knowledge of the latter to withdraw from the canvass or shape it so as not to injure Blaine. As Legate could give no guaranty for St. John which would satisfy the committee, he could not make the trade, and returned to Kansas in disgust. Legate has long been in Kansas politics. He was denounced by Charles Sumner in the Senate and his appointment as governor of Washington Territory by President Grant was not confirmed; and he was concerned in the infamous treachery by which Senator Pomeroy was defeated in 1873.

There is much that is hopeful for the morals of our great cities in the frequent protests against the shameless pandering to depravity in theatrical, circus and other advertisements. Among these disprovals, the following from the Catholic Review is one of the strongest that has appeared in print: "Of late, however, we are smitten with an unusually violent epidemic of this public indecency. There is scarcely a space vacant for advertising purposes that is without some pictured vileness forcing itself on public attention and purposely pandering to vicious tastes. Even merchants who advertise articles that in themselves are innocent enough have been seized with a mania of using corrupt means to urge their sale. Theatrical advertising has long been noted for its pictorial indecency. But now the stage is left behind by the tobacconist, the flour merchant, the shoemaker, the wine merchant, the insurance agencies—in a word, every department of public business and of commerce is being invaded by the advertising fiend; and art prostitutes itself to this purpose. The artists who were formerly relegated to the distinctly immoral pictorial sheets now find a ready market for their vicious pencils and imaginations in hundreds of presumably respectable firms. The decent eye cannot rove over any public space without being offended. From thousands of store windows indecency stares out unabashed, whilst the letter press of certain portions of some of the most widely-circulated journals, more especially in the Sunday editions, is absolutely given over to advertising that ought to be indictable as a misdemeanor and offence against public morals."

In connection with the warlike bluster started by the Nicaragua scheme, the condition of the United States as a military power is discussed with much vain-boasting, and assured disgust by warm-hearted but vain and foolish men, who esteem the monarchies of Europe the models for our imitation. Our neglect of military schemes and preparation for the more reasonable and lawful cultivation of the arts of peace is watched by the representatives of these monarchies. One of these is reported as saying lately: "Your chiefs of engineers and ordnance say you have no heavy guns. I happen to know that your small-arm supply is very short. You only have about twenty-five thousand or thirty thousand muskets in your arsenals beyond those now in the hands of your army and militia. Oh, we know all about these things, and we have means of information you never could imagine existed. Why, there is not a war department in Europe that does not possess all your latest maps, with the depths of water in all your harbors laid down in them. In fact, a part of the duty of a minister in this country is to report just these things. We know more than this. We are fully acquainted with the capacity of every general, officer and admiral in your service, and these opinions are carefully filed in the intelligence departments at home. So, in case of war, with you, when we learned that Gen. —— was named as chief in command we would know all about him—his reputation and capacity. In fact, owing to the ease with which information is obtained here, there is no department of your government of which we are not fully informed." This speech reveals a singular state of things. Here are European governments sending to our friendly capital agents who spend their time in prying around after our weak places; as if one should use another's confidence and friendship to find how he might be successfully assailed either in person or reputation. What is there in such cunning practice to exalt a nation above the puerile savagery of the dark ages? No wonder the people who maintain such governments are weary of their needless and wicked waste of revenue and of life, and are ready to overthrow them.

LEGISLATIVE REFORMS IN ENGLAND.

BY REV. JOHN BOYES.

I have not written to the Cynosure as recently as I intended, but there is always the consolation that everything of importance which transpires in this country is transmitted by telegraph, and is made known to you much sooner than it could possibly be done by a written communication.

The subject of this letter, namely, Reforms in Legislative Representation, are already familiar to your readers, yet it may not be amiss to reiterate and amplify known truths.

Last July, the Lords had sent up to them a franchise bill for assimilating the county franchise to that of the boroughs. This bill which had cost the House of Commons an immense amount of labor to discuss and pass, was shelved by their Lordships; at least it was not passed, and this necessitated an autumnal session for the already overworked House of Commons. This naturally roused a storm throughout the country which threatened the final overthrow of hereditary legislation. When the borough franchise was extended in 1867, it was regarded as certain by all liberal minded men that the county franchise must, ere long, be assimilated thereto. It was also understood that whenever this was done, a large redistribution of seats must immediately follow. The Franchise Bill, after an unparallelled amount of obstruction, has at last, by a compromise between the leaders of the Liberal and Conservative parties, been effected in a way which gratifies both parties.

The outline of a Redistribution Bill is before us. The leading principle on which the bill is based is that every house-holder and property-holder shall have one vote in the election of a member of Parliament. Towns and counties sending more than one member are to be divided into wards and districts, on the principle on which our municipal elections are managed. Taking Birmingham, as an illustration, which will hereafter send seven members to Parliament; instead of each voter being able to vote for the whole seven candidates, he will only be entitled to vote for the one who will be elected for the ward or district in which he (the voter) resides.

It is always a difficult and unsafe thing to forecast the consequences of reforms. In the political, as in the economic world, the seen and the unseen fairly balance each other. Some of our politicians are very sanguine that we shall henceforward get a strong government that will be able to press on business vigorously. We know that government bills have been obstructed with tenfold energy, because the obstructors had the county franchise behind them; and for the same reason, the foreign policy of the government has been attacked from time to time with zest and pertinacity. Some of our politicians hold that the evils which have attended the tri umph of democratic principles in other lands will not be witnessed in England. They hold with Milton, that there is a peculiar political instinct about Englishmen which will save them from the excesses that have done so much to damage Liberal principles elsewhere. We certainly think that with the additional voters some of the glaring defects of the agricultural system of this country will pass away, and that much of the one-sided legislation to which we have been heretofore subjected will not be revived. The great Reform Bill of 1832, though it only enfranchised about half a million of voters and transferred about 140 seats, brought the country to the verge of civil war. The Reform Bill of 1884 which enfranchises two millions of voters, and will be followed by a transfer of 166 seats, and the substitution of single for double elections, has been passed amid mutual congratulations, and with the pleasing conviction that each party has gained an advantage over the other.

The theory of the British Constitution has always been, that the people are the ultimate source of power and the final appeal in all legislative issues. We know that every extension of the franchise has been followed by a greater attention to the needs of the voting classes, and the extension of the franchise to the laboring classes will secure for them greater attention.

DIXIE.

BY ALEXANDER THOMSON.

Slavery was a hot-house that propagated four first class devils: pride, lust, laziness, and ignorance. When a man owns a fellow man as he does a beast, to sell, to command, to punish, almost to kill, at will, —such a power will as surly produce pride and arrogance, as that light, heat and moisture will produce a rank vegetation. Where there is no holy law of marriage; where the infant is torn from its mother, and the wife from her husband; where all the holy laws of home and family are outraged, it is folly to expect virtue. When man's condition is such that it can never be any better, and not much worse; where all the products of his labor are the coarsest of food and rags, diligence must be a curiosity; and where there is a penalty of death for teaching men to read, there must of necessity be a very mountain of ignorance.

This was the condition of the South under the dark dominion of slavery. It was a sword with two points and the hilt in the middle. The devil grasped the hilt and struck both ways; with one point, he stabbed the slave, and with the other, made an almost equally deadly wound on the master. Pride, lust, and laziness on the part of the planters; lust, laziness, and ignorance on the part of the negroes— this was slavery.

Slavery is now dead, not so its far-reaching influences. The earthquake is over, but the city is in ruins; the deadly cancer is cut out, but the gaping wound remains unhealed. We have freed the negroes. What shall we do with them? Plainly they are here to stay. Their jolly black faces are multiplying rapidly in our noble Dixie, and after twenty years of freedom (from articles in the Presbyterian Banner, the New York Witness, and the North American Review,) it appears that notwithstanding all that has been done the masses of the people of the South, both white and black, are in a condition not very greatly above that in which slavery left them.

What must be done?

There are nearly five millions of people in our South, from ten years old and upwards who cannot read. In five of the cotton States the majority of the voting population, white and black, cannot read the votes they cast. The white planter still looks down upon the negro with contempt, and denies him social equality. In sections where there is only one school, the white children are permitted to grow up in ignorance rather than send them to school with colored children. The negro, left largely to himself, has a religion of emotion, a holy dance, a holy laugh, shouting and weeping; but so easy a code of morals that his pagan ancestors would not be greatly scandalized by his Christianity. The effect of the warm climate and former habit, still makes them indolent. While their love of display and desire to emulate the white man has drawn them into countless secret societies, whose fees and dues on the one hand, and the bar room on the other, like two insatiable monsters, devour their scanty earnings.

This is their condition. There are, of course, many noble exceptions, and considering his opportunities and circumstances the negro has perhaps risen as rapidly as we could expect. But "a nation was born in a day," and almost without teachers of mind or morals, and led by carpet-bag politicians, generally scoundrels, began their upward march. We have but the natural consequences.

What must be done? We can only see two measures. Send men to the South who dare preach the Gospel. Paul preached on Mars' Hill, that God has made of one blood all nations of men, and that all for whom Christ died are brethren. This will destroy caste. Let them preach that the only religion that Christ acknowledges as his is that which works by love and purifies the heart. This will correct their morals. Then send teachers who will give all the children the benefit of a good common school education. This will destroy superstition and give that self-respect so necessary to enterprise, and by the blessing of God we may yet see our "brother in black" in every moral, material, and intellectual pursuit, standing shoulder to shoulder with us as he did in the dark days of the war, and marching with us to every triumph that awaits our race and nation.

SLAVERY AND LODGERY.

BY REV. LEVI KELLY.

The system of human slavery which existed more than two hundred years in this country, degraded the white and black man, master and slave alike. At first the inhuman practice was defended solely upon the grounds of its commercial interest, but when men of conscience denounced it, the defenders of the institution saw that it could be better defended if they could claim for it the divine sanction. The pulpits and presses North and South began to call the attention of the nation to the fact that because a black man knew less than a white man, the one had a divine right to compel the other to work for nothing and to be sold as cattle to the highest bidder.

The nation still had a conscience. The Supreme Bench spoke unfavorably for the weaker side. Every thing looked dark, but light was breaking; the sun had not gone out in the moral heavens. God looked down and the mountains melted at his presence. He was marshaling his army for the battle. The pulpit and press were arrayed against the truth, with but few exceptions. The nation needed a sacrifice. Men died martyrs for the right, which the nation refused to respect. Vicarious suffering has a reservation of forces behind it, which will be heard; it made two dispensations, one a mount and the other a cross; under the first a shadow of good things, under the second good things themselves. There can be no failure if we can find men whose consciences are lighted by the inconsumable fire of self-abnegation. Here, God be praised, lies the way to imperishable renown.

The nation refused to listen to moral appeals. Conscience had retired behind the purse. The dark war cloud as it were in size of a man's hand, grew, until the stars were concealed, and the thunder of his wrath shook from its bosom a rain of fire and blood for four long years, until every family had lost its first-born. Just as Abraham struck the fetters from the blacks, the rifted cloud let the rays of white light shine, and the nation saw the end of the storm, and the rainbow of hope stood for peace.

If Masonry and her whole brood of vipers would not associate religion with their heathenish ceremonies the whole would fall to pieces in a month. These dark orders know, and so does the devil, that God has endowed mankind with a longing for some thing unearthly, which demands satisfaction in order to have permanent peace, and that this pre-disposition must be either met with the true or false worship, and since the false meets with an immediate response from the innate depravity of the heart, they thus allure the poor souls away from the source whence true peace can flow. It is this damning feature of secretism, which enthrones itself against Christ, and makes itself the anti-Christ.

As the atonement through Christ is the only efficient cause of our justification, and the Holy Spirit the agency through whom the benefit of this salvation can be given to man, through faith, it is most important for a successful overthrow of sound faith that the devil, through secret orders, ignores the above entirely, and directs the soul to deism, independent of a mediation for final and eternal repose. The Bible says (2 John ver. 9), "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son." God is not God without the Son, and a stump or block of wood will answer just as well, as far as our salvation is concerned, as deity, without an atonement.

But does not this dark order even enter the sanctum sanctorum itself and trample under foot the blood of the everlasting covenant? Does not this blasphemous order of Ancient Craft Masonry whip the Son of God from the sacred temple with its deistical cudgel? What do you say, ye hirelings, who feed the flock, whose pastures your feet have defiled? Now, in the name of God, hear what this modern first-born of hell thinks of your Christ whom you preach for hire,

1. This dark order rejects the Son of God at the threshold. His name is carefully omitted from every quotation taken from the New Testament where it occurs. His name is omitted in its prayers. The rum-seller is welcome, but the Man of Sorrows is not. I would quote from their highest authorities, but this is so generally admitted that it seems unnecessary here to produce them.

2. But the fact that they reject the Son of God, and curse the blood, and deny its efficacy, they do profess to impart a new nature to their candidates. "Manual of the Lodge," by Mackey, p. 20, says:

> "There he stands without our portals, on the threshold of this new Masonic life, in darkness, helplessness and ignorance. Having been wandering amid the errors and covered over with the polutions of the outer and profane world, he comes inquiringly to our doors, SEEKING THE NEW BIRTH, and asking a withdrawal of the vail which conceals divine truth from his uninitiated sight."

Again, p. 21:

> "Masonry stands before the neophyte in all the glory of its form and beauty to be fully revealed to him, however, only WHEN THE NEW BIRTH has been completely accomplished."

"Lexicon of Freemasonry" by A. G. Mackey, p. 16, under the word Acacian:

> "Acacian—a term signifying a Mason who by living in strict obedience to its obligations and precepts of the fraternity is FREE FROM SIN."

Can anything be more explicitly stated? Can the issue be more freely made? Can a lingering doubt remain that the aminus of this order is to save men without adopting God's method? Men obey an order which commits them through obligation to murder, even if need be a father or son, and then claims through itself, what exclusively belongs to the Holy Trinity!

But leaving this theme, which is so blasphemously infidel, we call your attention to the fact that this same doctrine of hell has sealed the lips of nearly all preachers, and controls the press, and enfeebles the nerves of conventions, both political and ecclesiastical. The real worshipers of this false religion are not all inside the order. Our land is crossed and re-crossed with these lines of communications.

We must, under God, wipe out this hindrance, or it will overthrow the religious faith of this nation, and plant its heel on every sacred spot of ground, and leave our fine heritage to the moles and bats. Up, ye men of God. Let Mount Sinai renew its ancient thunder and the worshipers of this golden calf will have to remove without the camp. O yes! just one year of peal after peal, and God's church will once more come up out of the wilderness leaning on the arm of her beloved. There are no better men, and never have been, nor made of nobler flesh and blood, nor endowed with more of the spirit of martyrdom than those who are now in the van for God, riding on white horses, led by Him whose garment is dipped in blood, and on whose vesture and thigh a name is written, KING OF KINGS AND LORD OF LORDS. HIS NAME IS THE WORD OF GOD.

THE STRONGHOLD OF THE RUM POWER

FROM A LECTURE BY REV. THOS. E. BLISS, D. D., DENVER, COLORADO.

Prov. 11:21—"Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not go unpunished."

Few people, we apprehend, have duly considered the immense strength of the liquor power. This may be traced, perhaps:

First—To the depravity of human nature. The inherent tastes and inclinations of our race are so viciously inclined downward, that anything which assists or tends in that direction finds only too natural and ready acceptance and favor. For 4,000 years the records of races and nations all go to confirm this view, and it is a sad and terrible story indeed in its bearing on this question. Every tribe and people, however benighted or civilized, has resorted to every imaginable expedient in the manufacture and use of intoxicating drinks, and the evils resulting have been uniformly the same.

Second—The great profits of the liquor business have been another source of its power. Notwithstanding its black and damning record for so many ages, and the great efforts for the last half century which have been made to set before the people its long and ever continuous catalogue of evils and crimes, still the avarice of human hearts is such that this great "river of death" rolls on, gathering new strength with every generation. Men who know its terrible evils as well as their own names, will yet say, "It makes me rich," and shut their ears and steel their hearts against the cries of poverty and shame which come up from the millions of poor wives and children all over our land. "The profits are great, and business is business." "I sell my goods and ask no questions." Must not such a heart, so selfish and cruel, be as hard and cold as stone?

POLITICAL INFLUENCE.

Third—Another of the strongholds of the Rum Power is its political influence. The grog shop is usually a convenient resort of loafers and bummers, and it is such that the saloon is expected to control for the benefit of political candidates. Hence the large amounts of money which are usually deposited in these dens of corruption previous to our elections. The average liquor seller cares little for the character or principles of the candidate, or which party goes up or down; provided, always, that nothing is ever to be done to injure his business. This is all that he cares for. This is always and ever the one great question with him, and seems, in fact, to be about the only semblance of a principle that he has. On this point the candidate must satisfy him before anything is done. With the average political hack, who himself is usually one of his best customers, this is easily done, and so he is elected; and it has come to be the case that such worthless, unprincipled scabs, constitute quite too large a proportion of those who can be cleeted, and of course they are up for the "highest bidder," whether a United States Senator is to be eleeted, or any railroad legislation is on hand, or any other corrupt and despicable jobbery is is to be carried through. Thus it is seen what a stronghold of political power and influence the dramshop has become, and how it is that so many corrupt men are elected to power, and why it is that some of our Legislatures make such infamous records against all temperance laws, and where it is that this abominable state of things eminates from. This is not overdrawn. At a politieal scramble in this city not long since we heard, on good authority, of several just such cases as this, and the politieal aspirants who, directly or indireetly, furnished this mouey, wonder that we will no longe be a party to such scoundrelism.

THE LODGE.

Fourth—The secret society and lodge obligation in whieh so many liquor dealers are personally enlisted also eonstitute a stronghold with the rum power. We knew an instance not long since in which a person withdrew from one of these organizations beeause he could not be free to work against this gigantie evil as he wished to. With obligations which require that they shall do nothing to injure each other in person, character or business, but on the contrary sustain, uphold and befriend them as "brethren," etc., these things not only encourage and strengthen this terrible business and the men engaged in it, but it must of necessity paralize, in large measure, the hands and heart of those who are so bound to them. Then again, look at their entertainments and carnivals and see the liquors spread upon the board, and which so long has been regarded as an essential part of the entertainment, and what is worse—see how many drink freely of them, not a few of whom are publicly known as members of churches and temperauee men, and who thus before their associates put the brand of hypoeriey upon their brows, and whose influence therefore, from the very nature of the case, on this subject, must be not only worthless, but worse than worthless. It is the constant effort of the liquor men to paralize all opposition, and, if possible, so adjust their political, social and business relations as to weaken and shatter the strength which might otherwise be opposed to them. In this, we are sorry to say, they have been only too successful, and nowhere in this nation more so than here from the infancy of this Commonwealth. They have held too many otherwise good men spellbouud by their enchantments, and they show no disposition to relax their hold upon them.

Fifth—Still another stronghold of the rum power is in its allies—gambling, prostitution and crime. It is true that the saloon is in large measure the breeding place of all these, and it is forever hatching out its cocatrices' eggs and turning them loose upon society to curse and destroy. Those who have studied these questions at all, know very well that the gambling hells thrive very largely upon those victims who are first exeited or stupified by strong drink. The pimps and bunkosteerers decoy their silly geese in the same way, and pluek them while drunk. It has been estimated that fully nine-tenths of the fallen women became such while uuder the influene of liquor. And so it is with all the vicious classes of society. And why it is that these should now have the destroying angel let loose upon them, while their old breeding slut and mother—the grog shop is treated so tenderly and gingerly as if left to sup off her potions undisturbed—we eannot understand. The dens of evil, of every color and kind, are found to be almost wholly the hideous outgrowth of this "gigantic crime of erimes"—the liquor traffic. While we are glad and grateful to have these branches pruned or chopped off, yet the question continually recurs: Why not go back to the source and lay the axe at the root of this accursed old upas tree, which is constantly bringing forth such accursed fruit? This we say, not by the way of criticism, but rather of inquiry. An ancient legend speaks of a certain monster who fed upon her own progeny. The same is seen in our day, of the liquor monster which is bringing forth the evil progenies of gambling, hilarity and crime, and is pampered and fed by them in turn without limit.

SOCIAL COWARDICE.

Sixth—Again a stronghold of rum power is seen in the cowardice of respectability. So many people are afraid to speak out and call things by their true names. They are afraid that their business or their popularity will be injured if they do. They seem to think more of their own interests than any thing which honors God or blesses humanity. No matter how many wives may weep, or children beg for bread; no matter if we do have in this city between one and two thousand families who are living in poverty and rags, through the influence of this drink demon; no matter if our taxes are doubled by it, and four-fifths of all the poverty and crime, and all the other evils which infest society, are caused by it —still a cowardly respectability will neither speak out nor come out and take a stand openly on the right side. But, on the contrary is forever speaking unkindly of those who do, and carps and criticises at every effort that is made to stay this terrible evil. True manhood and true prineiple look at every question with the inquiry, "Is it right?" And this settled, their duty calls, and the course is taken accordingly. But sueh eowardly respectability is as selfish as sin, as mean as the devil, and as cold as an iceberg. Though the demon is destroying its victims by tens of thousands every year, and the wails of sorrow and woe fill the land, this silly weakling turns a deaf ear and lifts its dainty skirt, and like the Levite, passes by on the other side, or, perhaps, sits and quaffs his cups and talks with owl-like wisdom of the fanatieism of prohibition, and of all the efforts made to save our people from this terrible eurse. Sueh characters have a fearful aecount to answer for in the great, final day.

CORRUPT OFFICIALS.

Seventh—The apathy and perjury of so many of our corrupt publie officials is one more of the strongholds of the rum power. Look over our statutes and ordinances and mark how many of them have been as dead and inactive as some of those animals which have been frozen in the iceflows of the Arctic regions for 1,000 years or more. And then thiuk how many men have solemnly sworn from year to year to exeeute them, and have not done it, and whose souls are therefore black with perjury. And think again how many of them are, as a consequence, now in hell, and how many more seem to have every prospect of going there. If there is any character that deserves damnation it is a corrupt and perjured publie official. To this conelusion very many are coming, who heretofore have had doubts as to the existence of such a place. They feel very mueh as did the Universalist chaplain in the late war, who, after what he had seen and experienced, declared that he had changed his mind and had come to the conclusion that a "hell" was a military necessity! And such it seems to be in this instance. Devoid alike of honor or shame, they seem too often to care no more for the solemn obligations they are under than the deaf man does for musie, but are ready to be bought off from their duty by a bribe, or "whack" with thieves and robbers, or put in false accounts, raise bills and the like. Some of us, who are supposed to know so little of the ways of the world, do yet often wonder how such handsome properties are accumulated in so short a time—from such very moderate salaries! Such apathy, eriminality aud perjury deserve no sympathy and should reeeive no pardon. But they should have the whole penalty of the law, both here and hereafter, and "palsied be the tongue that refuses to say, Amen!"

A correspondent of the Christian Cynosure says there are "2,250 members of secret temperance lodges in Cincinnati, and yet St. John received but 176 votes in the whole of Hamilton county." Perhaps John B. Finch or some other "Sir Knight" or "Worthy Templar" would have fared better at their hands. The "Good Templars" that tried to hiss Mr. Blanchard from the platform in this city will not break their necks to elect auy prohibitionist who repudiates the secret orders, as, it is said, St. John does.—Evangelical Repository.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS:

OR

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR.

BY E. E. FLAGG, AUTHOR OF "HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

CHAPTER VII.—Continued.

"But it seems unwomanly to be mixed up with sueh dreadful goings on as they so frequently have at the polls," puts in a feminine voice at our right. "Why, it is almost as bad as voting."

For our part we think it considerably worse, and on this slight basis of agreement let us call for a general truce.

The president is now addressing a few words to the little assembly—no other than the matron with the silver curls, Mrs. Judge Haviland. Every woman present loves and reveres her, not because she bears a distinguished uame in society, but because she is exactly what she is, so motherly, so Christlike, of so grand a courage, with such far-reaching sympathies that the poorest and most sorrowful feel uplifted and strengthened though they touch but the hem of her garment. The real magnetism which pours life into faint, discouraged, siu-sick souls must come from actual, personal, daily contact with Him who is the heavenly Magnet for all earth's sorrows. There are human hands whose lightest touch is healing; but they are hands that in the mountain-top or in the valley, in darkness or in light, in storm or sunshine, have never let go of the crueified One.

"My dear sisters, our enemies sometimes accuse us of seeking notoriety, but every calumny will fall hurtless at our feet if we only go forward trusting in the Lord alone. And here do we not make a mistake? We, at least many of us, desire the ballot. We desire it, not for purposes of selfish ambition, but to protect our homes; and so far we are right. Our error, it seems to me, has been in looking to man to give what is really not his to give. Does not our Father hold the nations in the hollow of his hand? Is not he the true author of all national and civil polity? And in his own good time how easily he can cause the gates of brass to fly open with a touch. I think he is now teaching the women of the W. C. T. U. a great lesson—to depend more upon him and less ou man. We have petitioned legislatures, political conventions, men in high official positions, and though certain Michaels—all honor to them—have stood up and helped us, we all know the story. We stand to-day without the shadow of hope from either of the two great politieal parties. Politicians have united to ignore us—we have no votes to give them. But all our petitioning and memorializing has not been in vain if their failure but drives us nearer God. Let us cease from man aud pray: 'Give ear, O Shepherd of Israel, thou that leadest Joseph like a flock; thou that dwellest between the cherubim, shine forth. Before Ephriam and Benjamin and Manasseh, stir up thy strength and come and save us.'"

And in the deep, ground swell of the old Hebrew psalm we seem to catch the voiees of all the martyr generations that have gone before—an innumerable, palm-crowned multitude who once were faithful unto death, and now recognize kindred souls in this band of earnest-eyed women. It is the cry of finite weakness to infinite strength, which, though feebler than the dying sparrow's, can pierce the veil of the unseen, and above the song of the seraphim, above even the triumphal chants of this redeemed, sound in the ears of One who, as grand old Augustine has said, "is patient because he is eternal."

But we feel moved to turn aside once more for a brief converse; first, with the politicians.

Men in high places who stand to-day as the representatives of this free Christian Republic, can you disregard the appeal of sueh women and be guiltless?—not of a great moral wrong simply, but of a great political bluuder. Does not the prosperity of a nation centre in its homes? and what of the policy, what of the statesmanship that would license an evil which more than any other is at the bottom of our frequent divorces; which causes most of the cases of brutality and desertion, to say nothing of the domestic unhappiness that never gets into the papers because it never rises to the dignity of tragedy? What sort of political economy can we call it that allows a traffic which takes niue hundred millions from the wealth of the country that it may put a matter of eighty millions or so into the nation's exchequer? or that completely ignores every axiom of political science in proposing to lighten the burdens of State taxation by dividing among them the surplus revenue from that, which, as the chief fountain of crime, misery and pauperism is likewise the chief source of all the taxation that oppresses honest industry?

But we have a word to say to the voters. Honest-hearted, hard-handed farmers and mechanics, how long will you be led by mere party interest—which only means the interest of some party leader who wants your votes—to support men and measures with whom and with which your whole moral sense is at war? Is it wise to do so? Is it patriotic? Is it safe? With all our seeming peace and prosperity, thoughtful, far-seeing souls tremble as they catch at intervals gleams of subterraneous lightning playing below our social and political horizon, and hear the low, ominous rumblings that warn of a terrible volcanic power beneath our feet that may find voice to-morrow in the earthquake shock startling continents. More and more American cities are getting to be the resort of Communists, Nihilists, dynamiters—men who hate law and every institution based on law; and more and more both our towns and cities are gathering a mass of inflammable material precisely fitted under such leadership to enact on American soil the scenes of blood and terror that we have grown to regard as the legitimate fruit of old-world serfdoms only. "And what will ye do in the day of visitation and in the desolation which shall come from far," if you vote to license the liquor traffic? or, what is the same thing, cast your ballots for rulers and legislators committed to its interests? Liquor to the passions of a mob is as the torch to the powder magazine, the match to the fuse. What warrant have you for the safety of life, property or home, if, to maddened crowds goaded by real wrongs and inflamed by the harangues of socialist leaders, liquor can be dealt out freely, thus priming them for murder and violence and rapine? Truly, there is a whole eternity in the word longsuffering, yet let us beware that we weary not that patience beyond which there is nothing but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation on a guilty people.

The neat sign up at every polling place, "Hot tea and coffee served free," over the letters W. C. T. U., was a surprise which caused the saloon party to gnash their teeth; for their plan had been kept as entirely to themselves as if bound by any number of oaths 'ever to conceal and never reveal it"—a fact which we commend by the way to the attention of those gentlemen in the Masonic order, who, when questioned as to the reason why the lodge so rigorously excludes all the weaker sex, sauvely reply, "O women can't keep secrets, you know."

Though Nelson Newhall in his inmost heart disliked the idea of any feminine meddling with the mysterious machine of politics, he was perfectly sincere in what he had said to Martha—he was ready to welcome any instrumentality that promised to overthrow the haughty, tyrannous, ever-encroaching saloon power; and when Mrs. Judge Haviland herself handed him a no-license ticket with the request that he would vote it, he could not help feeling that this royal woman, who might have sat for an artist's dream of universal motherhood, did not look so very much out of place after all.

"Shure, an' its a fine cup o' tay; and thank ye kindly, ladies;" spoke up a rough-looking Irishman who had just treated himself to a cup of the steaming beverage, and then he looked a little doubtfully at the ticket placed in his hand.

Though poor Pat had neither money nor learning, at the ballot-box he counted for as much as if he was a millionaire or had a whole string of college degrees attached to his name, and usually the Democratic side had secured his vote by liberal supplies of cheap whisky and equally liberal doses of that peculiar species of political oratory vulgarly denominated "buncombe." Like too many of his countrymen, he fell a victim at periodical intervals to the attractions of the saloon; and, as it happened, the one to which he usually resorted was kept by an old-time Democrat, who had suddenly turned into an ardent Republican, under the stimulus of promises to wink at all future violations of law on his part if he would but give his vote and influence towards electing Gen. Putney. So Pat had lately been in the way of hearing talk which had quite revolutionized all his political ideas. He had learned to his astonishment that it was the Republicans and not the Democrats who had all along been the defenders of the poor man's rights. Gen. Putney, he was told, was a strong "protectionist," and ought for that reason, if no other, to have the votes of all laboring men; for the Democratic hobby of "free trade," if once allowed, would mean starvation wages for the workman, colossal fortunes to the capitalist, and, most horrible of all, an influx of Chinese to which the Egyptian plague of locusts could not compare for a moment. That neither he nor his instructors could for their lives have given the dictionary meaning of the terms they used so glibly was but a trifling matter. Pat had come to the polls sure that he comprehended the whole political situation.

But this poor Irishman, though capable of swallowing whole any lie that political demagogues chose to tell him, had a heart and a very respectable bit of a conscience. He loved his wife and children, and for their sakes had made more than one manful struggle against the whisky jug, but what availed it when the saloon with its tempting free lunch of salt fish, or some other equally thirst-provoking viand, stood always open, its attractions seconded by the cravings of an ill-nourished physical system, and the utter lack of any mental resource as a refuge against bodily weariness? And which is the most to be despised, poor Pat or the Congressman who sits down to a luxurious dinner with half a dozen courses of wine, and now and then goes off on a grand spree at the nation's expense? In our humble opinion Pat is decidedly more of a man, inasmuch as he always pays his liquor bills himself.

To this adopted citizen of great and glorious Columbia did Mrs. Judge Haviland now address herself with all that sweet and persuasive tact which is the gift of woman.

"We want to have no saloons in Jacksonville this year, and we ask you as a personal favor to vote for no-license. You, and I, and everybody else would be better off if no liquor was allowed to be sold anywhere. Your vote may go a great ways towards accomplishing what we so much desire."

Pat had been asked for his vote before, but never so winningly; and he thought how glad it would make Katy, his Katy, who had the brightest eyes and reddest cheeks for miles around when he wooed her in the "ould counthry," if he should never get drunk again. And if nobody was allowed to sell him liquor how could he get drunk?

—The prohibition against the Jews settling in Syria has been revoked, and the Holy Land is open to them once more. They are fleeing from the countries in Europe where they are persecuted, and an association in London is helping them to go to the the land of their fathers. On appeal of the Jews in Jerusalem the Sultan has annulled the sale of a part of the Mount of Olives, which contains the graves of the prophets Haggai, Zachariah, and Malachi. The purchasers were the Russian priesthood. The burial places have been secured to the Jews in perpetuity.

REFORM NEWS.

AT WORK IN KANSAS.

The fact that Bro. Loggan has accepted the State agency of Kansas and entered upon the active duties of his field should give new heart and courage to every friend in the State. The work is great and widely extended and Bro. Loggan cannot do a tithe of what is needed; but he can, and by the blessing of God, will do something. His usefulness will depend largely on the co-operative moral and financial support of the friends. If left alone he will certainly fail for the opposition is too great and the work too arduous for any man to carry. He goes forth equipped and with high resolves expecting to encounter a relentless foe at every step of his progress. He expects to face storms and be subjected to privations and to endure hardness, and he has a right to expect a cordial greeting from friends and some attention to his personal comfort while at their homes. Only those who have passed through the ordeal have any just appreciation of the discouragements, misgivings and trials of an advocate of unpopular reforms. Separated from his family and kindred, scorned and belied by vindictive enemies, buffetted by Satan and often shunned by those who should be his earnest helpers, he often feels forsaken and alone in the midst of a throng, and a single word of cheer or a kindly invitation to the hospitality of your home will do him a world of good.

I know whereof I affirm. Years have passed, but I distinctly recall an instance in Indiana. After great effort I succeeded in obtaining the use of Good Templar's Hall for a lecture. I posted my own notices, not knowing that I had a friend in that place. The hall, reached by winding stairs, I found to be a dingy room in the third story. Curiosity (as I supposed) brought out an audience which was greater than the capacity of the room. The exercises took a rather colloquial turn after the first half hour, and it was, so far as I knew, one man against the crowd for the remainder of the evening. Just before closing I said, "I have paid six dollars for the use of this hall, and if any of you wish to share in the expense you can lay your offering on the table." The "opposition" raised a yell of derision, but a number of persons walked quietly up and laid money enough on the table to pay the expense of the meeting. When on the street I noticed a gentleman keeping just behind for several blocks, I turned suddenly and demanded what he wanted. He proved to be a friend, a lawyer from a neighboring town. He spoke kindly and accompanied me to my hotel. We conversed till a late hour, and the next morning he kindly paid my bill, all of which did me personally a world of good, and greatly strengthened my courage to "try again."

Friends in Kansas will have frequent opportunities to strengthen the heart and hands of their lecturer in similar ways, and they will be recreant to duty and to the cause of righteousnees if they fail to do it.

Remember, brethren and sisters in Kansas, the Captain's order is. "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ."

THE NEW YORK STATE RALLY.

DALE, N. Y., Jan. 10, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The time has come for another annual gathering of the people in New York State. Friends here have met in convention year after year, and devised plans for the overthrow of this despotic secret system. Some have been kept from joining these midnight bands; others, like dog Tray, found themselves in bad company, but having been convinced of this truth have arisen and shaken off the chains that so bound them down. This year work seems especially to demand our earnest endeavors. New fields of labor open for us. New friends are constantly coming to our aid. The war waxes hot between the powers of darkness and the powers of light. God has given the command—"Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward." Ex. 15: 15. Will we obey? What say you friends? Will we by our prayers, means and labors, go forward? Come to the convention and take part in the deliberations. In this way we shall have unity of action, and the work will go forward. Let us make a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether.

Bro. S. E. Starry is soon to be with us. Bro. S. is known to most of the friends in New York, and needs no introduction from me. Suffice it to say, he is a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, a devoted Christian, and one of those who "fear God rather than man." Our plan is to commence in the western part of the State and work through to the eastern. Several friends have already expressed a desire to have work done in their communities. We hope that they, together with any others desiring Bro. Starry's services will write Bro. Capwell or myself immediately, so that our arrangments may be completed. Bro. Franklin Mallory of Corinth will unite with us in pushing the work forward.

We want some money, too; five hundred dollars or more if you will send it. Don't be bashful in the least, already some have expressed a desire to help. One gentleman pledging twenty-five dollars, another twenty, others five and two dollars—about seventy-five in all. We shall expect the friends where the degrees are worked to assist as they are able.

Bro. Starry's charges are very reasonable; $50 per month and expenses seems little enough to pay.

Will you help in this work? If so write Bro. Capwell and send your contribution, or pledge, as the case may be. All amounts received will be duly credited, and applied as desired. A complete report given to any desiring it.

Would God that Bro. Starry's coming might be the means of rekindling such a fire as has not been since the three hundred lodges here gave up their charters, and sank in an ignominious grave.

W. B. STODDARD.

CENTRAL ILLINOIS.

PRINCETON, Ill., Jan. 3, 1885.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—During my two weeks work in McLean county I spoke seven times, five of which were Anti-masonic lectures. In every instance the weather and roads were very unfavorable, and the audiences generally small, though they represented the earnest Christian element. I was much indebted to Dea. W. R. Johnson, of Lexington, for hospitality and untiring efforts in the cause of reform. Elder Forward of the Baptist church showed me much kindness and so did others, while the United Brethren turned a deaf ear to the discussion of principles on which their church was founded. How a people who had enjoyed the labors and instructions of Bishop Edwards, and who have had line upon line of instructions on this secrecy question, can deliberately reject all their past testimonies and willingly take sides with the enemies of righteousness, is one of the mysteries hard to understand. The congregation at Pleasant Hill and doubtless some others in the country are not of this character but desire to be counted on the side of reform.

At Bloomington, Danvers, Wenona, Streator, Lostant, Tonica and LaSalle, I found faithful men and women whose names are in the Book of Life, but it was not until I reached Princeton that I found an open door.

Perhaps no town in Illinois has enjoyed so great privileges as Princeton. It was the home of Owen Lovejoy. For many years he was the pastor of the Congregational church, which under his ministry acquired a reputation for being positive and earnest in opposition to all wrong, whether popular or otherwise. Since his death conservative influences have prevailed, and the church has gloried in its past record rather than its present willingness to stand for Christ in all things.

As there were a few names even in Sardis that had not defiled their garments, so there are a faithful few in this church who are willing, if need be, to have their names cast out as evil, rather than bow the knee to the Masonic Baal.

Then, too, among the Swedish Lutherans there has been no small stir on this question. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Sandall, accepted a call on condition that the church would "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." The reproving has been in part committed to me. I spoke on Monday night Dec. 29th, at the Wesleyan church at Walnut Grove, near Wyanet, and on Tuesday night in the Swedish church here. The night was rainy, but the audience was large and attentive. Last night, Jan'y 2nd, I spoke again in the same place to a larger audience, but including more that were not in sympathy with my views, yet were nevertheless respectful in behavior. A fair collection was taken and a vote inviting me to give a third lecture in the same place to-night. Providence permitting, I expect to lecture in the Swedish church in Wyanet on Monday afternoon Jan'y. 5th, and then expect to go westward. God has not forgotten our cause nor us. Let us not forget Him.

THE SWEDISH LUTHERAN CHURCHES IN ILLINOIS.

GALVA, ILL., JAN. 10.—An impression has widely prevailed that the Lutheran churches are largely made up of formalists, in which a devotion to ritualism and an intense denominational spirit has taken the place of earnest and aggressive piety. So far at least, as the Swedish Lutheran churches are concerned, I am satisfied that this is a mistaken opinion. These churches have largely increased within the last two years. While many of our American churches are hardly holding their own, the Swedish churches are takiug their place. If earnestness in Christian work and faithfulness in the maintainance of discipline arc evidence of spiritual life, this evidence is not wantiug. Just now they are observing the week of prayer, and the attendance is good. They are also active and liberal in the support of both home and foreign missions.

Above all, these churches are about the only ones in the large towns that are willing to give audience to an anti-sececy reformer. Their miuisters all tell me that they regard membership in secret societies as inconsistent with membership iu the church, and that they have secured unity and peace by enforcing this rule. Nor has it resulted in a loss of members but in the blessing of God.

I have rarely been able to get a hearing in the Congregational churches. The ministers and a great body of the members profess to be opposed to Freemasonry, but the few Masous that are in the churches rule them, at least so far as discussion is concerned. The M. E. church with its high pretensions is worse, and the Baptists but little better. All these churches on the linc of the C. B. & Q. railway seem far from prosperous, while these Swedish Lutherans set before us "an open door."

Doubtless these churches may have something yet to learn on the subject of temperance and the use of tobacco, but all things considered, their integrity to principle and Christian courage in opposing a terrible form of anti-Christ is worthy of all praise.

MORE ABOUT A CONVENTION FOR OHIO.

SOUTH SALEM, Ohio.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—In slavery times, if a slave had a knowledge of God and of a Saviour he might accept him and trust him and submit to him and love him; and with aching body and weary limbs he might, in the shadow of the night, fall down and pray to the God and Saviour whom he trusted and loved; and on a Sabbath, or some rare occasion, he might tell his fellow captive of a Saviour, and a heaven where there is rest for the weary. But if he asserted his right, or remonstrated with his master, or attempted to escape, it was only to make his bondage more cruel, if it did not cost him his life.

In like manner the thirty thousand pulpits of Ohio are enslaved to the lodge. Excepting the M. E. church the ministers of Ohio have a strong dislike of the lodge, to say the least. Many of them hate it and wish it was destroyed; and the same is true with some even in the M. E. church. They see or believe Masonry to be a great evil. But they are afraid of its POWER.

At present they are doing some good. They keep up the public ordinances of the Gospel: Christians are edified, and some souls are born into the kingdom of the Redeemer. But if a pastor should expose, or warn against the danger and wickedness of the lodge, as he does against the danger and wickedness of the saloon, he knows it would cost him his pulpit and the privilege he now enjoys. If the ministers of Ohio should combine, and all stand up boldly at once, the case would be very different. But the ministers and churches are not yet sufficiently enlightened for this, and at present it is not a practicable thing. And as the help which at last came to the slave came from without, so must it be with the ministers and churches of Ohio.

Now, a rousing convention in Ohio, would not only awaken inquiry and spread light; but like the taking of Fort Donelson in the early part of the war, it would give hope and courage to our friends who are still in bondage. If Drs. Lytle and Vincent, and brothers Dillon and Martin and George and Ritchie and Scott and others would bestir themselves in this matter, as men stirred themselves in the fall election—find a place where a convention can be held, appoint the time, and advertise and agitate the matter—we might at least carry one stronghold, whilst we should weaken many others, and get courage and increased power to ourselves. And if we continue so doing the cause will live, though we die, the cause will triumph, though we live not to see it. God has given the world to his Son by covenant; and this is one part of the labor, one field of the battle which is to win the mighty result.

At the couvention at Cedarville five years ago, I made a motion that the friends of the cause there, form a compact organization with a membership, a treasury, a declared object and a declared purpose to work; and that committees be appointed to form county organizations and keep them alive where practicable. It seemed to me that it would be a good thing for us in Ohio to know what and where is our available strength. And the brethren said, "It would be a very good thing. We will do it at the next convention."

Alas! the "next convention" has not yet been held. But when it shall be, I hope the proposition will at least be considered. I hope also that such men as brothers Little and Ritchie and Stoddard will come prepared to discuss the questiou, How ought the pulpit to treat the subject of Freemasonry? The question is a great one. It is pertinent to the hour: and I have never seen any thing like a serious discussion of it. It is very well known what I did when a pastor. I distributed literature, exposed the secrets and character of the order in public lectures. I preached on the religion of Masonry after the style of the tract "Modern Heathenism:" and I lost two pulpits. I find myself excluded from many pulpits where I was once welcome. I have been years without any steady employment; and my social standiug is considerably shaken up. But the fact that I have suffered the loss of all things, does not prove that I was right, nor does it prove that I was wrong. The question is still open for those who are competent to consider it.

I have never fallen in with the AMERICAN PARTY, nor with that political movement to which the Cynosure has for the last six months or more given a portion of its energies: aud without entering on any discussion of the subject, I wish to say that I think this movement has been an injury to our cause: and of course I could not join in any attempt to build up a new political party. But such as I am, I remain,

Your fellow servant, WARREN TAYLOR.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A SECEDER TO A SECEDER.

DELAVAN, Ill.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Brother D. Benjamin wants a seceding Mason to answer certain questions: 1. How am I to work to accomplish the most good? To this question I would say, Ask God to show you the path in which to walk; then follow wherever he may lead without stopping to parley with the enemy. "Fear not them which kill the body; * * * but him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." As a workman must have tools suited to the work to be donc, if you fight the lodge-devil you must have weapons (books) offensive and defensive.

2. "Is it right, for Masonic lecturers to work the degrees, etc.?"

To this I would give an affirmative answer. It acts as a magnifying glass to exhibit more plainly to the naked eye its real abomination than a word or pen picture could possibly do. The brother is right in concluding the obligation makes the Mason. When the question is asked in the lodge, "What makes you a Mason?" the answer is, "My obligation."

The brother is right in concluding that a convention of all the demons in the dark abyss would be unable to frame words more blood-curdling and soul-damning than are found among the Masonic oaths, and the most redeeming feature of Masonry is prominent with the worst bands of pirates or highwaymen, namely, loyalty to the craft and the extension of help to one another when that help is possible, under the penalty of the most barbarous death.

I most heartily join with the brother in prayer for all those who have come out from among the lodge, conceived as it was, and brought forth in a saloon, the sister of infidelity and handmaid of crime. Lord speed the day when the head of the serpent may be crushed and the sons of men be liberated from the bondage of sin and death!

D. VAN DEVENTER.

WILL PROHIBITION BE ANTI-SECRET?

OLATHE, Kan., Jan. 2, 1885.

DEAR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Duty is duty, and the leading of truth must be heeded. I fear to-day that the present Prohibition party will not discuss nor say one word against the secret empire of devil worship; if so, the American party or organization must needs staud firm to its platform of principles and go forward independenlly, as they started out.

If prohibition journals and prohibition conveutions will not discuss the Anti-mason question then I, for one, will not work with them, and would advise all other anti-secret men to do likewise. Yet I believe we ought to press the question upon their journals and conventions until they fully refuse to let the question be discussed. Then we will stand clear and have an open field and a fair fight.

Intemperance is a great evil and brings an untold amount of preseut misery and suffering; while this is all true, the idolatrous devil-worship of the lodge lies at the bottom of intemperance, and is doiug more to destroy Christ's church and to hinder the kingdom of God, than any other evil in the world. Therefore we believe it necessary to stand to first principles, aud fight the lodge on this line to the end or to full success. H. CURTIS.

NOTE.—Mr. Curtis's principles are sound. There are no good morals in Africa where there is no true worship. A miud cut loose from the true God veers where there are no principles and "abides in the congregation of the dead.—ED.

PULL ALL TOGETHER.

CLEARFIELD, Iowa.

We wish to say a few words to friends concerning the National Christian Association. It is not large or strong enough to be corrupt. Institutions raised up of the Lord never become corrupt until they have accomplished what they have been brought into existence to do. The National Christian Association and its friends are called of the Lord to do a work that no single church could possibly do. Its composition and support are of the differeut denominations and Christians everywhere, heuce it is catholic and is as independent as independence can be; and for reformers to be independent of it, is to be independent of independence. We are all dependent on God and each other. The N. C. A. is dependent on us and we are dependent on it. If we act on the contrary we are in dauger; suppose each one of us goes off by himself and says, I am independent of all churches and associations; or if we split up into little factions, each faction having a head, the reform would be all head and no body. It is as uecessary to have a body as a head, and with a good head and a sound body there can be united and constant action all aloug the line of reform.

Let me admonish all friends not to cause any discord in the army of the Lord, If we do Satan will be glad aud the right willl suffer. May we put our trust in him "who is mighty in battle" and will surely help us according to our faith. Let us strive to be "one in Christ Jesus," then the army of the Lord can move forward, Satan's kingdom will tremble and the "unfruitful works of darkness" will utterly fail among the children of God. May the Lord bless all true friends of reform everywhere, and may very many that are not now our friends be drawn by the tender and strong cords of God's love to behold the bright and marvelous light of the Gospel which will separate the church from the world and worldly institutions, and from all religions except the religion of Christ.

"The noblest purpose wins at last,
The wrong fails in the end;
If thou wilt by the truth stand fast,
'Twill prove thy firmest friend."

CYRUS SMITH.

AN OUTLOOK FROM THE EMPIRE STATE.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—In your issue of Dec. 25th appears an article from the pen of Rev. Henry T. Cheever of Worcester, Mass., in which he gives the views of a New England divine in regard to the late political contest and its result, and the political outlook from his standpoint. As his views differ very materially from those of a St. John prohibitionist of the Empire State, will you give such an one a little space in your columns to briefly review part of that article.

He says it is not to be denied that according to Scripture, wrath is kindled to the uttermost against St. John and his followers, who snatched or diverted a well-earned victory from the Republican party. He does not give the chapter and verse of his text, so we will not dispute its application to the subject in consideration; and we certainly will not attempt to deny that such wrath is kindled and is burning fiercely in the hearts of many Republicans. So we do not differ thus far: but he seems to think that this wrath is righteous indignation of the grand leaders of the great Republican party, whom he styles the foremost of living American statesmen, for diverting from them a well-earned victory. This is the view of a Blaine prohibitionist. But a St. John prohibitionist looks upon it as the vindictive hate of disappointed office-seekers and their dupes against a few conscientious voters who refused to sacrifice principle for party and thus thwarted them in their schemes to continue in power. Let your readers judge which is true.

The next position that he takes is, that it would have been honorable and patriotic in the highest degree for St. John to have yielded to the considerations of Pres. Woolsey and others, and to have withdrawn from the canvass and candidacy at the last hour. Does the gentleman think that accepting a nomination of a party, and at the last hour, when too late to fill his place, to withdraw, is an act of honor and patriotism in the first degree? Perhaps it is in the eyes of a Blaine prohibitionist. But we St. John prohibitionists cannot so see it, and thank God, our noble standard-bearer has none of that kind of honor and patriotism; but left a much more lucrative occupation from motives of humanity to engage in this canvass. And as to the result of such an act of honor and patriotism, does Mr. Cheever or President Woolsey think that, if St. John had withdrawn at the last hour, it would have made the slightest difference in the result of the election? Perhaps it would, but St. John prohibitionists cannot so see it. We had made up our minds before we had a candidate that we could not conscientiously endorse the principles of either of the two political parties by our votes, and if such an act of honor and patriotism had left us without a candidate, we would not have voted the electoral ballot at all.

He says in an article which he wrote before the election, and from which he quotes here, "I want by such an intelligent, well-aimed ballot to take the life out of that party that is as hostile to prohibition as it once was to emancipation." But how would he do it? by voting for a party whose highest temperance principle is license and regulation, and whose candidate advocates making such blood money a permanent revenue for our nation. Are not both parties equally hostile to prohibition? I cannot notice all the positions of that article, but I would advise Bro. Cheever to defer writing another platform for the Republican party until they need one, for I think this wrath will not be instrumental in bringing back the lost sheep. JACOB ACKART.

THIS IS A BAD RECORD.

ALBION, Ind., Jan. 1, 1885.

Answer to the inquiry in last Cynosure, "Will the United Brethren fellowship this minor order?"

Of course they will; and the major ones, too. St. Joseph conference, Indiana, has a surplus of Masons and Odd-fellows taken into the church with scarcely a protest. Recently they held a protracted meeting in this place. The preacher was assisted by two Wesleyan preachers, and two Methodist preachers. One of the Methodists is a Mason and the other an Odd-fellow. Harmony prevailed, I believe, throughout the meeting.

During the last year, in this place, the United Brethren invited and accepted the preaching of a man who was unanimously expelled from his church here by his annual conference for repeated and general libertinism, and then most of them, together with twenty-nine Masons and Odd-fellows signed a declaration that he was a "good Christian gentleman." The preacher expelled was not a U. B., and hence there was a voluntary surrender of all distinction between right and wrong. S. L. COOK.

PITH AND POINT.

FROM KNOX ACADEMY (COVENANTER), SELMA, ALA.

I have only now and then seen a copy for more than a year and should, indeed, be glad to get the Cynosure. I shall also be glad to send you an article now and then, as opportunity affords, giving an account of the work in this part of the land. Whenever I can in any way benefit your good cause, I shall cheerfully offer my service. Our field here is large, and the laborers are few. I often regret that the pressing duties of our work prevent me from doing more in the cause of anti-secretism. Wishing you abundant success, I remain.—G. M. ELLIOTT, Selma, Ala.

THE KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

This form of Baal-worship is doing all it can in this place to entice young men into its trap. I know of one who is in danger of being thus drawn in, whom I wish to save if I can. Our county superintendent of schools, who is a Mason and also a K. of P., is trying to induce a very worthy young man to join the latter. Please send me the antidote.—J. W. MARGRAVE, Hiawatha, Kans.

LUTHERANS VS. DRUIDS.

I am lecturing to my congregation on secret societies and am besides frequently consulted on the subject by brethren in the ministry, and need all the information I can obtain. I am, for example, just now in a strait, having been consulted respecting the Druids. If you have anything that will show the character of this lodge, please forward to my address at once. Our church, the Evangelical Lutheran, is more and more protesting against secret fraternities. The evil of secretism is great and all the more so because of its sneaking character. I wish you God speed in your opposition to this national sore.—D. SIMON, Ev. Luth. Pastor at Prospect, O.

We are anxious for information respecting this secret order, for general circulation among our readers, as well as for this excellent pastor. Centuries ago his German ancestors who were converted to Christ were confronted and opposed by the old heathen system of Druidism, whose name has been adopted by a modern secret lodge, and probably its essential religious principles.

A COLD NEW YEAR'S.

We hope you had a happy New Year's. We had a bright, sunny day here, but in the morning the ordinary thermometers were of no account, except to say that the weather was below them altogether; and the spirit thermometers registered the cold at 53 below zero on the west side of the river. The "oldest inhabitant" can remember nothing quite equal to it. But it lasted only a short time. Thanks to a kind Providence, none were very badly frozen.—W. W. AMES, Menomonie Wis.

TEMPERANCE.

THE CATHOLICS AND THE SALOONS.

The national meeting of the Catholic Total Abstinance Union of America which met in Chicago last August, provided a committee to memorialize the Third Plenary Council lately met in Baltimore. In that memorial appear the following paragraphs, which are remarkable in their revelation of a growing intelligence respecting the relations of the Catholic church and the criminal classes which must lead to deeper inquiry and demand for reformation:

"By no means the least evil connected with liquor-selling is that the saloons have become among us

THE VERY CENTRES OF POLITICAL CORRUPTION.

Publicans in every country are meddlers with the lower sort of politics; in this country an additional motive is that the spread of drunkenness has aroused the deepest excitement of orderly citizens. The better part of the people have made incessant efforts to control the liquor-traffic by law. Some such laws were indeed plainly the dictate of a panic-stricken state of mind, or inspired by that fanatical confusion of ideas which history tells us has ever been the reaction against widespread vice; some have dealt with this moral danger with the desperation of communities dealing with cholera or yellow fever. But much of the legislation has been reasonable. And instead of obeying the law, even when plainly moderate in its provisions, liquor-dealers have constantly resented legal interference of any kind with their traffic, and have habitually resorted to corrupt political practices to escape from it. They have lobbies well provided with money in every legislature; they notoriously corrupt the officers of the law whose testimony would be necessary to convict them in the courts; they have public men openly committed to their interest and doing their bidding with implicit obedience; funds for the corruption of voters are disbursed in their places; and, in a word, they have habitually and in the most public manner proclaimed their defiance of laws the most just and moderate, such as the Sunday-closing law and the midnight-closing law.

"The American people certainly need to realize that the law of the land represents the authority of God in the civil order. In no way is this so practically shown as by the frequent defeats of the respectable classes in their struggles with the saloon-keepers.

WHAT A SCANDALOUS STATE OF THINGS that the liquor interest, now the most potent of political forces among us, has the audacity to proclaim, and bids fair to establish as a principle, that it is a usurpation for the State to legislate for the proper observance of the Lord's day!

"Meantime, saloon-keepers have in many cases become conspicuous in their relations with the church; they rent prominent pews; they appear upon committees; they give donations with ostentatious generosity, and in some places even boast that they have built our churches; they become members of church societies; they have in some cases had articles used for convivial drinking voted at church fairs to the most popular of their class in the parish; and their saloons are often located opposite or adjacent to the church, and especially about the entrance to Catholic cemeteries; until in many localities the despair of good, sober Catholics and the scandal to honest Protestants are beyond words to describe, and non-Catholics in some places may even begin to fancy that the boast sometimes made by liquor-dealers may be true—that their business actually meets the hearty approval of the Catholic church.

"Alas! what a disgrace to our religion, to the religion of Jesus Christ!

"A large proportion of the drunkards are ours; too many of the criminals and paupers in the public charge (four-fifths of whom are such on account of this vice) are ours; and in many of the chief cities and towns the bulk of the saloon-keepers are ours.

"How long shall we permit this calamitous state of things to go on? How long will the sloth of sober Catholics prevent them from doing penance for the sins of their fallen brethren? How long will self-indulgence hinder good men from taking some practical measures to reform their brethren? How long will they halt at ordinary remedies in the presence of so desperate a crisis? It was nothing but the full realization of these evils of intemperance which forced the Catholic temperance societies of the United States into the public career they have assumed in our National Union. God raised up bishops of his church and priests of known piety and intelligence to lead our movement. Our appliances have been purely and simply the practice and preaching of the glorious methods of the true faith since Christ suffered that men might rejoice. We have but taken up the ancient weapon which alone has the power to conquer vice, especially any form of sensuality—the heroic practice and the fervent preaching for love of God, of the opposing and contrasting virtue."

The attorney-general of Illinois was asked to answer the question: "Can Catholic convicts, under the Constitution, be lawfully compelled to attend religious services which they are in conscience forbidden to attend?" It is easy to see the reason for such a question and its animus. But the judge replied to it sensibly and wisely by saying that as the prisoners are there in charge of the State, and that since its reasons for holding religious services are that their morals may be improved, it has the right to require that they shall attend them. But how funny it is to see the man who had committed theft airing his "conscience" when it comes to worshiping!—United Presbyterian.

Dr. Joseph Parker says Mr. Gladstone is one of the most "conservative" men in England, which at first sight appears to be conspicuously untrue, since he is at the head of the Liberal party, the very spirit of which is progressiveness. What he means is, that the great premier is conservative in a broad way, caring for real principles which he knows are necessary for the life of the nation, and caring nothing for the small partisan matters that so greatly concern some of his contemporaries. And in this lies his greatness and his value to the English people.

A NEW PAMPHLET.

A WOMAN'S VICTORY;

OR

THE QUERY OF THE LODGEVILLE CHURCH

BY JENNIE L. HARDIE.

This simple and touching story which was lately published in the Cynosure is now ready for orders in a beautiful pamphlet. It is worth reading by every Anti-mason —and especially BY HIS WIFE. Get it and take it home to cheer the heart of your companion who may desire to do something for Christ against great evils, but is discouraged from making any public effort. PRICE, FIFTEEN CENTS, Ten for a dollar.

The American Party.

FIRST NOMINATION for President at Oberlin, Ohio, May 23, 1872.
PLATFORM ADOPTED at Chicago, June 28, 1872.
NAME ADOPTED at Syracuse, N. Y., June 3, 1874.

PRESIDENTAL CANDIDATES:

1872—Charles Francis Adams and Joseph L. Barlow.
1876—James B. Walker and Donald Kirkpatrick.
1880—J. W. Phelps and Samuel C. Pomeroy.
1884—J. Blanchard and J. W. Conant nominated; the former withdrawing, Samuel C. Pomeroy was nominated. Both nominees withdrawing, the support of the party was generally given to John P. St. John and William Daniel, candidates of the Prohibition party.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1884.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency,
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

WHEATON COLLEGE has at this time more students in attendance than at any one time for ten years previous; is out of debt; and has just received notice of a will executed in its favor, which is the third within a few years. In one case the testator has died and the legacy inured to the College. Some twelve or fifteen persons were added to the College church last Sabbath.

A BRAVE DUTCH SOLDIER had a fixed principle never to turn back when ordered to "charge." He cut his way through the enemy's line in front of him, and went straight on punching the air with his bayonet. He could not violate his rule by turning back.

The city of Milwaukee, though so largely inhabited by Germans and noted for its great breweries, is not thereby hindered from taking a noble stand for the sanctity of the Sabbath. On the question of opening on that day an exposition now being held there, the stockholders voted about five to two against the measure.

THE PRAISES OF THE CYNOSURE.

Read them below! When we stumbled on this friendly notice of us in the Philadelphia Christian Statesman, all unlooked for and unexpected, we wiped our spectacles, read over the article anew, and a little realized how the saved at last will wonder if the Judge means them. To be approved in a style so clear, comprehensive, and beautiful, makes us wish and long, and hope, (faintly) that the writer may not be mistaken in the Cynosure, and that our readers may see it as he does. We dare not just now commend the Statesman, lest our adjectives all come in the superlative degree. By and by we will notice it. It is now some twenty years since the Statesman editor met us in Boston, and taught us more of our Government than all we had learned before. Since then, like a light in a tower, above fogs, and currents, and conflicts of parties, the Statesman has thrown a clear and steady light on the seething, political ocean below:

A CAPITAL PAPER.—Among all our exchanges there is none brighter, racier or more vigorous than the Christian Cynosure. Its pungent editorials, and crisp and incisive comments on men and events, rouse the sluggish mind like the stroke of a whip. Its keen insight into the secret causes of public movements is always instructive, and its moral heroism in rebuking sin is, to timid and feeble souls, as bracing as first frost-laden October breeze. There has been a steady and rapid improvement for months past in the literary power revealed in its pages, and in the mechanical taste and skill with which they are sent forth to the world. No reform movement was ever begun or carried on with more self-sacrificing zeal, more intelligent convictions, more ardent piety, more unflinching courage, or more of that chivalrous, adventurous spirit which commands admiration, and under God, secures victory, than the modern American movement against the selfishness and impiety of the secret lodge. No man who wishes to keep himself informed on the living issues of his day, ought to fail to recive a small assortment of reform papers every week; and one of the first places on such a list ought to be given to the Christian Cynosure.

MORMONISM, MASONRY AND CONGREGATIONALISM.

> What, do you tremble? Are you all afraid?
> Alas, I blame you not, for you are mortal,
> And mortal eyes cannot endure the devil!
> —Shakespeare, Richard III.

Joseph Smith was a Mason. Sam'l D. Greene, author of the Broken Seal, told the writer that he (Greene) had lectured (practiced the degrees) by the hour together in his tavern in Batavia. When driven from Ohio to Nauvoo, Ill., Smith obtained a "dispensation" from the Illinois Grand Lodge, which was only withdrawn after Mormonism became "clandestine" Masonry.

Now to set Masons to suppress Mormons is like setting a flock of mice to exterminate rats. Ex.-U. S. Senator Doolittle lately presided in Farwell Hall and Rev. Mr. McNeice addressed an Anti-Mormon meeting. Neither of them said one word of the Mormon lodge government. They call it "priestism" and say it is anti-American. Is not Masonry the same despotism run by priests? Is Masonic priestism any better than Mormon priestism. The Masons have an "Endowment House" in every principal city; and the Mormons a Masonic temple in Salt Lake. Now to decry Mormonism and shield Masonry by silence is simply lying by suppressing the truth. It is bald hypocrisy and Mormons know it. But, more material still, God knows it who alone can suppress Mormonism.

M. W. Montgomery, a former student of Wheaton College, and late Secretary of Home Missions in Minnesota, has returned from Norway and Sweeden where he has found and reports 100,000 or more members of free mission churches. And he has thrilled American Congregationalists with his well-drawn account of this interesting people. This free church movement is yet in the gristle. It is a movement of the people for a pure spiritual Christianity, and a terrible indictment of the Lutheran state church; which it accuses of teaching salvation by ceremonies, baptized worldliness, despotism and oppression.

In his interesting book, Mr. Montgomery discusses intemperance, Mormonism, etc., but we have looked through his pages in vain for the slightest allusion to the organized deism and despotism of the lodge. If Mr. Montgomery is ignorant, as a former student of Wheaton he is without excuse. As an American with his eyes open, he knows that lodges profess to send their dead to heaven, no matter how they have lived; and while the Lutheran state church holds to Father, Son and Holy Ghost, the lodge denies them by wholly ignoring them.

The son of a Danish government officer, born in Greenland, was a Wheaton student about the time Mr. Montgomery was there, who informed us that he had joined the lodge in Denmark, as he had the state church; and that all or nearly all Danish government officers are Masons. He must have known that the Scandinavian Lutheran church condemns and excludes the lodge. And Rebold would tell him that Luther's Reformation nearly extinguished the German secret lodges.

Why should he not tell us whether the lodge is snaking its way into these Swedish Congregational churches? His book tells us (p. 25,) that "A Norwegian business man of much intelligence and fine spirit, whose sons had been in America, asked: 'Why do not the Americans abolish polygamy?' I answered that there was no good reason. With elevated voice and flashing eyes he said: 'Then why, in the name of God, do you not stop it?' I was dumb."

Now, why did not Mr. Montgomery answer, "because Mormons are Masons, and sworn not to tell!" Polygamous marriages are performed in "the Endowment House," in secret; and that Mormonism is Masonry, packed in degrees, each Mormon sworn to silence and obedience under penalty of having his throat cut, and body mangled; that these oaths with death penalties at their heels, supplant and suppress, set aside the civil oath of Christ as nugatory and vain?

The true answer doubtless would be that Mr. Montgomery knows these facts, or is wilfully and deliberately ignorant of them.

But if thou forbear to deliver them that is drawn unto death, that are ready to be slain; if thou sayest, Behold we knew it not: doth not he that pondereth the heart consider it, and shall he not render to every man according to his work? Proverbs 24: 11, 12.

The only excuse for this terrible silence concerning the lodge is that given by Anne for the dread of Richard III.—

> "————for you are mortal,
> And mortal eyes cannot endure the devil!"

The world-god is Satan, and the dread of him suppresses truth because its utterances would be unpopular. This silence is all that devils asked of Christ. Christ did not grant it. His professed followers, alas! do.

The information we most need of those churches is precisely what Bro. Montgomery does not bring. We have the facts from Denmark. Why not give us those from Sweden and Norway. There is no spiritual, observant pastor who does not know that the lodge is a deadly cancer on the vitals of Christianity. And the lodge is the worship paid to the god of this world; the antagonist of Christ.

HANDS OFF THE MONUMENT.

The Freemasons about Washington are in high dudgeon. Their Grand Lodge laid the corner-stone of the Washington Monument, and Washington himself was, they claim, one of the most distinguished Masons of his day; it is therefore their privilege by the divine right of Masonry to perform at the dedication of the monument. Anticipating an obsequious reception they have been preparing to attend in great numbers. But the Congressional committee does its own thinking, and Senator Sherman, the chairman informs the Hiramites that the monument is a National affair, built with the Nation's money, and the ceremony shall be accordingly National. But let us be aware of the wiles of the lodge. It is not easily put off; and may yet secure a recognition in place of the mob. Therefore let every Anti-mason draw up a memorial and send—by postal card if need be. Get as many citizens to sign as possible and do it before another week passes. The following form will do for a model. Use it or write something better:

To Hon. John Sherman, Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

SIR:—As American citizens we thank you for your refusal to turn over the ceremonies of the Washington monument dedication to the secret sect of Freemasons, whom Washington abandoned in early life, and against whose principles he spoke with noble patriotism in his Farewell Address. We pray you to persist in your determination to make the dedication National and honorable to the American name.

—Bro. Hinman's letters deserve a careful reading this week. After making an appointment at Elmira, Ill., he has gone on to Altona in Knox county, Ill., from whence he writes: "I find this county and probably this part of the State, more favorable for our work than points where I have been before. The political prejudice is abating, and I think we may do an excellent work during the coming year."

—Rev R. Loggan, the new Kansas agent, writes from Olathe, Kan., that he expects to visit the following places in that State: Winchester, Jefferson Co.; North Cedar, Jackson Co.; Nortonville, Jefferson Co.; Leona, Doniphan Co.; Robinson, Brown Co.; Willis, Brown Co.; Sabetha, Nemaha Co.; Washington, Washington Co. Friends in all these localities should be making every preparation for a good work.

—The Wesleyan Methodist surmises that the brother C. P. Hard, who is laboring in Secunderabad, India, with our missionary correspondent, Bro. C. B. Ward, is a son of the old Methodist minister, Rev. A. Hard, of Painted Post, N. Y., who attended the N. C. A. National convention in Syracuse, in 1874, and did good service for the reform.

—At the request of the Board of Trustees of Capital University, Columbus, Ohio, Prof. M. Loy, the president of the institution, will take a needed rest of three months. He will also for the same time turn over the editorial work of the Lutheran Standard to the professors of the University. Prof. Loy has performed this labor for the Standard for twenty-one years, without intermission, and in an able and satisfactory manner.

—Rev. Dr. F. A. Noble of the Union Park Congregational church, this city, has refused a call from the First Congregational church of Washington city.

AN OPEN LETTER

TO DR. PETER WALDENSTRÖM, PROFESSOR OF THEOLOGY IN THE STATE SCHOOL AT GEFLE, SWEDEN; PREST. E. J. EKMAN AND PROF. FERNHOLM, KRISTINEHAM, SWEDEN, AND OTHER FREE MISSION CHURCH LEADERS.

Beloved in our Lord Jesus Christ:—Our respected brother, M. W. Montgomery, messenger of our American churches and late your guest, has made us know and love you. We therefore write you this letter in the name and for the cause of our common Lord, and beg from yourselves and others an early reply.

In May, 1882, a Norwegian foreign missionary, named Skrefsrud, printed a letter praising Freemasonry. This missionary says the lodge which he joined, allowed him to except from his oaths every thing which would offend his conscience. He then says, "The basis of Masonry is our Christian faith" as "revealed in the Word of God;" that "only Christians can even proximately understand Masonry;" that "if Masons are not Christians the fault is theirs, not the fault of the lodge," etc., with much more to that effect.

In September following (1882) Prof. Fr. Nielson, Professor of Church History, Copenhagen, replied to this missionary's letter, and we have the German translation of Nielson's book, Leipsic, 1882, in which he controverts and censures the words of the missionary that Masonry is from Solomon and derived from the Bible.

Amid much that is important Prof. Nielson says in his book, that in 1870, Frederick William, the Crown Prince of Germany, and Royal Grand Master of German Masons made a speech in the German Grand Lodge, in which he said that Masonry had been kept out of General History till few know anything about it; that, "as the symbol of light, the lodge owed it to itself to explain its history to the world," and that "historical truth can only be safely established by historical investigation." He said, further, that "we have from other sources what truth Masonry professes to teach by its symbols, which are therefore superfluous and unnecessary;" and that he was resolved that Masonry should be investigated, and only that left which investigation should confirm as true." This speech of the Crown Prince, their Royal Grand Master, Prof. Nielson says, produced excitement and dissatisfaction, in which the Crown Prince said, "After serving as your Grand Master fourteen years, in which I have done much for our order, I now lay my office aside." His successor in the office of Grand Master, knelt, put his hand in that of the Crown Prince, and made a solemn vow to continue the investigation "in the spirit in which your Royal Highness has commenced it;" that a lodge-leader who stood by remarked aloud to his fellows, "That will come to nothing."

The book further says, that Archdeacon Schiffamn, who was "Chief Architect" and natural successor of the Crown Prince, as Grand Master, insisted on investigating Masonry as the Prince had began, and the Grand Lodge expellec Schiffman, July 27, 1876; that Schiffman's local lodge took his part, and the Grand Lodge restored him; but that he (Schiffman) refused to go back, assigning as his reason that the Grand Lodge was "a school of hierarchy and absolutism."

Now, beloved in the Lord, we wish you to inform us whether we can rely on the accuracy of Prof. Nielson's book? Also; whether the Norwegian missionary, Skrefsrud, has made any converts to Masonry in the churches of Sweden and Norway, especially among the the Free or Mission churches. And what are your personal views of, and your relations to the secret lodge system?

We are aware that the government officers in Southern Scandinavia are all, or most of them, Freemasons, and that monarchs join the lodges in person or by proxy to protect themselves from its craft and vengeance. We know, too, that Luther, who was a free mission man in his day, nearly exterminated the secret lodges from Germany, and we are comforted and strengthened by the Scandinavians and Protestant Germans in America, who are almost all opposed to the secret lodges, as a system of anti-Christ forbidden by Paul, Eph. 5: 11. We have also read and believe the book of the celebrated Professor Robinson of Edinburgh (1798), himself a high Mason, who had visited the chief lodges of Europe, and who shows that the lodge is "a conspiracy against all government and religion but its own." And though your kings and princes can save themselves for a time by joining the lodges, they sanction a Christless system of oaths and secrecy which will eventually destroy all law and order as dynamite destroys buildings. But as we have no kings in America, but the secret kings of the lodge, we have no way to save our courts, our legislatures and churches, but by open and direct appeals to Christ and the people; and we have therefore established printing houses in the cities of Chicago and Washington, to discuss the lodge before our Christian brethren and our American statesmen. We send you copies of the Christian Cynosure containing this letter, and beg you will aid us by your correspondence and your prayers.

Hoping to hear from many of you, and invoking the choicest blessings of God on yourselves, families, churches, and labors, we are, with sincere love and affection, Your brethren in Christ,

OUR LETTER FROM GREECE.

ANDROS, Greece, Via Syra, Dec. 8, 1884.

DEAR BRO:—We feel very sorry that we did not write for so long. For some time now we were preparing and then moving down to the sea-shore, and we were unable to write to you any sooner. More than three weeks ago we came down here to Batse on the sea-shore, and we expect to spend the winter here and and then in the spring visit the different cities of Andros and also Syra. In Syra there is an English church, so that we may hear some preaching and do good also.

We have in view to travel all around this island, and in this way preach the truths of the Gospel to the people. The trouble is, that in all these sea-ports, the worst day is Sunday. More buying and selling goes on, on that day than on any other, and this place is not an exception. We pray to God that the day may soon come when these people will see and feel the influences of violating the Sabbath.

After we came to Batse, the priest here lost a son ten years old. They were in great sorrow and we called many times to see them, and my wife took the Bible and read different passages and chapters to give consolation to the priest's wife. She seemed very much pleased and seemed to derive some comfort from what was read. In her son's coffin she put some incense, two long wax candles, and a box of matches to light the candles with thrt he might not be in the dark. So you see that these people are very much in the dark as yet, or are quite heathenish in some respects. But the distress of the priest was our opportunity, and in no other way could we have come as near to them, or could have read to his wife from the Bible, or could have talked with them and to them as we have done. For no matter what we say, these people still think that the Bible printed in Greek as we have it, is different from their Bible.

Also in the short time since we came down here, another father and mother lost a little child, and we found the same opportunity there, to speak words of comfort and to tell of the beauty of Heaven and how there are no sorrows there, neither sickness, nor have they any need of the sun or the moon, for the glory of God is the light there.

Also the priest who is a good friend and near neighbor at our mountain home, felt very badly, as well as his wife, to have us come down here to stay, and it happened that we had only been down here less than a week when he, the priest, was taken suddenly very sick. I went and staid with him night and day until he was out of danger, and have been up to see him every few days since then. He had hemorrhage of the stomach and came near losing his life. We were very thankful that his life was spared, for he and his wife have been very near friends of ours, not only since we came here from America; but, as we have mentioned before, he has been a true friend of mine ever since we were boys and went to school together, and he has not deserted me because we differ in our religion.

Dear Christian friends, pray for us, that God will pour out his blessing on our work here. Your brother in Christ, ANASTASIOS D. ZARAPHONITHES.

READ AND ACT.

A form of request was printed in the Cynosure of December 18th, which, after consultation with friends personally and by correspondence, has been modified and is herewith submitted for the signatures of all who approve of the convention. I desire also to make this request: that when you read this you set about getting as many signers as possible and when your list is completed forward it at once to me at 221 West Madison street, Chicago. One man promises 500 from his county. A hundred thousand can easily be obtained by a little effort. Will you do your part and report early?

A NEW ENGLAND MEETING FOR REFORM.

A REQUEST FOR A CALL.

The undersigned request the directors of the National Christian Association—

1. To call a Convention at some convenient point in New England, to meet in May, 1885, to consider the Secret Lodge system, and promote Temperance and general Reform, in the interest of the Christian religion and that Civil Government which is ordained of God. Said Convention to consist of all persons who favor the suppression of the liquor traffic and who desire to see the prohibition work divorced from secret lodges.

2. That invitations be extended to President Julius H Seelye, of Amherst College; Joseph Cook, of Boston President J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College; A. A. Miner, D. D , of Boston; Hon. Samuel C. Pomeroy, of Washington; and John B. Gough to address the Convention

Finally, the call to issue when this paper is signed by ten thousand persons who approve the Convention.

The Massachusetts Constitutional Prohibitory Committee has received petitions for prohibition from prisoners in the jails at Pittsfield, Springfield Northampton, Greenfield, Fitchburg and Worcester, many of the signers saying: "Rum ruined us." One says: "I had to pass five saloons going to my work. If they are not closed when I get out how can I stand?"

OBITUARY.

MRS. MARY MITCHELL fell asleep December 25, 1884, in the 78th year of her age.

She was born and always lived in Pittston, Me. Her husband, Enos Mitchell, three daughters and one son, survive her. For nine years she has been failing in strength and activity, the last five requiring constant care, not being able to stand alone. Her disease was of such a character as to deprive her of all power of motion, but her intellect was clear most of the time. As the sun goes down at even, so her life ebbed away, and she fell asleep not to wake on earth.

She had been a member of the Congregational church since her youth. She saw no merits in herself on which to obtain Heaven. Three years ago a Bible agent called. He greeted her by saying, "Well, mother, you have been serving the Lord a good many years." She quickly made answer, "I've nothing to brag of." Though she seldom took part in conversation and could not form sentences readily, yet she was awake to the fact that she had no merit in herself. Whenever any one sympathized with her she reminded them that if she did not complain they need not. Patience was uppermost in all her weakness.

She was a true helpmeet, ever careful, industrious and prudent. "A chaste keeper at home," according to Paul's doctrine. Sometimes she imagined she was not at home. Her husband would read from the Bible a few minutes and it never failed to restore quiet. The Word was a real opiate to the bewildered mind. She loved the Bible and enjoyed hearing the Cynosure read. Her golden wedding was celebrated eight years ago last May.

F. M. M.

DIED, at Oneida, Ill , on Tuesday, December 30, 1884, DYER FORD, in the 87th year of his age. A long, useful life is closed; he rests in peace.

This brief note is sent us by the son of the above, a merchant in Oneida. Mr. Ford was a man of superior parts, sterling integrity, and excellent general character. He became a citizen of Galesburg, Ill., at an early day; stood firmly by the country against the slave power, North and South; and steadily opposed the lodge. His two daughters married officers in the army, and one of them and her husband, Col. Clendenning, were graduated and much-loved pupils of the senior editor of the Cynosure, while President of Knox College.

THE HOME.

WAITING.

The day is done:
Soft as a dream the sunset fades and dies,
And silent stars amid the dusky skies,
Shine one by one.

The shadows wait:
And climbing upward over spires and towers,
Seem drawing softly this dull earth of ours
To heaven's gate.

We wait the night
With no vain thought of darkness or of dread,
But dreams of peace for weary heart and head,
And slumbers light.

We wait, nor fear
The few short hours of silence and of gloom
Before the eastern hills shall blush with bloom,
And morn be near.

My God! my all!
When the dim hour draws near us by thy grace,
To meet thy white death-angel face to face,
And hear thy call;

When life lies low—
A gasping shadow by the altar stairs
That leadeth up from darkness unawares
To heaven's glow;

Then let us wait
In faith and trust with prayers and blessings fond,
All mindful of the morning light beyond—
Before the gate.

Not sore distrest;
But calmly folding life's dull garb away,
Lie down in peace to wait the coming day,
And find our rest.

THE CRY OF THE PERISHING.

The No-Church is the largest on earth. It numbers three-fourths of the human race. It is marching on, while I write, a thousand millions strong. A thousand millions! Imagination fairly staggers under such a figure. Suppose this unspeakable army were to file before you at the rate of one a minute: it would be 5844 A. D. when the last man drew up, walking twelve hours a day; in a year, a quarter of a million, and in forty years, ten millions would have passed you, leaving 990 millions yet to come. You would have to stand on that spot 3960 years to see the rear of that prodigious host. All these are now living, and in a few years will be dead, having never heard so much as that there was a Jesus. This after eighteen centuries of the Cross! Each of these is a human being, I suppose? Yes. According to your creed, damned at death? Yes. With a dark past and darker future? Yes. Are you a Christian? Yes. And not giving even a passing thought to those poor fate-crushed pilgrims, Christless and weary, trudging out into the great night? What! grudged the coin to your mission collector; spent all on your own dear, precious, darling self! God help you, brother. You shall awake yet, like Jonah, and go down to God's school in the belly of hell to learn by misery what mercy means. O sleek, comfortable, well-bolstered Christians, go weep and howl. Your gold and silver are rusted, and the rust of it shall eat your flesh as fire. Ye soft-cushioned, self-loving, select souls, your purgatory comes. In heaven's name fling off this lethargy, and hear the cry of the perishing! In the name of this Niagara of humanity, plunging over to the abyss, awake! We are our brother's keeper, or his killer.—G. Gordon McLeod.

FOR DEAR LIFE.—A TRUE INCIDENT.

Snow! Ay! it did snow that 18th of January! I debated a bit before I put Cherry in at all, for, though it wasn't snowing then, at eight in the morning, there had been plenty in the night, and I knew those great lead-colored clouds meant mischief brewing, and there might be heavy drifts on the wild moorland road before I could reach Burnley. But then, although my busiest time, just about Christmas and the New Year, was over, still there was a good heap of parcels to go, and all the folks, as usual, wanted them delivered "immediately." Madge didn't half like my starting, certainly, but she isn't one of those weak, witless women who are forever in a fright and for stopping a man doing his duty; so she tied up a dapper little package of sandwiches—"Lest you should be late into Burnley, Ralph," she said; "you mustn't go hungry on such a long, cold ride." And she gave me a can of cold cocoa, too, and plenty of warm rugs. All the parcels were securely fixed and Cherry was impatient to be gone, when, just as Madge was handing me in her nosebag of oats, in case of accident or delay, a poor, anxious-looking young mother, with an infant in her arms, came hurrying up. and begged that I would take her on to Burnley. There was no railway station at our village, and the carrier's cart was often made available for passengers who could not afford or were not in time for the coach. I had plenty of room that morning, but with the prospect of such a journey I refused at first to take a woman and child in charge. But her pitiful, passionate appeal I shall never forget. Her sailor husband had just come into port, sick and friendless, and she was eager to reach the junction at Burnley in time to go down by the night mail. Such a piteous appeal I could not resist, and soon she was comfortably fixed among the packages, with her modest bundle. She paid not the smallest heed to my warnings of the intense cold we would be likely to meet. She only wrapped the little one more securely in her shawl, and, woman-like, forgot all danger and exposure in the thought of child and husband.

Cherry stepped briskly out down the quiet village street—quieter than ever that morning—every footfall and rolling wheel muffled in the deep snow. We went along a deserted, dreary road for a few miles, and then up a gentle ascent, out on to the open moor. A few kindly inquiries soon opened the lips of my companion, and she talked freely of her sailor love home from his first short voyage since their marriage. He had come in, she said, quite unexpectedly to another port, and a few lines had reached her, saying, he was ill and wanted her; and then the anxious, troubled look came back to her face again as she thought of him sick among strangers, and of the many hours it would take to reach his side. Meanwhile, the heavy gray clouds seemed bending down over the moors with their weight of snow, and the already keen wind rose almost to a gale, driving the first large flakes of snow with great force into our faces. Thicker and faster it came down, with blinding fury. and I could scarcely see the road three yards ahead—not that there was danger of meeting anything, but I had to be on the lookout for drifts, and in some parts it was difficult to keep to the right track, so deeply was every landmark covered. Cherry shook her fat sides, and went forward with a will. The brisk exercise and her shaggy coat kept her far warmer than was her driver, and she knew every inch of the way as well as I did. I had to get down once or twice to clear her hoofs of the heavy balls of snow that clung to them, and my attention was so taken up with keeping to the road that I could no longer talk to my companion; so, after crooning a lullaby to her child, the woman fell into silence.

Thicker and heavier came down that terrible snowfall, more furiously and fiercely blew the cutting wind, till it was only by looking at the reins I knew that they were still in my hands. Every rug and wrapper—and there were plenty—I heaped upon my companion and myself; but I began to repent that I had not been firm in refusing to bring a weak woman and child through such weather. Fortunately we met with no serious drifts. The wind was so high that it drove off much of the snow from the frozen road, and in some places it was as clean as if swept; so Cherry kept up her pace, which I gave her to understand must be to-day her very best, and to encourage the willing beast and keep up my own warmth, I ran for some distance at her side. But I could not persuade the young mother to take any exercise. She was terribly cold, and I knew it would warm and restore her, and offered to take the child while she walked, if only a dozen yards. But she steadfastly refused to part with the little one, and thought it quite cruel of me to suggest that she should walk through such snow and wind. So I gave it up, and persuaded her to eat some of Madge's provisions, and to take a few mouthfuls of cocoa, after which she seemed a little warmer. I took my own wraps, and added to those already about her, and, by dint of continual movement, just managed to keep my own blood from freezing. The infant slept, warm and cozy in its mother's arms, and I turned my thoughts again to watching the road and keeping Cherry well up to her duty. There was no lull in the storm. I missed landmarks which had never been covered before, and once or twice felt in some uncertainty about the way. Benumbed and half frozen, I became drowsy and was awakened by a violent jerk. It was only Cherry suddenly pulling up, very much astonished that her master should have failed to notice how the snow had balled again on her feet. She had stopped in sheer desperation. Had not the cold overpowered me, I should, of course, have relieved her long before. That sudden awakening brought with it a horrible dread. Was this the fatal sleep which I had heard would overtake those benumbed with cold, which ended in death?

I shook myself, and sprang from the cart, cleared Cherry's hoof once more, and ran, till quite out of breath, at her side. Then I climbed back to my seat and spoke to my companion. In the back of the cart, under cover, she was much more sheltered than I, and was abundantly wrapped in warm clothing, but she did not reply. I left Cherry to her own devices, and seized the woman by the shoulder.

"Do not sleep, at your peril," I cried. "It is certain death! Rouse yourself; we are well on our way. Think of your husband awaiting you!"

But she only moved languidly, leaned her head against the side of the cart, and murmured—

"Leave me alone; I am so sleepy. O! let me be; no, I am not cold."

More and more alarmed, I tried in vain to arouse her.

"But I cannot let you alone; you will die," I said, and shook her again, almost roughly.

But it was all in vain. What was to be done? No house was in reach for miles. We should yet be some hours before reaching Burnley, and if the poor thing was suffered to fall asleep I knew there would be no waking, and the vital warmth of the mother once gone, what hope of the infant surviving? It was a horrible thought, but I felt it face me as a possible truth, that I might drive into Burnley that night, if I reached it at all, with two frozen corpses! In that hour of dire extremity I turned to the great Counselor for wisdom and guidance. In vain I tried to rouse the woman to take cocoa or food; in vain I shook, or even struck her, to induce her to move. With her infant locked in her fond embrace, she seemed fast sinking into the arms of death beyond the reach of any aid I could give. Should I use violence? By the lash of my whip could I force her to take the exercise that was her only hope of life?

My heart recoiled from the idea; but another thought struck me. I had heard and read of the might of a mother's love. What she would not do for herself she might do for her child. I drew in Cherry, fastened the reins, and bade her keep perfectly still, much to the good horse's bewilderment, in the midst of the howling, drifting storm. Then with great difficulty I lifted both mother and infant from the cart and placed my burden in the snow by the roadside. (I remember thinking how wrongly any passerby, if such there had been, might have judged my action.) The movement roused her a little. She stirred as I put her down, and said, "What are you doing? Have we reached Burnley?" "No," I said, loudly and roughly in her ears, "but I am going to take your child from you," and with that I tore away the infant from her encircling arms and placed it under the shelter of my coat. It gave a shrill, wailing cry as I sprang into my seat again, which I knew could not fail to reach the mother's ears. I caught the reins and gave Cherry almost the only "cut" with the whip she had ever received at my hands, which made her spring forward with an indignant bound, and fling the snow aside as she plunged on with swift, impatient strides. She might well wonder what possessed her master. With the frightened child folded to my breast in my right arm, and my left hand grasping the reins, I leaned out and gazed back anxiously to see if my plan was successful. And though through the blinding storm I could at first discern nothing, the sound that broke on my ears told of life and hope. "My child! my child!" rang out in a cry of agony on the snowy air; and presently I saw that the mother had sprung to her feet, and was madly and desperately fighting her way over the difficult road. More swiftly than I could myself have made headway under such conditions on she came, and, as I paused to watch her, would in a few moments have been at Cherry's side, but I moved forward again, and, as she neared me, on farther still.

How I did it I can never tell. It seemed such cruel, agonizing work. But I did, and the brave, loving mother held on for nearly half a mile, and each time that she closely approached the cart I saw that the color was returning to her white face, that health and life were flowing in her veins, and at last that the fatal drowsiness was entirely thrown off. Then I stopped, and she sprang up to my side in a moment, and snatching the child from my arms lulled it to sleep on her bosom. Not till then was her frantic terror appeased, and she began to understand the motive for my strange conduct. A short time after we drove safely into Burnley, and when I put her into a comfortable seat in the train she thanked me, with tears in her eyes, for the strange service I had rendered, and as she looked lovingly down on her sleeping boy, she added:

"It seemed so cruel; but, oh, it was most kind. If you had not done it my child would have been motherless now."

And the next day, when Cherry and I jogged home again, under brighter skies, her words came back to me, "Seemed cruel!" It did indeed—nothing could have looked more heartless and barbarous; but it was the salvation of a precious life, perhaps of two. And was it possible that I should be more wise and tender to a perfect stranger than is my heavenly Father toward me? Have not some bitter trials of my past life borne sweet fruit? and can I not trust him if his dealings are sometimes strange? He will arouse his children from the sinful sleep into which Satan lulls them by means that are sometime startling and painful, but it is only that the glow of holy life may return, and peaceful blessing take the place of the terror of a rude awakening. Of course I told Madge the story, and the thoughts it had given rise to on my homeward journey.

"Yes, Ralph," she said, "and let the saving of this life be ever in our remembrance to brighten the next dark, strange trouble that comes to us. You were unwilling to do as you did, and shrank from inflicting pain and terror. Neither doth your Father God willingly inflict or grieve the children of men, and the 'chastening' that seems so 'grievous' is sure for our profit, that we might be 'partakers of his holiness.'"—The Quiver.

THE YEAR'S TWELVE CHILDREN.

January, worn and gray,
Like an old pilgrim by the way,
Watches the snow, and shivering sighs,
As the wild curlew round him flies;
Or, huddled underneath a thorn,
Sits praying for the lingering morn.

February, bluff and cold,
O'er furrows striding scorns the cold,
And with his horses two abreast
Makes the keen plough do his behest.

Rough March comes blustering down the road,
In his wrathy hand the oxen goad;
Or, with a rough and angry haste,
Scatters the seeds o'er the dark waste.

April, a child, half tears, half smiles,
Trips full of little playful wiles;
And laughing, 'neath her rainbow hood,
Seeks the wild violets in the wood.

May, the bright maiden, singing goes,
To where the snowy hawthorne blows,
Watching the lambs leap in the dells,
List'ning the simple village bells.

June, with mower's scarlet face,
Moves o'er the clover field apace,
And fast his crescent scythe sweeps on
O'er spots from whence the lark has flown.

July, the farmer, happy fellow,
Laughs to see the corn grow yellow;
The heavy grain he tosses up
From his right hand as from a cup.

August, the reaper, cleaves his way,
Through golden waves at break of day;
Or on his wagon, piled with corn,
At sunset, home is proudly borne.

September, with his haying hound,
Leaps fence and pale at every hound,
And casts into the wind in scorn
All cares and dangers from his horn.

October comes, a woodman old,
Fenced with tough leather from the cold;
Round swings his sturdy axe, and lo!
A fir branch falls at every blow.

November cowers before the flame,
Blear crone, forgetting her own name!
Watches the blue smoke curling rise,
And broods upon old memories.

December, fat and rosy, strides,
His old heart warm, well clothed his sides;
With kindly word for young and old,
The cheerier for the bracing cold,
Laughing a welcome, open flings
His doors, and as he goes he sings.

MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE.

One of the most curious properties of quick-silver is its capability of dissolving or of forming amalgams with other metals. A sheet of gold foil dropped into quick-silver disappears almost as quickly as a snowflake when it drops into water. It has the power of separating or of readily dissolving those refractory metals which are not acted upon by our most powerful acids. The gold and silver miners pour it into their machines holding the gold bearing quartz, and although no human eye can detect a trace of the precious substance, so fine are the particles, yet the liquid metal will hunt them out and incorporate it into its mass. By subsequent distillation it yields it into the hands of the miners, in a state of virgin purity. Several years ago, while lecturing before a class of ladies on chemistry, he had occasion to purify some quick-silver by forcing it through chamois leather. The scrap remained on the table after the lecture, and an old lady, thinking it would be very nice to wrap her gold spectacles in, accordingly appropriated it to that purpose. The next morning she came to us in great alarm, stating that the gold had mysteriously disappeared, and nothing was left in the parcel but the glasses. Sure enough, the metal remaining in the pores of the leather, had amalgated with the gold and entirely destroyed the spectacles. It was a mystery which we never could explain to her satisfaction.—Fireside Science.

BIBLE READINGS FOR THE YOUNG.

DAVID. Read Ezek. 34.

I will set up one Shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, even my servant David; he shall feed them, and he shall be their shepherd. Ezek. 24: 33.

1. When was David a shepherd? 1 Sam. 16: 11: 17: 34–37.
2. Who is the Shepherd here spoken of? John 10: 11, 14–16.
3. In what points was David a type of Christ? Psa. 78: 70; 89: 20, 35–37.
4. Why is Jesus called the son of David? Rom. 1: 3; Matt. 21: 9; Rev. 22: 16.
5. How does Jesus feed his sheep? Psa. 23: Isa. 40: 11.
6. Who are Christ's sheep? John 10: 27, 28; Matt. 12: 50.—Notes for Bible Study.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON IV.—January 25, 1885.—Paul Going to Jerusalem.—Acts 21: 1–14.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The will of the Lord be done—Acts 21:14.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Tyrian Prophets. vs. 1–6. "And finding certain disciples," etc. The original implies that he inquired them out. It seemed as if Paul on this his last missionary tour could not bear to leave any of his old converts unvisited. "That he should not go up to Jerusalem," etc. The sufferings which awaited him had been revealed to these disciples by the Spirit, but the prohibition was merely the counsel of their own fears, and as such Paul regarded it. While there is but one Spirit, there are "diversities of operation," and the truths which he reveals to men will always receive different colorings according to the differing constitutional temperaments of the minds through which they pass. "With their wives and children." These Christian families, kneeling on the shore beside the beloved leader who was now giving them his last farewell, show how Christianity had already begun its work of lighting family altars in pure and happy homes; elevating woman from a drudge or a plaything to that grand equality in Christ which knows neither male nor female; and making even the children, for whom heathenism, like its modern offshoot Masonry, had neither promise nor blessing, sharers with their parents in the glorious hopes of the Gospel.

2. Spiritual gifts without respect of persons. vs. 7–9. That Phillip's four daughters should all be endowed with the gift of prophecy is a delightful instance of God's covenant mercy to the families of believers. As a rule that counts few exceptions, the men and women who are the world's greatest benefactors have sprung from a godly ancestry. It is also especially interesting as a fulfillment of Joel's prophecy that the Spirit should be poured out impartially without distinction of sex or age. In the times of papal darkness which succeeded the apostolic era the status of woman was proportionately lowered. It is only a pure Gospel, free from superstition and error, that can render possible this Divine equality between the sexes. Masonry may flatter woman, but its real aim is to degrade her. It knows that from an enlightened Christian womanhood it has everything to fear and nothing to hope, and like Mohammedanism, Mormonism and kindred systems, its very life depends upon keeping her to as low a mental and moral a plane as possible.

3. The martyr spirit. vs. 10–14. Paul, to his man's courage united a woman's tenderness. The sobs and entreaties of the little flock to which he had ministered might break his heart but not his resolution to die even if need were "for the name of the Lord Jesus." It is possible that some among that company received the crown of martyrdom themselves in the great persecution which was soon to sweep over the church. We can show the martyr spirit by saying, "The will of the Lord be done" when it uproots our fondest hopes, for the essence of that spirit is abnegation of self.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

May really good men sometimes try to keep us from our mission? Matt. 16: 21–24. What should be our guide in determining questions of individual duty? Isa. 30: 21; 1Thess. 5: 19. How did the old prophets frequently announce the divine message? 1 Kings 11: 28–31; 19:19.

NOTES FROM PELOUBET.

"And finding disciples." Probably they were neither numerous nor well known. The Gospel had been carried as far as Phœnice after the death of Stephen (11:19) and Paul and Barnabas passed through that district (15: 3). Our blessed Lord had been on the verge of the territory of Tyre and Sidon (Matt. 15: 21; Mark 7: 24.—Cook.

"Who said to Paul through the Spirit, that he should not go up to Jerusalem." There is here an apparent discrepancy in the declarations of the Spirit. The disciples of Tyre through the Spirit assert that Paul should not go up to Jerusalem; whereas the apostle himself felt constrained in the spirit—impelled by a strong sense of duty—to go up (Acts 20:23). We must here distinguish between the intimations of the Spirit and the inferences drawn by men from these intimations. The Spirit revealed to the Tyrian disciples the dangers that awaited the Apostle at Jerusalem; and they, from love of the apostle, besought him not to go up. But Paul entertained a juster view of the matter; he recognized more correctly the voice of the Spirit; he was certain that, in spite of these bonds and sufferings which the Holy Ghost witnessed in every city, it was his duty to proceed.—Gloag.

"And saluted the brethren." Note how Christian conversation (1) strengthens the faith of the pious; (2) increases their love; (3) confirms their hope, and (4) raises up a heart bowed down with adversity. Here, also, as through all the line of cities along the coast, we find a church already organized, founded, probably, by Philip the evangelist. The mention of Christian communities at Troas, Tyre, Ptolemais, and other cities, indicates how widely the doctrines of Christianity had been spread. We are apt to get the idea that the extension of the Gospel is measured by Paul's missionary labors. This is a false one, as such notices as this of the "brethren" at Ptolemais prove.—Rev. Com.

"We entered into the house of Philip, the evangelist." Called, in order to distinguish him from the apostle Philip, one of the seven deacons appointed twenty-three years before at Jerusalem (Acts 6: 5). Philip, like Stephen, became a great preacher. He labored in Samaria (8: 5). He was the means of the conversion of the Ethiopian treasurer on the way to Gaza (8: 26) and preached in many cities (8: 40). This was about A. D. 35, 36, nearly a quarter of a century before the visit of Paul.—Rev. Com.

"Which did prophesy." The English word "prophesy" has come to have, since about the beginning of the 17th century, only the one sense of "to predict what is yet to come." In the time of Queen Elizabeth "prophesyings" meant "preachings," and Jeremy Taylor's famous work on the "Liberty of Propheying" was written to uphold the freedom of preaching. These women were in their degree evangelists also.—Cambrtdge Bible. Did they prophesy in the assemblies of the church? It is true that St. Paul had forbidden this at Corinth (1 Cor. 14:34), and forbade it afterwards at Ephesus (1 Tim. 2: 12); but the very prohibition proves that the practice was common (see also 1 Cor. 11: 5), and it does not follow that St. Paul's rules of discipline yet obtained in all the churches (Plumptre), nor that they applied to all churches or assemblies under other circumstances than those in which he spoke. The records of the New Testament simply show the fact that God inspires women as well as men, and when he sends them forth they have a mission to proclaim the Gospel in their own womanly way. See Acts 2: 17; Joel 2: 28, 29.—Peloubet.

"Bound his own (Agabus') hands and feet." His revelation was made in that dramatic form which impresses the mind with a stronger sense of reality than mere words can do, and which was made familiar to the Jews by the practice of the Hebrew prophets.—C. and H.

SYMBOLIC TEACHING. Similar actions are common with the Old Testament prophets. Thus Isaiah (20: 3) walks naked and barefoot. Jeremiah (13; 5) hides his girdle by the river Euphrates, and (19: 10, 11) breaks the potter's vessel in the Valley of Hinnom. Ezekiel (4: 1–3) draws on a tile a picture of the siege of Jerusalem, and (5: 1–4) cuts off his hair and burns and destroys it, as God commanded. So, too, Zedekiah, the son of Chenaanah, made horns of iron (1 Kings 22: 11). With this act of Agabus may be compared our Lord's words to Peter (John 21: 18).—Cambridge Bible.

"Thus saith the Holy Ghost." Observe that the prophetic language of the Old Testament is, "Thus saith the Lord;" in the New Testament, "Thus saith the Holy Ghost." For the Holy Ghost is the later and fuller revelation of the Lord.—Peloubet.

It was no wilfulness on Paul's part that led him to persist in going on. Only some great and worthy object to be gained could impel him to press so steadily forward into so great dangers, and in spite of such earest remonstrances. His reasons, doubtless, were (1) to unite the two great wings of the church, the Gentile and the Jewish, in a closer bond of union. It was the completion of his great mission as the apostle of the Gentiles. In the words of Dr. Schaff, "At the great Pentecostal feast he would meet with many thousand Jews from all parts of the world, all more or less prejudiced against the famous apostle of the Gentiles, who was said to be everywhere teaching the children of the chosen people to forsake the 'Law.' He would meet these face to face, and, supported by the countenance of James and the elders of the revered Jerusalem church, disprove these painful, fatal rumors. He would show the multitudes gathered together at Pentecost how nobly his churches, his converts, had come forward with money and help for the distressed Palestine Jews, and thus he hoped forever to set himself right with his own countrymen. He was an old man, wearied with ceaseless toils and worn with sickness and anxiety. The chance of meeting so great a concourse of Jews in the Holy City might never occur again; and so for his work's sake, for the sake of the many flourishing churches he had founded, he would do his best to disprove the false rumors so widely disseminated concerning his teaching."

LITERATURE.

GREAT THOUGHTS FROM LATIN AUTHORS, by Crawfurd Tait Ramage. pp. 679. Price 50 cts.

This handsomely bound collection, by the compiler of the selections from Greek authors, is more comprehensive than that work in the passages from other writers, ancient and modern, accompanying the main text. The selections from the Old and New Testaments are quite frequent, and most valuable as illustrations. The selections are from thirty-six authors, comprising the whole range of Latin literature, and are the choicest thoughts that literature can produce. To the English reader, unskilled in the dead languages, this collection introduces the Roman philosophy and religion, and to the Latin scholar the volume is a valuable review. The volume is very tastefully bound, and the price about one-half that of ordinary books.

The Missionary Review of Princeton, N. J., is declared by scores of its subscribers to be the best, ablest and cheapest missionary magazine in existence. Ignoring all previous failures to make such a periodical self-supporting, it began in 1878, and now, after seven years. besides meeting all its expenses from its origin, it reports $1,000 of its avails sent in small sums to different foreign missions. We are glad to call attention to this Review and commend it to our readers. Its editor, Rev. R. G. Wilder, a missionary of 30 years experience, deserves success and has won it. His Sketches of Mission Fields—their climate, products, people and missions, from their origin to the present time—are accurate and exhaustive; the Letters from workers abroad are fresh and full of interest; his annual Reviews of all Foreign Missions, are just, impartial and stimulating; his notices of Independent Missions are considerate and generous, nor less so his annual reviews of Women's Boards and Work. One of the many facts demonstrated is that the net gain in communicants the past year is nine times greater in foreign missions than in Christendom.

With snow falling steadily, and winter still triumphant, there is a certain mockery in the sudden appearance of one and another seed catalogue. "Vick's Floral Guide" leads the van, and as usual, needs no commendation, its solid merit having long ago given it a firm place in popular affection. The number contains the usual lists of new seedlings in both vegetables and flowers, and with its bright flower frontispiece, is quite worthy a prominent place on the sitting-room table, while the Illustrated Magazine has long been a faithful guide in all matters relating to the garden. James Vick, Rochester, N. Y., will send the Floral Guide to any address for 10 cents, which, if seeds are afterwards purchased, may be deducted from the order.

The first number of Volume III, of Literary Life, for February, issued January 15th, will contain in its new departure "The Reading Room," among a "host of good things," a full page portrait of Hiram Powers, the famous American sculptor, with a full page autograph poem inscribed to him by John Quincy Adams, when President of the United States; also "a Texas Excursion; or The Great Southwest," by F. A. Conant and W. S. Abbot, containing twelve beautiful illustrations; "George and the Stranger," by Jane Grey Swisshelm; "The Analyst's Mistake," a poem by Carlotta Perry; "The Human Face," a poem by Ella Wheeler; "Wit and Humor," by Robt. J. Burdette. The subscription price of Literary Life has lately been reduced to $1.00 per year. Elder Publishing Co., Chicago.

THE CHURCHES.

—Rev. Joseph Travis, editor of the Free Methodist, has lately begun a prosperous mission on Green street, Chicago, within a block or two of the Cynosure office. The use of the building is freely given by A. M. Billings, president of the Home National Bank.

—Interesting mission news is reported from Palestine. The Mission Society of the Established church has there 6 stations, 9 ordained missionaries and 1 layman, 4 native preachers. 37 native teachers, and 1,400 converts.

—Mr. Moody has meetings at Richmond, Va., Jan. 4–14; Washington, D. C., 16–19; Harrisburg, Pa., Jan. 20. Let every reader pray for God's richest blessings upon these gatherings.

—The meetings in Richmond are having a powerful effect, drawing out the largest audiences ever known in the city. The discussion of the letter, charging Mr. Moody with speaking bitterly of the personal character of Lee and Stonewall Jackson in 1876, was hot in the papers the week before the meetings opened, but stopped immediately on Mr. Moody's denial.

—The first session of the union prayer meeting of the Ladies' Missionary Societies of the Baptist, Congregational, Methodist, and Presbyterian denominations of Chicago was held last Wednesday. The different Boards were very largely represented, and the proceedings were interesting and helpful.

—Pastor Seguin of the French Evangelical Mission has arranged for a series of meetings continuing three weeks, led by the celebrated ex-priest Father Charles Chiniquy. The first meeting will be held Sabbath evening, Jan. 18th, in Dr. Hatfield's church, the First Methodist. The meetings will then continue for two weeks in Maskell Hall, corner of Jackson and Desplaines streets. The third week some other locality will probably be selected where a large population of Roman Catholics can be reached.

—Rev. Dr. Noah Hunt Schenck, pastor of St. Ann's Episcopal church, in Brooklyn, died at his home in that city Jan. 4th, from blood poisoning. At the funeral services Wednesday, the church was decorated with evergreens, and funereal draperies were nowhere visible. Mr. Schenck had always taught that death was not an event to be mourned for, but something to be rejoiced at, the soul having departed to a happier world.

—Mr. Henry Varley, the English evangelist, has been holding meetings in the St. Louis Y. M. C. A. for young men only, which has been attended by thousands. His confidential talks on the sin of licentiousness made a profound impression. An interesting feature at the last monthly meeting of this Association, was the reception, as associate members, of 21 deaf mutes, all young men.

—The first part of "Pilgrim's Progress" has been translated by the Rev. J. L. Potter, at Teheran, Persia, into the Persian language. A lady in Chicago has sent him $650 to print it.

—From several States in this Protestant country the Bible is excluded from the public schools. In the public schools of Greece the four Gospels of the New Testament are used as a reader by the children of the most advanced classes, and the new Minister of Education proposes to extend their use in the higher schools.

—Advance sheets of the Congregational Year-Book for 1885 shows: Whole number of churches, 4,092; churches not supplied, 1,012; new churches, 177; ministers, whole number, 3,889; church members, whole number 401,549; church members, net increase, 5,340; church members added on profession, 17,923; Sabbath school members, 478,357; Sabbath school members increase, 11,220; benevolent contributions, as reported, $1,523,924.22; home expenditures as reported by 3,000 churches, $3,884,-105.91.

—The Atlanta, Ga., Constitution says: "Mexico offers an inviting field for Protestant missionary work. Catholicism at present reigns supreme. In the entire republic a Protestant church is scarcely to be seen, while those of the Catholics crown nearly every hill-top. Some of them are magnificent. In Durango, a city of about 30,000 population, there is an immense cathedral, costing over $2,000,000. The power of the priest is almost incalculable. When the bishop rides through the streets the people fall on their knees and remain in this attitude of devotion until he passes out of sight. Many people doff their hats at the ringing of the Catholic bells, cross themselves, and say their orisons."

—The London Christian says: "The bitter hostility of the Moslem to the Christian faith is becoming more and more developed, insomuch that fresh laws are being enacted by the Ottoman Government for the obstruction of mission work on Mohammedan territory. In Palestine strenuous efforts are being made to remove Moslem children from the mission-schools, and a rule has been made that no Moslem shall be considered master of himself until he is twenty years of age, and is certified to be of sound mind and able to judge for himself. The purpose of such an enactment may be inferred from a statement made by a government official to a special correspondent of the Record at Jerusalem. 'Every religion,' he said, 'must take care of its own interests, and no efforts will be wanting to obstruct the designs of the missionaries.'"

—Chinese Missions in California have grown steadily. The report of the committee upon them, of the American Missionary Association, says:

"We are furnished this year with a review of the Chinese Missions on the Pacific Coast from the beginning in 1870. The fourteen years' work is put before us rather than the special work of the last twelve months. We are, therefore, the better able to judge of actual results. The genuine growth is to be measured by long intervals.

"The year 1870 opens with 4 teachers and 329 scholars. This year closes with 27 teachers and 1,-864 scholars, a gain of nearly seven-fold. In 1876 there were 36 Chinese members in the Bethany church, San Francisco. In 1884 the number had advanced to 91.

"To the three Chinamen received in 1870 into the First church at Oakland—these being the first admitted to membership in any English-speaking church—thirty-three have been added from the mission-school of this church. A like number from this same school has been distributed among the membership of the other churches. For the year just passed, 191 are enrolled as having forsaken idol worship, and 113 as giving evidence of conversion. But more significant than the quantity of these Chinese converts, is the quality or their Christian life. Ten years of testing, in the midst of peculiar temptations, have shown as much steadfastness as could be found among the same number taken from any church membership."
